MAYOR SHEA ASKS ENDORSEMENT

Willing to Stand on His Record and Defends Appropriations

Abot 200 Ward Four voters gathered at Farnum's hall, Tuesday evening at the opening rally of the Mayoralty campaign. Ex-Councilman Charles J. McGilvray called the meeting to order and introduced as the first speaker, John D. Smith who is running for the Council. The interesting portion of his address came with his defence of his own record and the three charges hurled at him by his opponents.

Harry Boyd was introduced and after stating the fact that he was so far an angel politicians, and had no record to lean against he would assure the voters of Ward Four that were he sent down to City Hall next year and given but one chance he would return the following year and flaunt in their faces a record to be proud of.

Chairman McGilvray next brought to the front ex-Representative Coombs. "I am here in the interest of William T. Shea, candidate for Mayor," said Mr. Coombs, "he has a clean record and throughout the State his name is spoken and he is known as a man who will give a square deal. At the State House your Mayor gets recognition afforded few mayors, and is alike honored and respected by all.

Dr. John H. Ash told the voters to go to the polls next Tuesday and do their duty so that on coming from the booths they could say, "Mayor Shea I voted for you." He also strongly advocated the election to the School board of Dr. George M. Sheahan, the adopted son of Ward Four.

At this point Mayor Shea and James F. Burke entered the hall and made their way to the front. James F. Burke warned the voters to stand as a unit in Ward Four for William T. Shea. Beware, he said, of overconfidence for the battle is never won until it is over.

When Mayor Shea was introduced it was the signal for a great demonstration which lasted until the Mayor had to raise his hand for order. Two years ago, said the Mayor, I came before you and told the voters of Ward Four that I would give them the best that was in me. Last year I again came before you and in commendation of my efforts you sent me back with flying colors and a larger majority than before. Now, gentlemen if you think that my administration has been fair I ask you to endorse it and return me once more to the mayoralty chair.

The money on the various departments has been wisely spent and a fair return made to the tax payers. It is said that I stood for large expenditures and should have checked the Council where I encouraged. I answer this, I have and shall advocate the expenditures to rebuild our streets and sidewalks. Our women and children are entitled to a sidewalk, clean and dry to walk on. We aim to give all residents an adequate sewer and water service. Last year I advocated $10,000 for the paving of Hancock street. This year I shall do the same.

In closing the Mayor told the voters that he would rather go to defeat with a united endorsement of Ward Four behind him, than to win with a poor endorsement from his home ward. But whatever the result of the election, they will not be able to say at its close that the candidate from Ward Four threw any mud or ran a dirty campaign.

The meeting closed with remarks from Archie Thayer.

COTTAGE AND STABLE BURNED

Property of Mr. Chapman at Houghs Neck

The cottage and stable of John Chapman situated on Sea street, near the Willows, Houghs Neck, were completely destroyed by fire Tuesday evening. The fire was discovered by Motorman Abbott of a street railway car who sent a passenger back to give an alarm which was sounded from Box 14 at 7.35. The fire at this time had made great headway and was practically beyond control when the fire department arrived on the scene. The fire made a bright illumination and was seen for miles and it was thought a conflagration was in progress.

The fire evidently started in the kitchen from a defective chimney. It appears that Mr. Chapman built a fire in the kitchen stove and then went into the stable adjoining the cottage. It was while he was absent that the fire started. The cottage was soon in flames which communicated to the stable, both buildings being completely destroyed.

The loss on the two buildings and contents is estimated at $2,300, upon which there is said to be an insurance of $1,000. Of this amount $700 was on the cottage and contents, and $300 on the stable.

—Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D., and Charles M. Alexander, the evangelists, are due in Boston this month and will hold meetings Dec. 13 and 14 at Mechanics building. A feature of the first day's meeting will be a banquet.

CANDIDATE NICHOLS ATTACKS ADMINISTRATION

Criticises Reckless Appropriations and the Award of Contracts

An enthusiastic rally in the interest of Walter F. Nichols, the Republican candidate for Mayor, was held in Dobles hall, South Quincy, Tuesday evening. The rally was largely attended and remarks were made by many of the gentlemen present.

Ex-Councilman Walter E. Piper presided, and in opening the meeting said it was to create enthusiasm. Although the opposing candidate was thoroughly entrenched, Mr. Nichols with the support of the Republicans could win.

The first speaker was candidate Nichols. In opening he said that he had the pleasure of serving in the City Council with many from this ward and he had always found them to be loyal to the city and he congratulated the ward on being so ably represented.

The main issue in the present campaign was one of Finance. No city not on a right financial basis could hope to be a success. It was a well known fact that we are burdened with a heavy water and sewer debt, mainly contracted years ago. It has been constantly added to until now it is in the vicinity of $1,400,000, on which the city pays a large interest. The municipal debt has increased $158,000 in the last ten months. He believed it a reckless method of conducting business. The general policy should be for retrenchment. The Mayor has failed to veto any important measure, although there have been some that a wise business policy should have vetoed.

There were imperative reasons why the Water department should be reorganized and put on a strict business basis. He believed Quincy was in contempt, as it had not complied with the law which says that all new services shall be metered and five per cent of old services every year. If put on a business basis he believed it possible to materially reduce the water rates.

Under the city charter all contracts exceeding $500 must be advertised for bids. From information he had received this had not been the practice with the present administration. The paving of Hancock street was advertised and the contract let to one Hugh Gilmartin for $44.40 per 1000. He had heard rumors which should be investigated. Later an order for $8,000 for paving Brook road was passed. Looking this up he had found that bids for this contract had not been advertised as provided by the ordinances. The same Hugh Gilmartin was given the contract. The excuse given for not advertising was that it was a hurry job. The work on both these jobs was done by Coughlin & Shields.

He would like to ask why Hugh Gilmartin was given the contract over other bidders who stood ready to furnish paving at a less price. He believed that the Mayor should live up to the ordinances. All should be treated alike. He had been told that a large number had been added to the pay rolls and that many of the jobs were over crowded. He had been told that for some reason the Lincoln addition contract had been given to a preferred

CIDER MILL BURNED

Release of 500,000 Gallons of Apple Juice Causes a Great Flood

Ayer, Mass., Dec. 1.—Half a million gallons of cider and vinegar, released by a fire in the Haynes-Piper cider mill, inundated the railroad tracks here and tied up traffic for an hour. A gang of workmen was hastily summoned to dig gullies, so that the apple juice flowed away without causing any washouts, but for a long time the tracks were under cider.

Several firemen had to run to escape drowning from the floods of cider that were hurled out. Gas generated by the flames added to the troubles of the firemen.

The fire will throw between 100 and 150 men out of work. The money loss is estimated at about $40,000. Sparks from a passing locomotive are believed to have been responsible for the blaze.

Besides the four-story building and machinery, 500,000 gallons of cider and vinegar and 50,000 barrels of apples were destroyed.

38 PERCENT PROFIT

Secretary Wilson Says It Is Gathered In by Retail Dealers In Beef

Washington, Dec. 1.—Secretary Wilson of the agricultural department, in his annual report, pictures the results of the farmers for the year ending June 30 last. "Most prosperous of all years is the place to which 1909 is entitled in agriculture" is the way the secretary puts it.

The value of farm products was $8,760,000,000, a gain of $869,000,000 over the preceding year.

Of great popular interest are the results of a unique investigation conducted by the department, which shows that in fifty cities the total retail cost charged to consumers for beef above the wholesale cost paid by the retailers averaged 38 percent. The lower the grade of beef the greater was the percentage of gross profit to the retailer.

WILL VISIT HOME OF MISS LE BLANC

Girl's Attorney Expects to Get Important Information

Waltham, Mass., Dec. 1.—As a result of information given by Hattie Le Blanc to her attorney, Nathan A. Tufts of this city, Tufts will go to Cape Breton at once and make important personal inquiries in the little French-Canadian town of Arichat, where she came from.

Rev. Fr. Pierre H. Grenier, pastor of St. Joseph's French Catholic church, where Miss Le Blanc attended, started for Montreal yesterday because of the death of his brother in that city. It is understood that on his way back he, too, will stop off at Arichat and have a talk with Hattie Le Blanc's relatives and friends there.

The contents of certain letters sent by Waltham parties to individuals in Arichat relative to the coming of Hattie Le Blanc and her sisters to this city are said to have an important bearing on the case.

AS SALMON AND CHEESE

Guise Under Which New Yorker Is Said to Have Shipped Sausages

Boston, Dec. 1.—Luigi Ballorini, formerly in the sausage business in New York city, was arrested here by United States Deputy Marshal Waters, on complaint of Robert M. Mullings, United States inspector of meat. Ballorini is charged with violating the meat inspection laws.

Between Sept. 19, 1908, when he is said to have started, until he disappeared in March, 1909, Ballorini is alleged to have done a big business in the manufacture of Italian sausages. It is alleged that he shipped his sausages labelled as salmon and cheese.

BATHING PAVILION GONE

Mecca For Summer Visitors to Newport Is Destroyed by Fire

Newport, R. I., Dec. 1.—The bathing pavilion at Easton's Beach, one of the landmarks of the city for summer excursionists, was destroyed by fire. The cause of the blaze is not known.

It was over this pavilion that the wealthy summer residents raised so much trouble last summer and tried to have it abolished. It has long been a Mecca for the excursionists whose presence to the summer residents was undesirable. The loss is estimated at $40,000.

FOR KILLING A DEACON

Trial of Providence Man on Charge of Manslaughter Is Begun

Providence, Dec. 1.—After two days' work twelve men have been selected to act as a jury in the trial of Robert Russell, a negro, charged with the manslaughter of Deacon Nelson Morgan of the Olney Street Baptist church.

The deacon was killed by a bullet while on the steps of the church trying to gain entrance.

End of Moose Hunting Season

THE GREATEST IN A CENTURY

England Is About to Face a Great Political Crisis

BUDGET REJECTED BY LORDS

Violation of a Long-Standing Unwritten Law That Upper Branch Shall Not Interfere With Finance Bills Originating In House of Commons—Liberals May Wipe Out House of Lords When Country Decides Issue

London, Dec. 1.—In the sedate, detached manner characteristic of the proceedings in the gilded chamber, and in direct disregard of the advice of some of its ablest and oldest members, such as Rosebery, Morley, Lord James of Hereford, Lord Cromer, Lord Balfour of Burleigh, the Earl of Lytton, Lord Courtney and the Archbishops of Canterbury and York, the house of lords created a situation unprecedented in English history, at least in 300 years, by refusing formal assent to the budget bill and referring it to the country itself for judgment, thereby, in theory, making it illegal to collect taxes and carry on the king's government.

The vote was 350 against to 75 in favor of the amendment.

After six days' debate, notable for the high standard of the oratory, as well as for the able and convincing arguments arrayed on both sides for and against the budget, and placing in every possible light all the aspects of the great constitutional questions involved, the house of lords cleared for division at 11:30 o'clock last night.

The scene was impressive, but in no sense exciting, except that the house was packed to its utmost capacity and a great array of strange faces was seen on the benches owing to the presence of numbers of peers who only appear in the house in most exceptional cases.

None would have supposed that the event proceeding was destined not only to prove memorable in the annals of British history, but possibly also involving far-reaching changes in the British constitution.

The public galleries were crowded with peeresses, members of the house of commons, ambassadors and others, but in the house itself complete calm prevailed.

The vote was on Lord Lansdowne's amendment that the house was not justified in giving its consent to the bill until it had been submitted to the judgment of the country.

When the vote was announced, just before midnight, a few mixed cheers were heard. The Earl of Crewe immediately moved an adjournment and the house rose.

David Lloyd-George, chancellor of the exchequer, author of the budget, and the man of the hour in England, has precipitated the greatest political crisis England has seen in a century. He is bitterly denounced as a Socialist on the one side, and praised as a great statesman on the other.

The house of lords in rejecting the budget has violated the long-standing unwritten law of England that the upper branch shall not interfere with finance bills originating in the house of commons.

The Liberal party in appealing to the country will make the house of lords the main issue, and if successful it means the political end of that body.

It is undisputed that if the Liberal party is successful home rule for Ireland is virtually assured.

England faces the greatest political crisis in a century and no election during that time is fraught with such momentous consequences as the one to come as a result of the action of the house of lords.

The opponents of the budget will endeavor to win on the basis of a tariff reform issue, the entering wedge for a stiff protective tariff to replace the present free trade policy.

CURTIS IS PROMOTED

Assistant Treasurer to Be Collector of Customs at Boston

Washington, Dec. 1.—Formal announcement of the selection of Edwin U. Curtis, now assistant United States treasurer, to be collector of customs at Boston, and of Colonel George H. Doty to succeed Curtis as assistant treasurer, was made by Secretary MacVeagh.

The collectorship pays $8000 a year. The salary of the assistant treasurer is $5000 a year.

Stay For Labor Leaders

Washington, Dec. 1.—The court of appeals of the District of Columbia granted the petition of Messrs. Gompers, Mitchell and Morrison in the contempt case against them, for a stay of execution of the mandate of the court sending them to jail. The mandate is stayed indefinitely, pending appeal to the supreme court of the United States.

TO KILL OR KIDNAP

John D. Rockefeller Receives Warning of a Plot Against Him

Cleveland, Dec. 1.—Warned of a plot to kidnap or kill him, John D. Rockefeller hurried from his Forest Hill estate, and today he expects to be safe behind the cordon of guards at Pocantico Hills. He departed from Cleveland late yesterday afternoon.

Revelations of the kidnapping or assassination plot was made to him after Canton and Cleveland police had heard the story from Harold S. Smith, a sawmill owner of Minerva, O. Smith's responsibility is vouched for by Chief of Police Smith of Canton.

Smith was taken to Forest Hill by James Stamberger, chief of the East Cleveland police force, and told his story directly to Rockefeller.

Its result was the hasty decision to depart from Forest Hill. Rockefeller's engagement to speak at the banquet of the Men's club of the Euclid Avenue Baptist church was cancelled, and the armed guards were doubled at Forest Hill.

WILSON SITS UP

Doctors Hope That Middy Will Eventually Recover From Paralysis

Annapolis, Md., Dec. 1.—Midshipman Earl D. Wilson, quarterback of the naval academy football team, who was injured more than eight weeks ago in the game with Villa Nova and who has ever since been paralyzed from the head down, has so far improved that yesterday he was able to sit up in bed for a short time.

The surgeons are encouraged to hope that the spinal cord, which has been compressed by a fracture of the vertebra, will finally return to its normal condition, the pressure upon it having been removed, and that complete recovery from the paralysis will follow.

LUDLOW'S EVICTED PEOPLE SUFFER

Springfield Citizens Contribute Generously For Their Relief

Ludlow, Mass., Dec. 1.—Two of the women who were evicted from their homes by the Ludlow Manufacturing Associates company are in a serious condition owing to sleeping out of doors.

The relief committee of the evicted tenants, who now number over 100, got busy, following a meeting of the strikers. Forty Polish women and girls were sent to Springfield with large boxes, such as are used by the Salvation Army in Boston during Thanksgiving and Christmas times, to take up collections for the relief of the sufferers at Ludlow.

The collectors reaped a large harvest and many of the baskets and boxes, which were used to hold the donations of money, were completely filled soon after the women started in collecting.

MAKES SURGERY PAINLESS

New Drug Used Without Causing Patient to Lose Consciousness

New York, Dec. 1.—Painless surgery, anesthesia without after effects, is the discovery which Dr. Jonnesco, dean of the medical board of the University of Bucharest, who arrived here on the Kronprinzessin Cecilie, has come to America to demonstrate.

Stovaine is a drug already known to the medical world, but by combining it with strychnine and distilled water and injecting it into the spinal cord the doctor has been able to produce complete insensensibility to pain without loss of consciousness.

NO SALOONS JUST YET

Alabama Will Take No Backward Step In Public Morals

Birmingham, Ala., Dec. 1.—United States Senator Johnston issued the following statement on the effect of the defeat of the prohibition amendment in Alabama:

"The election determined that the men of Alabama did not wish to write into their constitution police measures, nor surrender rights they have expressly reserved.

"It does not mean the return of the saloons nor any backward step in public morals."

Murray's Order to Bankers

Washington, Dec. 1.—All of the 2500 national banks in the United States must have monthly meetings of their boards of directors, must appoint examining and discount committees and all the loans and discounts of each bank must be approved by the directorate board at the monthly meeting, such approval to be recorded in permanent form. This is the pronunciamento of Comptroller of the Currency Murray.

BRIEFS

December.

Board of Trade tonight.

Basket ball tonight at the Y. M. C. A.

The Elliot club of Wollaston meets tonight with Mrs. Lewis.

Pickwick club goes to Boston tonight for its annual theatre party.

"A Song of Thanksgiving" will be repeated tonight at Braintree.

Sports this afternoon on the grounds of the Massachusetts Fields school.

Lester H. Clee, boy's work director at the Y. M. C. A., has returned from Worcester where he spent Thanksgiving at home.

The Boston law business of George H. Brown has grown to such an extent that he has opened an office in Tremont building. He will also continue his Quincy office.

The extremes of noon temperature in November were 68 on Nov. 12 and 35 on Nov. 24. The maximum was the highest since November 1903, and the minimum the lowest since November 1906.

College men are quite envious of the Bates college men who are now enjoying a long vacation until after Christmas because they commenced the college season a month earlier in the fall than the other colleges.

Next in the series of entertainments by the Cochato club of Braintree will be a talk about a trip through Greece, by Harvey N. Shepard. The lecture will be illustrated by stereopticon. George O. Wales has the arrangements in charge.

The farce "No cure; no pay" will be presented at the Quincy Point church tomorrow evening by local talent. The entertainment will also include vocal and instrumental music. At 6.30 an old-fashioned boiled dinner will be served.

GRANITE MANUFACTURER DEAD,

John Ross, the well known Quincy manufacturer and clansman, died at his home Monday morning at 3 o'clock. Mr. Ross was a native of Scotland. He came to this country 27 years ago. He was connected with the firm of Malcolm & Ross and later entered business for himself. He had been a great sufferer for over five years. He leaves a wife three sons and a daughter, William Ross of Braintree, John Ross of New York, Charles Ross of South Quincy, and Elizabeth Ross a teacher in the Adams school.

MYER'S STEP COURAGEOUS

Congressmen Giving Approval to His Naval Reform

NOT CALLED A REVOLUTION

Should Be Classed Rather as Development—Aims to Treat Navy Yards as Repair Rather Than Manufacturing Plants—Sure to Improve Conditions, Says Roberts, Who Believes Bureau System Should Suffer Modification

Washington, Dec. 1.—Secretary Meyer's plan of naval reorganization, while it will be held by some authorities to be extremely radical, is receiving commendation already by members of congress as a definite and courageous step to improve conditions in the navy.

It is very radical compared with the chaotic conditions of half a dozen years ago, before any steps toward more businesslike administration had been taken on a large scale; but with the reforms recently instituted, culminating in the bold stroke of Trueman H. Newberry in the last days of the Roosevelt administration, it is to be considered rather as a development than a revolution.

Representative Roberts of Massachusetts has been for ten years a member of the committee on naval affairs and is well acquainted with the naval situation. He has studied the Meyer plan carefully and has talked with the secretary at times regarding the general situation.

"Whether the Meyer plan succeeds or fails," said Roberts, "Secretary Meyer should be given great credit for making an effort to improve conditions. A secretary of the navy can do what the committee on naval affairs cannot do, and Mr. Meyer, in studying the present system until he understands it thoroughly, and in framing a scheme of his own to make the service more efficient, has done good work whether it remains or not.

"Secretary Newberry aimed to place the yards on a basis of absolute business efficiency by simplifying administration and centralizing effort. He consolidated the shops in the yards and placed a naval constructor in charge of industrial work. The plan brought good results in some directions and created great friction in others in placing staff officers over line officers and sometimes superiors.

"Mr. Meyer aims to treat the navy yards as repair rather than manufacturing plants. He thus recognizes the principle that there is no real analogy between a plant which turns out identical products repeatedly and an emergency plant which must be equipped to care for a great variety of work, as varied as accidents themselves.

"The great utility of a navy yard is that it shall be available in times of war, when repairs can be made expeditiously. I do not quite agree with the idea of Mr. Meyer that ships should be built chiefly outside with only enough work in the yards to provide competition and protect the government against overcharges. Ships should be built neither all outside nor all inside navy yards.

"A certain amount of construction should be going on all the time. By this plan the skilled men are kept together, and are available for every emergency, where, with spasmodic work, they are laid off, and often it is very hard to get highly skilled men when they are most needed. It is true that government-built ships cost a little more than private built, but not much.

"Mr. Meyer's plan of a division of the single manufacturing department into two parts, those having to do with hull and machinery, is that followed in all successful private plants which are operated for profit. Newberry recognized as well as Meyer that naval work can never be reduced to the economical basis of a private manufacturing plant, for military reasons.

"The naval committee always has wanted to modify the bureau system and Meyer has done the practical thing in suggesting that the bureau of equipment be abolished. This at least is a definite step. All secretaries of the navy have powers, and I think the committee has been waiting for someone that will use them. I am inclined also to think well of the establishment of a staff of aides for the reasons stated by Meyer."

ALASKA'S DISTINCTION

Has the Only Real Winter Weather In the United States

Chicago, Dec. 1.—All records for high temperature in November since the local weather bureau was established in 1872 were broken last month, according to Professor Cox, in charge of the local bureau.

Professor Cox declared that there is no real winter weather in the United States with the exception of Alaska.

Telephone Rates Are Cut

New York, Dec. 1.—Telephone tolls between Manhattan and suburban points in Long Island, New Jersey and other adjacent territory, were cut 5 cents a call, the cut to go into effect today.

STRIKE OF SWITCHMEN

Every Road From the Lakes to the Pacific Is Affected

St. Paul, Dec. 1.—After fifteen days of negotiating between the Switchmen's Union of North America and the Railway Managers' commission, representing thirteen roads of the northwest, a strike involving 2300 switchmen became effective last night.

The men demand 6 cents more an hour and double pay for Sunday, and overtime in excess of ten hours. The men were employed by the various railroads running west and north of St. Paul and Lake Superior to the Pacific coast.

As the roads entering St. Paul, Duluth and Superior are largely grain carriers from the west, the prospect of interruption to this traffic has caused some to fear delayed deliveries of grain and an increase in the price of flour.

FOURTH ARREST IS MADE

Alleged Accessory In Burning of Furriers' Premises at Boston

Boston, Dec. 1.—Michael Rudnick, son of Morris Rudnick of the firm of Samuel I. Gordon & Co., furriers, at 121 Summer street, was arrested yesterday as an accessory before the fact in connection with the fire which wrecked the store on June 20 last.

This is the fourth arrest in the case, Morris Rudnick, Samuel I. Gordon and Bernard Davies, all members of the firm, having been previously arrested. The three men are charged with arson. There was $35,000 insurance on the stock.

It is alleged against the accused that they removed from the store furs valued at $35,000 and then fired the store by means of a slow burning candle in a pile of inflammable material.

Police inspectors yesterday found furs worth $1000 at the fur store of Morris Gordon. Many of the furs correspond with the items on the inventory.

CHINAMEN SPARED DEATH SENTENCE

Commuted to Life Imprisonment by Governor Draper

Boston, Dec. 1.—Governor Draper has agreed to the action of the executive council in voting to commute to life imprisonment the death sentences of Warry Charles and Joe Guey, who were sentenced to death because of the Chinatown riot. The reason given for this action is "the conflicting testimony of the Chinese witnesses."

The pardon committee met and later reported to the full council. The action of the full council was unanimous, Councillor Barry not being present. Councillors Goetting of Springfield and Cole of Beverly were absent, but favored commutation.

In the past fifteen years the only commutations of death sentences have been those of Edwin R. Snow in January, 1901, by Governor Crane and of Angus Snell in November, 1905, by Governor Douglas.

BISHOP HENDRICK DEAD

American Prelate Becomes a Victim of Cholera at Cebu

Manila, Dec. 1.—Bishop Hendrick of the diocese of Cebu died Monday of cholera. He had been gravely ill for several months. There have been a number of cases of cholera at Cebu recently.

Thomas A. Hendrick was the first American Roman Catholic bishop of the diocese of Cebu. He was consecrated in Rome, Aug. 23, 1903, and took possession of the bishopric on March 6, the following year. He was born at Penn Yan, N. Y., Oct. 29, 1849. He was ordained a priest in 1873 and was rector of various parishes in New York state. He was regent of the University of the State of New York in 1900-03.

BULLET IN HIS HEAD

Youth Does Not Appear to Suffer Any Great Inconvenience

Haverhill, Mass., Dec. 1.—Carrying a bullet in his head without suffering any ill effects, Ned Short, a 19-year-old Groveland youth, was the victim of a novel accident which happened last Friday. Short, in taking a revolver from his pocket, accidentally discharged it, the bullet imbedding itself in his head.

Physicians were unable to find the lead. Today the boy has fully recovered from the shock, and unless complications arise the doctors have decided to leave it in his skull.

Chinese Inspector Suspended

Washington, Dec. 1.—Following an investigation of charges affecting the administration of his office, George E. Baldwin, special Chinese inspector at Baltimore and Washington, has been suspended from office. A hearing will be given him in a few days.

DUTY EVADED FROM THE START

Comprehensive Charge Regarding the Sugar Trust

TRIAL IS FAIRLY UNDER WAY

Counsel For Government Says That Bendernagel Furnished Sinews of War—Spitzer, His Right Hand Man, Had Charge of Weighing Operations, and Men Who Made Embarrassing Discoveries Were Removed

New York, Dec. 1.—When the trial of James F. Bendernagel, former manager of the American Sugar Refining company's Williamsburg plant, and the five other former employes of the company accused with him of sugar underweighing frauds, was resumed before Judge Martin in the United States circuit court, all impending motions had been disposed of and but one seat in the jury box remained unfilled.

The jury was completed shortly after court convened and the goverment opened its case.

Mr. Dennison told the jury the now famous story of the trick scales, a hole and a wire in each by means of which the weighers are alleged to have manipulated the scale beam to make the sugar weigh less. "The special office of Bendernagel was to provide the sinews of war," said Mr. Dennison, who added that the government expected to prove that Oliver Spitzer, Bendernagel's right-hand man, the dock superintendent, and Bendernagel himself "saw to it that any government weighers who were astute enough to discover anything were removed."

Taking of evidence was begun with the examination of Thomas B. McLoughlin, chief entry clerk of the custom house, who produced the entry papers of the steamship Eva, which in 1907 brought the cargo of sugar about which the testimony of the government is expected to centre in its attempt to hasten specific frauds upon the defendants.

The jury consists of the following individuals: Gaston Plaintiff, manager of an automobile company; Wilbur C. Marsh, manufacturer; Mortimer H. Cort; Louis Miller, an umbrella manufacturer; Benjamin MacPhillips, a real estate dealer; Adolph A. Hegeman, a real estate dealer; Arthur H. Phillips, a dealer in school supplies; Charles F. Decasanova, real estate dealer; Edgar P. Reynolds, hardware dealer; Samuel Marks, manufacturer of trimmings; Harry Bevins, a clerk, and A. Linbury Palmer, manufacturer.

Mr. Dennison, in the opening address for the government, made the comprehensive charge of sugar frauds from the very inauguration of the duty upon that article.

"We expect to prove beyond a doubt," said he, "that since the very day on which a duty upon sugar went into effect the Havemeyer and Elder refinery, which later came into the American Sugar Refining company, has been defrauding the United States government out of a part of the duty payable under the law."

Mr. Dennison described in detail the process of weighing the sugar; how lying was done on platform scales owned by the company, and how sugar, after having been thus weighed, was taken away a short distance to scales where city weighers representing merchants reweighed it.

These operations were all under the charge of Oliver Spitzer, the dock superintendent, who had with him also the sweepers who gathered up large quantities of sugar that had run out of the sacks as they were moved about. Spitzer also had under him the checkers for the sugar company, who checked the weights as taken by the government weighers, and by the city weighers.

Mr. Dennison said that the average weight of sugar per truck load was reduced about thirteen pounds. The government prosecutor explained that the result of this process was to have two sets of books, one of which contained the correct weights as weighed by the man who represented the importing merchants, and the other the doctored weights from the scales where the government weighers were employed. The difference between these two sets of weights he declared showed absolutely the amount of fraud upon the government and when the government began its investigation before, it found the leaves from the two sets of books pasted back to back in the records of the sugar company.

Collins' Death an Accident

Chicago, Dec. 1.—That Kreigh Collins, former western tennis champion, whose body was found beside the street car tracks near his home here, was killed by being run over by a street car was the verdict returned by a coroner's jury. The jury was not able to fix responsibility for his death.

Judge Calls Down Juryman

Salem, Mass., Dec. 1.—In the superior court in this city John J. Kelley, a juryman, was called before the court and Judge King told him that he twice incapacitated himself for jury service because of drunkenness and that he should dismiss him.

Many kind words are being said about the "Bigger Ledger" both by citzens and our contemporaries. An eight-page paper is none too large for the booming city of Quincy. Are you cooperating with the press to build up the city? If you see anything meritorious about the new Daily Ledger don't hesitate to say so, as a little encouragement may help.

One of the speakers at the Ward Four rally made the statement that the Daily Ledger had in the past been an Anti-Shea paper, but he had no ground for such a stand, and Mayor Shea will not back him up. The Daily Ledger had done much to make the administration of William T. Shea successful and popular. At the same time the Ledger will continue as an independent paper and give fair treatment to all. We ask in return fair play, and not misstatements.

The Daily Ledger hopes that Mr. Burgess will not sustain as large a loss by the fire at the Boston Gear Works as reported. It is an industry that means much to Quincy, and the Board of Trade should appoint a committee to confer with Mr. Burgess and give him all the encouragement possible. It is worth more to Quincy to retain the Boston Gear Works than to reach out for new industries which have not been tried. We hope also that the Y. M. C. A. will remember the untiring work of Mr. Burgess in the recent campaign, and rally around him now. The Mayor and others should also be interested and extend a helping hand.

Serving an uncooked dinner would not at first thought seem a good peace promoter. What would the man of the house say to the wife who sat him down to a cold uncooked dinner? The Twentieth Century club of Boston, all rules to the contrary, is to serve such a dinner at their rooms on Joy street on Monday and over a hundred wish to attend. Spicy after dinner speeches on food will be the closing feature. The proceeds of the dinner will be given to the American Peace society.

The Department of Justice under the direction of Attorney General Wickersham has started an investigation of the recent merger of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company and the Western Union. According to reports from Washington he has directed a number of his field agents to make every effort in the production of evidence which tends to show that the merger will have the effect of restraining trade and furnish the grounds for a successful prosecution under the Sherman anti-trust law. He has already much available data on this subject. During the last session of Congress the Senate ordered an investigation of the great telephone companies and the reports which had come from many sections of the country that these huge concerns were absorbing all the small companies and forming a giant combination. Herbert Knox Smith, chief of the Bureau of Corporations, was put in charge of the work and it is reported that he is ready to present his evidence to Congress at the coming session. The Attorney General will make an early decision as to whether the recent merger was a violation of the anti-trust law. He has been informed that not only does the merger include the two companies mentioned but that the Postal Telegraph Company is also involved. A prosecution of these three companies would be a task second only to that of bringing the Standard Oil Company into court.

It is extremely pleasing to note that army engineers are entering with spirit into President Taft's determined policy of retrenchment in government expenditures. The serious manner in which they have received his instructions on this point is well illustrated in the announcement that the fortified artificial island for the defense of Chesapeake bay, which President Taft advocated in his Norfolk speech, can probably be completed at a cost of not to exceed $3,000,000 instead of $10,000,000 as was at first estimated. The construction of such an island was first recommended by the Taft board in 1906. According to advices from Washington it is to be placed on what is known as "middle ground" about midway between Cape Charles and Cape Henry where its guns would command the five mile channel of navigable water which constitutes the only entrance to the Chesapeake and which is not now protected by fortifications. It is now proposed to construct a fortification similar to that on El Fraile which, it will be recalled will consist of a comparatively small enclosure surrounded by a wall of concrete forty feet thick and containing two steel turrets each housing two 14-inch guns. There will also be four 6-inch guns. The use of the turret effects a material economy of space over the disappearing gun with practically equal efficiency. The construction of the island presents practically no engineering difficulties as there is hard sand some seventeen feet below the surface. It is predicted that substantial appropriations will soon be made for this highly essential fortification which will constitute the sole protection to the entrance of Chesapeake bay and is indispensable to the defense of Washington, Baltimore, Norfolk and Richmond.

DRIFT OF OPINION.

If those who are in sympathy with and enlisted in the cause of good local government would win, they must be organized and be willing to be handled as an organization, they must have a machine as well constructed and as smooth-running as that of the enemy, and they must go about their work with less regard for sentiment and more regard for practical results. The reform movement that wins is the only reform movement that is worth while.—Monitor.

Roosevelt can as easily be the next President of the United States as he can be next governor of New York. But in 1908 he renounced the presidency and his influence elected Taft. Will Roosevelt be disappointed in his creation when he returns? Not necessarily if Taft comes to himself, but if Taft continues to cater to The Triumvirate, things will be doing. Roosevelt is yet a young man. No President ever closed a term in the White House so young as Theodore Roosevelt except Mr. Cleveland at the end of his first term, but Cleveland did not end his public career when his first term closed—though he went out of office the most unpopular man to the United States Senate, not even barring Roosevelt. Probably Roosevelt will return from the Dark Continent a young man of fifty-one years in vigor of body and of mind. He ought to be good for twenty years more of reform activity. It is unlikely that fighting the hippopotamus has diminished Roosevelt's ability as a statesman. Timidity Roosevelt does not know. Stupidity and greed have no place in his splendid round of political and social service.—Lewiston Journal.

Criminals are born and criminals are bred, but the conditions of which they are born and under which they are bred in Denver are the same conditions that debauch our Legislature, our judiciary, our press, our business life, and our poor. I found no "Problem of the children" that was not also the problem of their parents. The young bud was blighted by the same corruption that infected the twig, killed the branch, and ate out the heart of the trunk. The rule of the plutocracy in Denver was the cause of three-quarters of the crime in Denver. The dependent and delinquent children who came into my court came almost wholly from the homes of dependent and delinquent parents who were made such by the hopeless economic conditions of their lives; and those conditions were made hopeless by the remorseless tyranny of wealthy men who used their lawless power to enslave and brutalize and kill their workmen.—Judge Ben Lindsay.

What does Canada want of a navy? That is a question that newspapers and public men are asking, and without an answer. Canada has nothing to fear from Europe. Any nation that conceived the idea of capturing the dominion would be considered foolish by the world at large, and made to appear so before it could start a navy out upon the Atlantic. Canada has nothing to fear from the United States at least not from the water side of the dominion. The ships that Canada would build could not defend her coast, and while our war vessels will never turn their guns upon Canadian forts if war were possible, such resistance as she could make would be ineffective. The United States had a chance to capture Canada in 1812, but allowing that opportunity to go by, the feat will never be attempted again. We have territory enought to afford homes for the entire population of the world. We are as disposed to live peaceably with our northern neighbor as she is to remain so with us. Some of the Canadian statesmen are talking loud about a navy, but so long as Canada is a British dependency, there is no more need of Canadian war vessels than there is for a South African fleet.—Lynn Item.

CUTTING THE COST OF LIVING.

An inquiry just carried on by the New York Herald into the underlying cause of the increased and increasing cost of living in this country confirms the position that we have taken in this connection from time to time. If the advance in prices were confined to those products and foodstuffs that are known, or supposed, to be controlled by monopolies it would be no difficult matter to place the responsibility. But the conclusion to be drawn from investigations carried on, not only in New York but in all other large cities, and not only in the larger but in the smaller communities, is that the high prices are due neither to monopoly nor to centralization but to the failure of production to keep pace with consumption. A New York commission man prominent enough to be quoted as an authority, declares that even where monopoly or centralization exists in the foodstuff line, the elimination of bidders (for farm products) has actually decreased the cost, and he adds to this statement, which is contrary to the belief of tens of thousands of economists in our times: "My opinion of the yearly increased cost of foodstuffs is that the population of non-producing consumers, such as the millions that live in the cities, is growing faster than the producing country population can furnish them with plenty. Prices of eggs, butter, hams smoked meats, cheese and fresh meats will increase this winter over the prices of last winter, if for no other reason than that the demand has increased and the supply has not increased proportionately."

Manifestly, the remedy for this lies in increased production. The lands are there, cheaper than they ought to be, ready and willing to respond to the touch of the farmer and the market gardner. Those how are cultivating the soil are among the most prosperous people in the land. Nothing could be clearer than the solution of the problem. But thousands who should be at work in the country nevertheless cling to the city, and all too frequently they cling to those vocations and districts of the city that have the least to offer.—Christian Science Monitor.

NICHOLS

contractor. All that was needed was to see the addition to see if it was a very good job. He had been told that it was absolutely impossible for a Republican Mayor to be elected this year. But conditions have changed, and there was an undercurrent that was growing every moment, and he believed the Republican candidate would be elected.

Councilman Richards said $105,000 had been appropriated for streets this year, but not much of it had been seen in Ward Three. It was the duty of the city to get dollar for dollar. He had put in one or two orders looking to this end. Only last night he had been accused by the Mayor of making a political speech in the Council. If the present executive had the welfare of the city at heart there had been good opportunity for him to exercise his veto power. No one who stands in the Council and says what he means will accomplish anything. Mr. Richards said there were glaring defects in the Lincoln building. There was plenty of material for this campaign without resorting to misstatements. The situation today is that a change of any kind is desirable.

Remarks were also made by George A. Bolster, Councilman Thomas Bishop, William M. Chase, Councilman Arthur C. Gardner, Representative William R. Thomas, Arthur E. Baxter, William J. Parker, John G. Roberts, W. L. Saunders, William Gelotte, John L. Miller, Edward J. Sandberg and John C. Murray.

Candidate Nichols had a word to say in closing. He said he felt entitled to the support of the Republican and all citizens who wanted to see a business administration. He was entirely unhampered and would give an absolute impartial business administration.

PROPOSITION FOR BARRE

Granite Men May Return to Work Soon

It is probable that the granite workers in Vermont will return to work pending negotiations. A proposition was agreed to at a conference in Boston this week between executive board of the National Manufacturers' Association and the sub-committee of the executive council of the International Union. If it is approved by the Barre manufacturers it will be the basis of negotiation between that body and the Northfield local union, which includes nearly all the affected Vermont quarries.

The proposition is as follows:

"In the matter of the pending dispute in Vermont, it appearing that there is a difference of opinion on the construction to be placed on Article 8 of the regulations in the pending agreement, we jointly agree to recommend to the parties in dispute, that the pending suspension terminate, the men return to work, and the handsurfacer in question to be again used, when committees representing both sides as per article 6 of the miscellaneous clauses, have mutually arranged conditions upon which it is to be operated."

It is distinctly stated that neither the National Granite Manufacturers' Association nor the officers of the International Granite Cutter's Union have the power at present to settle the strike and lockout in Vermont. Both, however, have joined in making the proposition, which, it is hoped, will be the basis for the settlement of the difficulties. The actual adjustment must come between the Barre manufacturers and the Northfield local union.

If either of the disputants in the Vermont contest had agreed to arbitrate, the matter would have come directly before one or the other national bodies. Both of these national organizations believe that the proposition submitted will be agreed to, in view of its having their indorsement.

The labor difficulties in Vermont during the past month, which resulted in 6,000 men being thrown out of employment, originated in a dispute in one of the Northfield quarries over the use of a brush surfacer, which the men claimed, was a violation of the local agreement.

TONS OF PAPER USED.

The growth of the newspaper production shows an increase of 570 per cent for this year as compared with the out-put in 1890, says the Kansas City Star. In that year the daily porduction of all the paper mill was 630 tons. It has been estimated that the average daily output for 1909 will be 4225 tons.

INLAND WATERWAYS.

Inland Waterways are receiving considerable attention east and west, north and south. A correspondent in Washington for the Boston Transcript writes as follows:

Boston was one of the first cities to take part in the great national movement for the improvement of rivers and harbors and has been identified with it from the beginning. Great preparations are being made here this year for the next meeting of the National Rivers and Harbors Congress, Dec. 8 and 10. Indications from gossip about the Capital are that the question of waterway improvement will be uppermost in the deliberations of this session of Congress.

"The New England section of the United States should especially see to it this year," said Mr. Fox, special director, who has just returned from visiting the entire United States, "that a large delegation is present from these States. I have met the expression in a good many New England and Eastern seaboard States that the National Rivers and Harbors Congress seems to be a 'Western affair,' and I want to say it will still seem 'Western' until the East sends more delegates down here and takes more interest in it than it has heretofore. This is just as much a matter of interest and concern to the States along the Eastern seaboard as it is to the States along the Pacific seaboard, because there is no special project advocated and no section of the United States is receiving any indorsement. The policy that is advocated and is being worked for pertains just as much to the Eastern States and the Western seaboard as it does to any other section.

"The Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association, which met at Norfolk, sanctioned sending five hundred delegates from that organization and President Moore assures me that everyone of them will be present. Other local organizations that have held local meetings recently, such as the Missouri River Navigation convention, the Intercoastal Canal Association, the Tennessee River Improvement Association, and other organized bodies working for specific projects, will be here in large numbers.

"New England has much to expect regarding the betterment of her harbors and the extension of her waterways.

"During the campaign throughout the entire West I repeatedly showed the people out in that great grain producing country how the money spent in Boston harbor, deepening it would save them an enormous amount of money by reason of cheapening their exports to Liverpool. I want the Boston people to feel just as much interest in the needs of the people out in Kansas and Nebraska as I taught them they had in Boston's deeper harbor; that by understanding these things as national projects we can better provide for them, and that our interests are so closely interwoven, there is no telling when an improvement in one part of the country benefits another. For instance, when I was out in Idaho I learned that because of the Columbia River improvement the wool producers of Wyoming and Idaho could save forty-three cents per hundred pounds on wool shipments out of that entire region to the coast, and thence around the Horn to Boston. If Columbia River is further improved, it will mean even greater saving to these people, and produce still greater commerce for the great wool consumers of Massachusetts."

RED CROSS STAMPS FOR QUINCY.

The Civic Betterment department of the Women's club will Red Cross Quincy during the Christmas season for the benefit of the Tuberculosis Camp. The stamps are for sale by all our leading merchants and by members of the Civic Betterment committee. These stamps can be put on all letters and packages sent from or in and around Quincy during the Christmas season. They cost a cent a piece. Truly for so good a cause no one will hesitate to buy these stamps. For every stamp sold means help to the Camp, now Quincy's greatest need. In the next year with a good earnest hustling purpose Quincy can be almost free from the Great White Plague. Buy the Red Cross stamps. By so doing you help a good cause and so make the Christmas season a real blessing in our community.

—After having been elected an alderman at Melrose last year and having been refused a seat because it was afterwards found that his home was across the line in Wakefield, Frank J. Sherman has made sure this time and moved over the line. At the same time he announces that he will again be a candidate for alderman from Ward 1, Melrose Highlands.

WOMEN'S CLUBS

WHAT THEY ARE DOING AND SEASONS' PLANS

The present is a quiet week among the clubs only a few meetings being held.

The next Federation meeting of women's clubs will be held in Arlington the first of February, by invitation of the Women's club of which Mrs. Charles A. Dennett is president. The experiment of having box luncheons is being tried this year by club women in the hope of relieving, to a large extent, the entertaining club.

At the home afternoon of the Milton Woman's club on Dec. 6, Charles F. Campbell superintendent of the Industrial Department, Massachusetts Commission for the Blind, will tell of the work in this State. In connection with this there will be an exhibition of the handiwork of the blind in the art gallery of the Milton Public Library.

The second entertainment in the series of three being given this winter under the auspices of the Quincy Alliance is to be a recital on Friday evening Dec. 10th by Mrs. Elsie Washburn of Boston. There have been many subscribers for the series but there are also many single ticket holders. The closing entertainment in January will be by the Westland quartet.

Miss Ellen Emerson a nurse at the Massachusetts General hospital and a grand-daughter of Ralph Waldo Emerson is to lecture on "Health" at the meeting of the Philergians at Cochato hall, Braintree, on Monday afternoon.

The only meeting of the Quincy Alliance in December will be on Monday afternoon the 13th and it will be a Christmas meeting in charge of Mrs. Isabelle Davis.

Mothers Association is holding the December meeting this afternoon in Bethany chapel with Mrs. Alfred G. Coffin conducting the devotional exercises, Miss Edith Randall giving a talk on "The Mother Instinct" and Mrs. Henry W. Tirrell contributing vocal solos.

Junior Alliance of First church holds town meetings this month on the 13th and 27th.

Junior Friday club meets on Monday afternoon the sixth with Mrs. Perry Lawton of Presidents hill. Miss Georgiana C. Lane is arranging the program ,which continues the study of France. This will be the only December meeting.

Wollaston Alliance is having one of its best programs of the season, this afternoon the subject being "Great Hymns and their Writers." Mrs. F. A. Page and Mrs. C. W. Smith are in charge.

The Fathers of New England—the settlement at Plymouth, is the subject for the Friday club meeting on Dec. 3, Mrs. George W. Morton having the program in charge and the meeting being held at the home of Mrs. C. Theodore Hardwick Chestnut street. Members are finding "Colonial America" interesting, each afternoon bringing forth entertaining matter.

Adams Chapter Daughters of the Revolution hold their December meeting on Monday afternoon at half past two at the birthplace of President John Adams.

Monday afternoon the New England Women's club gave an informal reception at their rooms on Boylston street Boston, in honor of Mrs. Judith Winsor Smith one of the club's oldest members.

The Woman's Auxiliary to Young Men's Christian Asso. meets Friday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Eben W. Sheppard, Greenleaf street. Those who attended the conference at Malden and heard Mrs. F. J. Goodwin of Pawtucket, R. I., speak will be glad to learn that she is coming to Quincy Friday to address the Auxiliary, As Mrs. Goodwin is much in demand at club meetings Mrs. Pinkham president of the Auxiliary is much pleased that she consented to come to Quincy.

The Walpole Woman's club was hostess Monday afternoon for representatives from about twenty neighboring clubs. There were eight speakers from committees of the State Federation among them Mrs. W. E. Dow of Braintree who spoke on Food Sanitation. Next Monday is Federation Day with the Brockton Woman's club and Miss Bacon president of the Federation will be present and speak also several chairmen of state committees. Mrs. Dow will also speak at Brockton on Food Sanitation.

Notices have gone forth from the state federation for a Civic Conference of club presidents, secretaries and civic committees in the Cary church, Chelsea ,Thursday, Dec. 9, at 2 o'clock. All will be guests of the Chelsea Woman's club which serves tea. Mrs. Harriette J. MacDonald, 70 Fremont avenue Chelsea ,will be glad to receive acceptances and will reply to enquiries. It is of interest to note the two additions of departments to those already operative,—"A noiseless Fourth and International Peace "and "Junior Civic League," both commanding attention and activity.

Mrs. Harriet Minot Laughlin, president of the Dover Street Day Nursery, Boston, will speak at the regular meeting of the Quincy Day Nursery Association, December 7th, at the Women's Club house. Mrs. Laughlin is also president of the State Conference of Day Nurseries, and a member of the executive board of the National Conference. A rare treat is promised. Not only the members of the Association but all who are interested in the subject are cordially invited to be present.

Fees in the Equal Franchise Society are reduced from $5 to $2 in order to enable the working women to become members. This is the idea of Mrs. Clarence Mackay, the president, who believes that women wage-earners need the ballot more than other classes to protect themselves against the man-made laws regulating hours of work.

QUINCY WOMEN'S CLUB.

Only one meeting of the Quincy Women's club will be held this month on account of the Christmas holidays but it promises to be a very interesting one. It will be in charge of the Arts and Crafts committee and Vesper Lincoln George will be the speaker his subject being "Household Art." He is one of the best lecturers on household art, etc., and is in great demand .

Club members in the Arts and Crafts department are pleased that their needs and work are receiving recognition from local merchants as advertised by one of the large hardware dealers.

The second meeting of the Current Events class, Mrs. May Alden Ward lecturer, will meet at the clubhouse Dec. 9, at 3 P. M. It is not too late for members to subscribe for the series as the lectures will continue through the club year.

Owing to Mrs. Wade being in the west for a much needed rest the Friday afternoon demonstration lectures have been postponed until after Christmas. Those having season tickets for the course will hold them for use in January when the series will be completed.

A meeting of the executive board of the club will be held at the club house Thursday morning Dec. 2 at ten o'clock.

YOUNG WOMEN'S CLUB.

The next meeting of the Young Women's club will be held at the clubhouse on Goffe street on New Year's night and there will be special featres to make the evening enjoyable for those attending.

Miss Minnie Packard the newly elected president has the welfare of the club very much at heart and gives personal attention to the smallest detail that is for the advancement of the club.

Members of the Philanthropy committee of the Quincy Women's club under whose auspices the Young Women's club was started attend the meetings and continue their interest as do members of the Arts and Crafts committee and club members generally.

Officers of the Young Women's club are: President, Miss Minnie Packard; vice presidents, Miss Bertha Trepannier and Miss Gladys Howe; recording secretary, Miss Ethel Randall; corresponding secretary, Miss Elizabeth Durand; treasurer, Miss Gerna Saville; auditor Miss Caroline Wilkinson.

Good lamps are much needed at the club house. The classes in dressmaking, millinery, embroidery, etc., are much handicapped by lack of good light for their work. The committee would appreciate the gift of several lamps suitable for reading and sewing, that is lamps with large blaze and good shades. Who will be the first to contribute?

RED CROSS STAMPS.

The Civic committee of the Quincy Women's club, Mrs. W. G. Shaw, chairman has secured a supply of Christmas Red Ross stamps which they hope club women in the city will purchase and use generously on all Christmas letters and packages.

The demand for Christmas stamps issued by the American Red Cross has been so great that the aggregate number of orders from the printer exceed 50,000,000. Of this number 38,000,00 have already been distributed. Eighty per cent of the proceeds of the Christmas stamp sales will be distributed among the several States and other agencies making a fight against tuberculosis and twenty per cent will be paid into the Red Cross treasury as a fund from which the expenses incident to special work may be met.

A VERY BUSY MAN.

Charming Experience With an Overworked Irish Watchmaker.

I fell in with a delightful man at a little town in County Fermanagh. I wanted a little thing done to my watch, and I asked him how long it would take to do it. He assured me that he was driven to death with work and was up till late every night trying to get ahead, but that he would try to find time to mend my watch some time before 7 o'clock, when he nominally closed. Then he followed me to the door of his shop and began to ask me questions about America. He pointed out different passersby and told me their life histories. And every once in a while he would say: "I've not had a day off for nearly a year, not even bank holiday. Never a minute for anything but work. I've an order now that's going to keep me busy, except for the time I'll give to your watch, all the rest of the day. And dinner eaten in my worshop to save time."

I bade him good day and didn't go near there until 7 o'clock in the evening. I found him outside the shop discussing the strike of the constabulary at Belfast with a neighbor.

"Awfully sorry, sir, but I've been so busy today that I've been unable to finish that job. It'll not take over twenty minutes when I get to it. Can you come in the morning?"

Next morning I was at his shop at 9 o'clock, and he was just taking down the shutters. Said he worked until 10 o'clock the night before, but seemed farther behind than before. If I'd come up into his workroom he'd fix my watch while I waited.

Up there he had some photographs to show me that he had taken a year ago and had only just found time to develop. We talked photography for twenty minutes, and then he fixed my watch in a jiffy when he got to work.—From "Just Irish," by Charles Battell Loomis.

A VOTE OF THANKS.

The Way Dwight L. Moody Handled the Question In England.

Possibly the most novel response ever made to a request to return a vote of thanks to a chairman was that made by Dwight L. Moody during his first visit to England.

He had attended a meeting at which the Earl of Shaftesbury was chairman. The duty of proposing a vote of thanks was assigned to him and the announcement made:

"Our American cousin, the Rev. Mr. Moody of Chicago, will now move a vote of thanks to the noble earl who has presided on this occasion."

The whole thing was quite out of Mr. Moody's line. English formalities might or might not have come gracefully from his lips had he attempted them, but he did not. With an utter disregard of conventionality he burst upon the audience with the bold announcement:

"The speaker has made two mistakes. To begin with, I'm not the Rev. Mr. Moody at all. I'm plain Dwight L. Moody, a Sunday school worker. And then I'm not your American cousin. By the grace of God I'm your brother, interested with you in our Father's work for his children.

"And now about this vote of thanks to the 'noble earl for being our chairman this evening.' I don't see why we should thank him any more than he should thank us. When at one time they offered to thank our Mr. Lincoln for presiding over a meeting in Illinois he stopped it. He said he'd tried to do his duty and they'd tried to do theirs. He thought it was about an even thing all round."

That opening fairly took the breath away from Mr. Moody's hearers. Such a talk could not be gauged by any known standard. Mr. Moody carried his English audiences with him from that beginning to his latest labors.

Who He Was.

At the crossing of the river Styx Death met a stranger with a grin on his face.

"Who are you?" demanded Death.

"I am your manservant," replied the stranger.

"My manservant!" repeated Death, somewhat puzzled to know what the new arrival meant.

"In other words, the valet of the shadow of Death," chortled the stranger.

It is perhaps superfluous to add that before journeying hence the stranger had been a professional jokesmith.—New York Times.

CLEARING AWAY THE RUINS

Boston Gear Works at Norfolk Downs Will Be Rebuilt

Some of the Machinery Will Not Be a Total Loss---Investigating the Origin of Fire

A visit to the scene of Saturday's costly fire at the Boston Gear Works, revealed the fact that from the mass of burned material and shattered buildings a remarkable scene of activity has ensued. A gang of men, 25 or 30, are clearing away the twisted and ruined machinery and tearing down what remains of the burned building. On the south end of the building where the floor caved in, a mix up of material prevails which will be the hardest job to handle, and which will probably take weeks to remove.

In the north end of the plant however, everything seems in as perfect order today as before the fire, except for the fact that the roof is gone. The machines are concealed by rubber coverings and everything looks in good order.

The owner, Frank Burgess, has moved his offices across the street to the loft of an unoccupied building and with his office assistants is rushing the work. The outlook, as he puts it, is very optimistic. Instead of one shop, Mr. Burgess says, "I now have several situated in Quincy and Boston, so that my work can be carried on with practically little hindrance."

Speaking of his loss Mr. Burgess stated that it would be far below the first newspaper estimates, and that the most of it will be covered by insurance. If the north end of the building could have been saved, where all of my valuable tools were, I might have got out of the fire with no loss, but until everything has been tested I cannot tell what the loss was.

The owner would have nothing to say as to the origin of the fire, but yesterday State Fire Marshall Rice and his assistants were at work on the case, so that developments may soon be expected. He said that he wished to thank the Quincy firemen for their efforts in fighting the fire and that they did the best they could under the circumstances. Arrangements were made on Tuesday with a company to clear away the wreck of the building and as soon as possible the work of reconstruction will commence, although on a smaller scale, as Mr. Burgess will give his entire attention to the finest points of gear making, turning out only the cream of gearing.

ROUTINE BUSINESS

At Monthly Meeting of the School Committee

A regular meeting of the School Committee was held Tuesday evening, Mr. Barker being the only absent member.

It was voted to notify the City Council that the new building at Houghs Neck had been named the Atherton Hough school.

TEACHERS.

The following resignations were received and accepted: Miss Mary McCue, of the Adams school; Miss Gertrude H. Gavin and Miss Lora M. Hunt, of the Wollaston school.

Miss Mary Egan was transferred from the Cranch school to master's assistant at the Adams.

Miss Alice M. Igo was elected a teacher of the Cranch school, and Miss Etta Cummings a teacher at the Wollaston school.

JANITORS.

A letter was received from Alex W. Russell in regard to janitors, but no action was taken as the matter of janitors salaries was being considered by a special committee.

The secretary was authorized to advertise for bids for fuel.

It was voted to pay the tuition of an Indian child living near the Milton line, in the Milton schools.

It was voted to call the attention of the City Council to the unsanitary conditions of the Wollaston school.

It was voted to abolish the use of common drinking cups and towels in the school buildings.

A communication was received from Pittsfield relative to needed legislation as to the selling of papers by children of school age. No action was deemed necessary on the communication.

Messrs. Curtis, Bushnell and Wadsworth were appointed a special committee to express the sympathy of the School Committee to Frank E. Parlin former superintendent of schools, on the loss of his wife.

It was voted to ask the City Solicitor for an opinion as to the statutes relatives to selling school tickets at half price to pupils of the evening schools.

ANNUAL REPORT.

Messrs. Curtis, Bushnell and Wadsworth were appointed a committee to prepare the annual school report.

FINANCES.

Voted to ask the City Council to authorize the School Committee to make the necessary transfers in its appropriation.

The financial statement to date was reported as follows:

| | Appropriation. | Expended. | Balance. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Salaries | $114,450 | $101,952.60 | $12,497.40 |
| Janitors | 9,175 | 8,454.11 | 720.89 |
| Books, Supplies, | 10,500 | 10,482.21 | 17.79 |
| Fuel | 6,500 | 6,376.64 | 123.36 |
| Transportation | 1,475 | 1,380.00 | 95.00 |
| Rent | 360 | 330.00 | 30.00 |
| Evening Schools | 1,500 | 1,130.82 | 369.18 |
| Totals | $143,960 | $130,106.38 | $13,853.62 |

GOOD ADVERTISING STORY.

The Newburyport Herald revives the old story of Robert Bonner's success with the New York Ledger through the misunderstanding of a space order to the Herald.

When the New York Ledger was wavering on the brink of failure, Robert Bonner, the proprietor, sent to the New York Herald a brief advertisement to be set up in a single line. So Grecleyesque was Bonners handwriting that the advertising manager interpreted the directions as ordering that the copy be run in full page, which instructions he obeyed, though marveling greatly.

The Herald came out the next morning with one whole page devoted to the crisp adjuration to read the Ledger's new story. The effect upon Mr. Bonner was almost fatal, first from chagrin at the thought of the possible bill, then from amazement as subscriptions began to pour in, and finally from satisfaction as they continued to flood the office until the fortune of the publication was made.

The novel, though accidental, device had struck the public fancy. Mr. Bonner was hailed as the pioneer of a new and daring theory by exploitation and the advertisement gained tenfold currency by being comemnted upon as a feature of the news.

POLITICAL ADVICE.

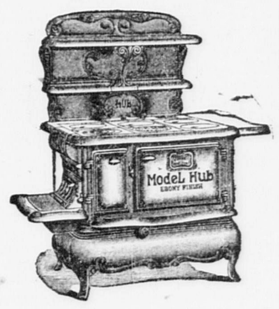
In his reminiscences of Grover Cleveland, George F. Parker tells a story concerning prodigal expenditures in politics.

A rich man who had been nibbling at the Democratic nomination for governor of New York asked William C. Whitney's advice. This is the advice:—



"Of course, you ought to run! Make your preliminary canvass and when you have put in $200,000 you will have become so much interested in it that you will feel like going ahead and spending some money."

WHAT WOMEN ARE DOING

Duchesse de Chaulnes and Her Baby Duke—A Blind Woman's Talents—Mrs. Taft's Winter Season—Wilhelmina's Beauty.

It is not often that a duke in swaddling clothes comes to the United States. The picture is that of the Duc de Chaulnes, ten months old and eighteen days over on the day of arrival in New York city Oct. 3. The titled baby was accompanied by his mother, the Duchesse de Chaulnes, daughter of Theodore P. Shonts. The baby's aunt, Miss Marguerite, was also a member of the party. The duchesse was in deep mourning for her husband, whose death occurred April 24 of this year. The royal name of the infant is Emanuel Theodoric Bernard d'Albert de Luynes, Duc de Chaulnes. He was photographed in the arms of his French nurse while the baggage of the party was being examined. Before the steamer docked the duke's grandfather, Mr. Shonts, went down the bay to meet it and get a glimpse of the baby. The duchesse will remain in this country during the winter, spending her time between Chicago and New York city.

An interesting little woman, Miss Theresa D. Frances of New York city, is blind. Although no other member of her family has any affliction, Miss Frances is the housekeeper. She attends to all the duties of such a position. She is an expert cook, does dainty work with the needle and prefers to do the ironing of her own wear of a delicate character. She has a cheery nature, arranges her apartment and has time to teach other blind people who come to her to learn the art of housekeeping.

Official receptions at the White House will not begin before the middle of December and will continue at intervals to the middle of February. Although there is continued improvement in the health of Mrs. Taft, it is expected that the social season will be a rather quiet one for her. There are no grounds, however, for the reports that her place will be taken by some one else. It is not true that her daughter will be a debutante the coming winter. The young lady returned to her school at Bryn Mawr at the beginning of the term and will remain, except for a brief return Thanksgiving week and during the Christmas holidays.

The future of women in journalism, granted that the present tendency continues, gives no indication that the sex recognizes the movement intimated at a recent meeting in New York city of the international press conference by the Society of Women Journalists. Women, as a class, have no views on the subject or, having views, refuse to discuss them.

Rumors are rife that Mrs. Taft's efficient secretary, Miss Blech, will soon resign her place. The rumors are based upon another rumor that Miss Blech will become the wife of Richard Wainwright, son of Admiral Wainwright, some time during the coming winter. During the summer the couple were frequently together.

The Order of Elizabeth is the highest female order in existence. It was instituted in 1766 by the Electress Elizabeth Augusta, Duchess of Bavaria, Countess Palatine of the Rhine. All ladies upon whom the order is conferred must be Catholics. Its principal object is to afford help and assistance to the needy.

Every woman in this country will be glad to know that Queen Wilhelmina is growing pretty again. Her color has come back, her skin has become what it was when she was regarded as a beauty, and she takes drives as formerly around her various country seats. The baby, little Juliana, usually accompanies the royal mother, and when she does the public knows it, because when that occurs the carriage is drawn by four white horses.

THE GOWN SUMPTUOUS.

Fall and Winter Goods In Many Colors and Varied Styles.

The new fall and winter goods have the old time body and richness, and the thin and shadowy stuffs are relegated to that limbo of out of style things. The always rich and fine silk warp henriettas are to be seen in the most elegant of new tailored suits, the stately folds which have always been the distinguishing trait of this material lending a grace not found in all goods. This is produced in black only, and, being half silk and half pure Australian wool, it has all the beauty of silk and the body of the wool, and it is woven "dead fine." Nothing falls in more elegant and graceful lines.

I saw some lovely new things in colors. Leading them, I think, is the shantung royal, a soft and pliable material, whether of all silk or half silk it is difficult to say, but the soft richness of the ground of the goods is enhanced by broken lines in quite thick cording. This is extremely sumptuous and makes up beautifully, particularly for dresses for ceremonious occasions. It has the richness of silk with the added heavy cord. This is in all the season's colors and is desirable in any.

The standard tussah royal, which is a very dressy material with the gloss of the finest silk and the draping qualities of wool, is really made of mohair and wool combined. It is made in diagonal, in wide and narrow wales, and has also been produced in the well liked bedford cord, with the cords running up and down instead of across as before. There is also a tussah royal made with regular ottoman cords running across every sixteenth of an inch. This makes the whole a thing of beauty, particularly when it is in soft, delicate grays or one of the exquisite new tints of the season. The ottoman royal is rich and costly enough to make it desirable to those who think nothing is good enough for them unless it is expensive, and yet any woman who can make her own gowns will find that she can easily afford it. It is the making that costs.

Among the other new and well proved materials for this season one finds brilliantine in more different varieties than the famous pickles, all with a new softness instead of the harsh cloth of other days and in all of the season's colors. Prunella cloth is still one of the good values; so are the satin faced cloths, the wool batistes, soilis and sicilienne. Broadcloths are as fashionable as before.

In these days of competition everything must have all the newest ideas, and so it has come about that many of the woolen goods have been treated in a manner to make them shower proof, if not fully waterproof. Black crape for mourning and for trimming mourning goods is treated in this way.

The soft and dainty ottoman royal was employed to develop the elegant evening gown illustrated. The ground and cord being of the same shade of pearl gray, the whole is beautiful. A gown made of this needs little ornamentation. In this case none is used save a band of embroidery done on soft carmine velvet in silk of a shade of pale pink which harmonizes entirely. Kimono sleeves have not altogether gone out, as may be seen. A band of the velvet is drawn down the left side of the dress, defining in this way the outline of the figure. Soft cashmere and silk warp goods are ideal for such a gown.

Hats! Who shall dare say? In one great store yesterday I thought I had seen the latest and finest. Half an hour later I saw others as different as though they had been made a hundred years apart. I think the best thing to say, supposing one wishes to keep within bounds, would be that each woman can decide for herself and find just that. There are large ones for those who like them best, but I think the majority of the turbans are the handsomest and least objectionable.

CLUB FOR LONDON WITH ODD RULES

British Organization Will Be Called "the Five Hundred."

NAMES OF MEMBERS TABOOED

Each One to Be Known by a Number Instead—To Have Special Anthem. All Members Must Contribute a Speech or Song to Club Phonograph.

Some quaint clubs have been springing up in London lately. It was only the other day that a story appeared about the foundation of a club in London on the lines of the Gridiron club in Washington, and now it is proposed to open a club with very novel rules and regulations which promise plenty of fun to the members, who will be mostly leading actors, musicians and others prominent in artistic life. It is to be called "the Five Hundred." Every member is to be known by a number, and should he by accident address another by name he will be liable to a fine. The club is to have a special anthem of its own, which every member will have to learn and sing when occasion arises.

How Members Announce Themselves.

Another novelty is that an electric tablet is to be placed in an anteroom which will contain every member's number, and on entering the club a member will have to announce himself by registering his number on the tablet, which will be visible in the clubroom.

No waiters will be visible, though they will be ready behind a screen to attend to the wants of members, who will write their requirements upon a slip of paper, drop it into a revolving desk, when it will be whisked round and returned with the required dish or drink.

Nor is this the end of the novelties. To each member will be presented a key to admit him to the club, and with it he must close the door on entering and leaving. Should he lose his key there will be a fine of 10 shillings to pay. Should he transfer it, woe indeed be his lot, for transfer means liability to expulsion.

Disposition of Fines.

Then each member must give a speech, song or declamation for the club phonograph, and each, too, if called upon, must give a lecture, the subject to be chosen by the committee. Failing to lecture or to supply a substitute, a member will be fined.

All fines will go toward buying theater tickets for "first nights" for members who will be chosen by a poll.

SOCIETY OF NIGHT RIDERS.

Four-in-hand Coach Drivers Form Club to Promote the Sport.

Among the features of one of the days at the recent national horse show in New York city was the formation of a club for the purpose of promoting four-in-hand coaching. Some forty members enrolled in the organization, to be called the Night Riders. Some of the names of the men who are fostering the movement are well known four-in-hand whips—Alfred G. Vanderbilt, J. Coogan, Jr.; Emil Seelig, Harold Brown and Morris E. Howlett.

The idea of the club had its start with Morris E. Howlett on a midnight ride to Arrow Head inn and a supper that followed, when the plans were laid out. The club membership is to be open to owners of four-in-hand teams and those who desire to make this sport popular. Night rides to inns in and about New York to dinners on each occasion will be taken.

WOMAN'S DAY COMING.

Rev. Dr. Hillis Says She Will Own All Property a Thousand Years Hence.

Rev. Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis of Brooklyn, formerly of Chicago, who spoke before the Cook County Teachers' association in Chicago the other morning, said: "The women are getting the most of the education of today, and before long, if the men continue to go into business and get their recreation in the evening by playing billiards while the women follow intellectual pursuits, the women will be the only educated persons of the country.

"In 1,000 years the women will own all the property, and when a man wishes 50 cents with which to buy a Christmas present he is likely to be asked by his wife what he did with the last 50 cents she gave him."

Myrtle Supplants Orange For Weddings.

Bridal wreaths of myrtle are becoming the fad in London as well as in Paris and Rome, and one of the most fashionable brides of November married recently in St. Margaret's, Westminster, London, had her veil fastened with a garland of white myrtle. Miss Elizabeth Trescot, who became the bride of Lieutenant Philip Torrey, U. S. N., in Washington a few days ago, wore the classic emblem of happy love, the white myrtle, instead of the ridiculous orange flower. Now that Paris and Europe generally have placed their seal of approval on the bridal wreath of myrtle this novelty may be said to have arrived, and it will no doubt figure largely in bridal bouquets and floral decorations in marriages of the future.

Not What He Expected.

A doctor in a Yorkshire village lately gave up his house and was succeeded in it by a veterinary surgeon. Before he had been many weeks in his new home the "vet" was awakened in the early hours of a rather bleak spring morning. Opening the window, he heard a voice call out of the darkness:

"Can you come with me at once, mister? She's very bad."

The surgeon dressed and found a trap waiting to take him to a farm two or three miles away from the village. On the way he asked a few questions about the case he was to attend.

"I'm afraid there's very little hope for her," said the farmer. "She's been ailing now, you see, for ten years, and she's getting pretty old as well."

Annoyed at being called out at such an hour to see an obviously not very valuable animal, the veterinary surgeon exclaimed, "Why on earth don't you shoot her?"

"What!" exclaimed the farmer. "Shoot my mother!"

Then the "vet" understood that it was the previous tenant who was wanted. —London Tit-Bits.

Work Day on a Mississippi Plantation.

The day begins on a plantation when it is yet night. The big bell rings between 4 and 5 o'clock for the "hands" to go to the fields. Mammy starts her small sable assistants around at the "big house" with early coffee about 6. Without this tiny cup of cafe noir your true creole gets up on the wrong side of the bed. He has no appetite for breakfast after a ride through the fields and still less for his generous noonday dinner. Supper is served at night, and the dishes are typically southern—the corn and batter breads, fried chickens and waffles and fig preserves, with "sillabub," that moonbeam mixture that makes modern ices and confections heavy by comparison, for dessert. Life on a plantation is not dull. There are visits to town and a constant stream of visitors from town. There are "sugar house" parties and hog killings, Christmas doings and Thanksgiving dinners, to say nothing of house parties and hunts.—Memphis Commercial Appeal.

The Herring.

A peculiar feature in the herring trade is that an exceptionally large catch during one season has no effect whatever upon the next year's supply; also, large as is man's consumption of herrings, naturalists say the number killed by fishermen is quite insignificant as compared with the quantity destroyed every year by sharks, porpoises, cod, dogfish, ling and other fish, each of which must have its daily meal of from one to two score herrings, to say nothing of the sea birds, which practically live on surface feeding fishes. Herrings are not at all a modern article of diet. A vast commerce in them was carried on in northern Europe all through the dark and middle ages. The herring's chief food consists of minute organisms, which it strains from the water by its gills, but it also eats worms and at certain seasons its own young, sprats and sand eels.—Pearson's Weekly.

Rule of the Corset.

If Cleopatra wore corsets she may rank as a royal champion of them with Catherine de' Medici, who is credited with having introduced the busked corset in France from Italy. Male monarchs have been less friendly. Joseph II. of Austria tried to discourage the corset by making it part of the costume of a convicted woman of bad character. Napoleon, shaking his head over the tight lacing of his day, told Dr. Corvisart that he saw in it a sign of frivolous tastes and a menace of coming decadence. The restoration kings, Louis XVIII. and Charles X., were equally hostile. Formerly, said the latter, France had been full of Venuses, Dianas and Niobes, but now there were only wasps. The revolution alone temporarily put down the garment that has triumphantly defied kings.—London Spectator.

A Boomerang.

An amusing incident occurred when the house of lords was in committee on the reform bill of 1867. The clerk of the house intimated that an amendment had been handed in, the writing of which was so illegible that he was unable to say what it was about or who had written it. It was then discovered that Lord Lyttleton was the author, and it turned out to be a proposal disfranchising all persons who could not write.—Westminster Gazette.

Out of Place.

A sentry, an Irishman, was on post duty for the first time at night, when the officer of the day approached. He called, "Who comes there?"

"Officer of the day," was the reply.

"Then what are yez doin' out at night?" asked the sentry.—London Telegraph.

Demeanor Analyzed.

"Your chauffeur seems very respectful," said the guest.

"That air of deferential solicitude," replied Mr. Chuggins, "is not respect. It is sympathy."—Washington Star.

Naturally.

Medical Professor—What is the result, young gentlemen, when a patient's temperature goes down as far as it can? Student—Why—er—he gets cold feet.—Cleveland Leader.

One at Home.

Mrs. Happywed—I never saw an educated bear. Did you? Patient Wife—Yes, indeed. We have one. Come over some afternoon when he is at home.

Devote each day to the object then in time, and every evening will find something done.—Goethe.

Novelized by the Author From His Great Play of the Same Name

"You won't get the opportunity," persisted Moran.

"I shan't wait for it. I will create it."

"Stuff! Once you are down and out you might as well quit. The capitalists have framed it all up."

Haggleton listened attentively, analyzing the man's arguments as they flowed from his now fluent lips. It was the first time that he heard the voice of social discontent direct, instead of giving it a hasty moment of attention as it expressed itself in press reports or magazine articles.

What struck him at once about Moran's tirade was that the man placed upon the shoulders of the rich not only the responsibility for all the wrongs of society, but also the duty of righting them without any assistance from him and his class.

Joe became impatient.

"Stop gassing, Moran," he said tersely. "I always tell him that he's smoking the wrong dope, Mr. Jackson."

"What would you do if you were rich, Mr. Caffrey?" asked Haggleton.

"Oh, say, you just watch me. I'd be at the track every day at 2:45, in the grand stand. Wouldn't I wear the sporty clothes! I would put a thousand on every race, one, two, three, and a thousand straight on every hundred to one shot."

"You would soon be rid of your money, Mr. Caffrey."

"Not me. Say, do you think that the millionaires haven't got the races fixed, like everything else? They know the owners and the trainers and the jockeys and the starters—oh, say, it's a pipe."

Joe continued his picture of riches beyond the dreams of avarice:

"Not but that I would not own a million dollar yacht, like John J.," he continued.

Moran sprang up.

"The thief," he shouted, "the robber, the bloodsucker, the murderer! He has made me what I am. He has killed my daughter's husband. He"—

The man choked.

"His daughter's husband, my brother-in-law," explained Joe very calmly, "was killed at a grade crossing by a train on a road in which John J. has a lot of stock."

"Dinner," said Jenny tersely.

The three men rose, drew up their chairs to the table and sat down. Haggleton made a pretense of eating, but barely touched anything. He still devoted himself to Moran. That chance reference to work in the bakery must not be allowed to pass. At last he won from him the admission that a helper in the bakery was sick and that a substitute was needed. A promise to recommend him for the temporary employment was extracted.

And so Haggleton was to be a baker like Moran!

The millionaire turned to Jenny.

"That's fine coffee," he said. "I used to keep house for myself after a fashion, and, do you know, I am just like a woman—I take an interest in prices. What do you pay for this coffee?"

"Eighteen cents," she said, "for a half pound."

"Already ground, I suppose."

"Yes."

"H'm! A pound of good coffee in the bean costs only 28 cents. Ah, yes we poor people waste a lot of money!"

Moran stared at him.

"Waste money?"

"Yes, sir. I believe there's more extravagance down here than in Fifth avenue. Now, Mrs. Jenny, what do you pay for coal?"

"Fifteen cents a bucketful."

"How much in a bucketful?"

"You can search me."

"Twenty-five pounds," said Joe.

"Twenty-five pounds," calculated Haggleton. "That's eighty bucketfuls to a ton. Eighty times fifteen is $12. You pay twice as much for coal as Haggleton does."

"He buys it by the ton," growled Moran. "Where would we put a ton of coal?"

"And where would we get $6 all at once to pay for it?" asked Joe.

"If Mrs. Jenny will allow me," replied Haggleton, "I'll find a place for the coal one of these days, and we may think up some scheme of buying it by the ton."

Jenny's brain was busily at work after dinner as she turned one statuette after the other, her brush rapidly passing over their surfaces. She thought of Philip. Would he come that night? No, of course not! He was over there at the boarding house with the woman he loved. Her heart contracted with pain. Oh, if only she had not— Perhaps, if that episode in her life had never been, he might— She sighed with resignation, bent her head low as the tears blurred her vision and went on with her work. Yet hope would not be denied.

Philip did not come.

Gentle arrived at 9 to see how the newcomer was getting along. The two had a long talk on social conditions, temperate, sensible.

Jenny rose at a quarter to 10, worn out, and went to bed. Gentle went soon afterward.

Left alone, Moran and Haggleton did not find a word to say to each other. The millionaire needed fresh air, but the suggestion of an open window was curtly vetoed.

Moran got up and began to undress. He slipped into bed, retaining his trousers.

Haggleton stretched himself luxuriously between the clean, fresh sheets upon the hard mattress. It had been a busy day for him, and he felt tired, but he could not sleep. Too much had happened!

He had found his son!

He had started life anew!

He had accepted the challenge to the greatest battle of his career!

And he must learn to do his loving himself!

CHAPTER VI.

TOILERS AND WRECKS.

On being awakened by the alarm clock the next morning Haggleton found, to his surprise, that he had slept quite well. The close air of the room had given him a headache, but he shook this off by going down into the street and taking a brisk walk around "lung block." Inspecting his property closely as he went. He had hardly known that it formed part of his enormous real estate holdings.

On his return he found Jenny ready with the breakfast and Joe and Moran already devouring theirs. It was bread and coffee—nothing more.

After breakfast Moran hurried away to his day of toil in the cellar bakeshop. Joe, after various adroit but vain attempts to borrow a dollar from Jenny or the new boarder, drifted out, and Haggleton, after repeated offers of service to Jenny, resolved that the best thing he could do would be to take a look around and familiarize himself with the condition his property was in. Philip Ames, who was "off" that morning, came in, driven by curiosity, and offered to pilot "Mr. Jackson" through that unfamiliar part of the town. The offer was accepted with alacrity.

It was now a quarter to 8 as they joined the throng of hurrying toilers. They paused at the Bowery and Canal street and watched the crush of men and women fighting their way up the elevated stairs and packing themselves into the cars. Then they turned to the east and walked against the surging river of humanity.

"You call these the poorest people in New York?" asked Haggleton.

"I suppose so."

"Then New York makes a pretty good showing. Do you see any rags or misery? Look at these men. They all wear leather shoes, don't they? In Europe the poorest people wear wooden shoes. That's something, isn't it? And they all wear derby hats and starched shirts and neckties and watch chains and overcoats with velvet collars."

"You can't judge by appearances," objected Philip.

"Yes, you can too."

Philip shook his head. "You see only those who have work and are able to work. You don't see those who are left at home. You don't see the sick and the old and the young. You don't see the wrecks."

"No, but I see what makes the wrecks, or some of them," answered Haggleton. "It's extravagance. Most of these men smoke—that's bad—and a lot of them go into saloons, which is worse. And look at the cheap jewelry on the women. Why, they all wear imitation pearls! Look at the banners across the streets with 'balls' and 'concerts' at 25 cents in big letters. I tell you, they waste their money."

"These people must have some pleasures," Philip said.

"Not at first. They must cut out pleasures at first. I did. If they want to escape from these tenements they've got to save."

"So you think they can escape by saving? Do you know that New York has miles and miles of streets like these, with a million human beings herded in foul, dark rooms? Can they all escape by saving?"

Haggleton started to reply, but Philip went on quickly, his voice rising with intenser feeling:

"I'll tell you how one man escaped by saving." He pointed down Orchard street. "He lived in that second house. He was a poor capmaker, and he shot himself because he was out of work and couldn't bear to see his wife and little children suffer. He knew they would get the insurance money, anyway. That's how he saved. And two years ago, over there on Eldridge street"—he pointed again—"I found a family of poor Jews living in a dark corner of the hallway under the stairs. There was no window, no door. It wasn't a room at all—only a narrow slanting space roughly boarded off—and the landlord made them pay $8 a month for it. There the mother had a baby. That's how they saved."

"These tenements are nothing like as bad as they were forty years ago," replied Haggleton. "What do you think they did with the garbage forty years ago? Threw it into the streets for the pigs to eat. Yes, sir! Pigs were the public scavengers. This whole region was so filthy that—well, it was cleaned out by cholera and yellow fever more than once. You knew that, didn't you? And smallpox was the regular thing. Why, the health wardens used to stand on the sidewalk and shout to people upstairs who had it to put camphor in their clothes and burn some in the stove. That's how they fought disease!"

"Who told you that?" questioned Philip.

"Nobody told me. I saw it. I lived here," answered Haggleton. "And there were slaughter houses everywhere, and fat boilers, and such vile tenements that— They're all gone now—'Bone alley' and 'Kerosene row' and the 'Big Flat' in Mott street and 'Bandits' roost'—but I tell you it was worth a man's life to go past them at night. Now you can go anywhere."

Philip smiled.

"I'll show you a few places where you won't enjoy yourself at night. Still, I admit, we've improved in some things, but we've gone back in others. There may not be as many pigs and murderers about, but there's a lot more consumption and overcrowding. Do you see that little block just ahead? It's only 75 by 200 feet. How many people do you suppose live in it? Guess."

"Seventy-five feet by two hundred," reflected Haggleton, studying the front of the block, with its swarms of children. "Let's see—a thousand?"

"Two thousand nine hundred and sixty-nine by actual count, and that was five years ago—the population of a good sized town in the space of one of your stables!"

"Good Lord!" exclaimed Haggleton. "How many would that give to a house?"

"From a hundred to a hundred and fifty. We're passing through the most densely populated region in the world, and—you own about half of it."

"Not that block?"

"No, but you own enough others. I'll show you some presently."

Haggleton stopped and laid a kindly hand on Philip's shoulder.

"My boy, you think too much about the weak. Think about the strong. Don't you see that this tenement struggle makes men stronger? You know it does. Would you be the man you are if you'd been coddled in luxury, with everything made easy? I tell you half the big fellows in this country owe their success to being born poor. I tell you, young man, poverty's about the finest school we've got." He paused and then added impressively, "I'm one of the graduates."

"I know," said Philip, "but there are other graduates, and—speaking of wrecks"— He stopped and looked at his watch. "That reminds me I must telephone." He turned into a drug store and called up the Atlantic Wrecking company. "Too bad!" he exclaimed after a brief communication. "There's a grain boat sunk in the East river off Grand street; I've got to see about it."

Haggleton accompanied Philip and got a glimpse of life on the big pontoons and several thrills of pleasure as he noted the young man's quick resourcefulness and a pang of apprehension as he watched him swing off the ladder in his ugly suit and disappear beneath the bubbling river.

As there was a cold rain falling, they spent the waiting hours in the cozy cabin of the Dunderberg, and the crew told stories about perils of the deep.

They had supper with the crew and then started back for New York, taking the ferry to Twenty-third street, where there was something Philip wanted to show Haggleton.

"We'll look in here first," he said and stopped before a large building on First avenue. "This is the Municipal Lodging House. They take in two or three hundred homeless men every night."

"How many homeless men are there in New York?"

"Twenty thousand or so."

"Twenty thousand homeless men!" repeated Haggleton. "And what do the others do, those who can't stay here?"

"About 3,000 walk the streets," replied Philip.

"Not on cold nights like this?"

"On cold nights and on hot nights. They huddle in alleyways out of the wind. They crouch over gratings above engine rooms and get the warm air. They stand in the midnight bread lines and then go back to their holes."

"There are 3,000 like that in New York?"

"Yes."

"And the rest?"

"The rest pay 10 or 15 cents in cheap lodging houses. You'll see."

"What do they pay here?"

"Nothing, but the same man may not come more than three times in a month. If he does he goes to the stone pile. So they're careful. Come in."

The office attendants nodded pleasantly to Philip.

Downstairs they saw these men stripped of their clothes (some of them peeled off two or three sets of garments—their whole wardrobe) and scrubbed under a hot shower bath. One man's legs were blotched with sores (from low vitality, the doctor said), and one had a deeply ulcerated heel from walking on his uppers.

Philip now led the way into another lodging house, in the opposite block. "This place accommodates about 400, and the men pay from 15 to 25 cents a night. There's no compulsory bath, and as for cleanliness—look!"

Philip pointed out that each cot had a small, dirty locker for the men's clothes, where abundant cracks encouraged the free circulation of vermin.

"They get no nightgowns," continued Philip, "and the sheets are changed only once or twice a week. Many of the men have loathsome diseases, many have consumption, and there's no doubt consumption and other diseases can be transmitted from man to man by the contamination of sheets."

"How many of these lodging houses are there?"

"About 140, and you've seen the best. The others are so filthy that—well, I asked an attendant once how often they washed the towels, and he said, with a grin: 'Wash 'em? We never wash 'em. We use 'em until they break.'"

They went to Grand street and visited more of these sinister asylums on the Bowery where bunks are offered to human wrecks at 20 or 15 or 10 cents a night or less. In one hideous resort on Mulberry street, where the charge was 7 cents, they found men ranged along in hammocks, with neither sheets nor covers, and dozens sleeping on the bare floor.

"Pretty bad," muttered Haggleton, "but what's your idea in showing me all this?"

"It's a problem for you to solve. We have ideas, but you'll have better ones before you get through."

"Why do you say that?" asked Haggleton.

"Because you have a great brain. You know how to organize. Well, organize these wasted lives, find some place for them. It's up to you."

Haggleton shook his head.

"I'm not responsible for these lodging houses."

"You are responsible," flashed Philip, "because it's men like you who own them; it's men like you who take the dimes and pennies of these poor devils—talk about tainted money—a million dollars in lodging house money paid every year in New York city by your fellow graduates in poverty."

"No, no," objected Haggleton. "It's not poverty that brought them where they are; it's drink and laziness."

Philip paused, and his eyes met the old man's in steady defiance. Then he said slowly: "No; you are wrong. These men are products of conditions. It's years of bad air in your tenements and of underfeeding at your wages that make them crave drink. It's a childhood wasted in brutalizing labor that has weakened their bodies and dulled their minds. There are 20,000 of them in New York, Mr. Haggleton, who are bums, wrecks, lodging house loafers, but don't forget that they are victims of a cruel order which for the vast majority gives poverty as the only reward of toil."

"Nonsense!" said Haggleton.

Humor In Advertising.

It is agreed on all sides that as a rule humorous advertisements are to be avoided. Business is business, and the businesslike ad. is the one that counts. Nevertheless it is interesting to come upon an odd, amusing or out of the ordinary specimen—for instance, that of the photographer who made a specialty of baby photographs. His advertisement read:

"Bring your dear little babies. If they don't sit still I won't get cross. I was a baby once myself."

What is especially rare is to find an advertiser who will exhibit any candor about the negative qualities of his goods. It is all the more refreshing, then, to peruse the announcement of an innkeeper in one of the smaller states who was evidently burning with a desire to tell the exact truth about his establishment:

"Not the largest hotel in the town, not newly furnished throughout, no free bus to train, not the best grub the market affords, but simply clean beds and good food, 25 cents to sleep, 25 cents to eat. Toothpicks and ice water thrown in. Try us. Pay up. And if not satisfied keep mum!"—London Answers.

The Cold Water Cure.

If you feel a cold coming on, drink a glass of cold water, not iced, and repeat at half hour intervals until relief is felt. If hot water is easier to take, it can be substituted for the cold, particularly in the morning and at night. Taking an abundance of liquid matters more than its temperature. It is there where the patients fall short. They will drink a glass or two of water, then declare they can take no more and, ceasing, decide water cannot drive out a cold. This water cure is not so modern as the most of us think it. In an old prescription book of a famous physician of more than a hundred years ago this curious remedy for a cold is found: "Let ye patient who feels a cold coming on eat of a fine, big salt herring just before going to bed. This will make ye patient drink plenty of water." If you have not strength of purpose to drink freely of water for the cold's sake, make yourself thirsty as best you can—only take all the water possible.—Philadelphia Press.

Hanged For Violating Smoke Law.

Curious and little known facts about the house fire were mentioned by E. H. Blake, addressing the surveyors' institution on warming and ventilation. Fires were at one time a great luxury, he said, and even the right to use the fire had been bequeathed. Thus the will of one Richard Byrchett (1516) read:

"I will yt sayd Nell my wyfe shal have ye chamber she lyes in and lyberte at ye fyer in the house; all yese thyngs shal she have so long as sh_ys wido."

Coal, continued Mr. Blake, was first imported into London at the end of the thirteenth century, but the smoke produced by burning it in improperly constructed grates caused such a prejudice against it that in 1306 a law was passed making it a capital offense to burn coal in the city. The Tower records give details of a man's trial and execution for the offense.—London Graphic.

Not the Kind He Wanted.

Professed politicians who have reduced public office to an exact science find the independent voter a sad stumbling block, a fact which is amusingly disclosed by a story found in the life of the late George Monro Grant, the eminent Canadian educator and clergyman.

Toward the end of Sir John Macdonald's life he and Principal Grant, then the head of Queen's college, met at a dinner at the house of the premier's brother-in-law, Professor Williamson.

"How I wish," the premier said to the principal, "that you would be a steady friend of mine."

"My dear Sir John," the principal replied, "I have always supported you when you were right."

The premier's eyes twinkled, and he laid his hand upon the shoulder of the principal.

"My dear man," said he, "I have no use for that species of friendship!"

Greatness Not Free From Shame.

The transcendent power and fame with which great genius has at different periods endowed various men do not always insure them from after misery and shame. This was strikingly exemplified in the cases of the four greatest of military conquerors—Alexander, Hannibal, Caesar and Napoleon. The general judgment of mankind has conceded them the first place in the lines of action for which they were severally distinguished. Yet they all met with melancholy deaths. Two of them suffered for years the keenest humiliations which a total destruction of their hopes could bring. Two perished at the zenith of their power, just as they might have expected a long enjoyment of the fruits of their tremendous achievements.—Exchange.

The Greatest Wealth.

Is there any compensation in money for a starved, stunted, dwarfed mind? Can lands and houses, stocks and bonds, pay a man for living a narrow, rutty, sordid life? How much money would match the wealth of a trained mind, of unfolded possibilities? Is the capacity for the appreciation of the meaning of life, of the lessons of civilization, worth no more than one's bread and butter and roof? Can any one conceive of greater possessions than an intellect well trained and disciplined, than a broad, deep, full orbed mind responsive to all beauty, all good?—Orison Swett Marden in Success Magazine.

Optimistic.

"My wife is a very optimistic woman."

"Indeed she is."

"Noticed it, have you?"

"Yes; when I was talking with her yesterday she said that if you ever died she would marry again because she felt sure that she could do better next time."—Houston Post.

Triumphs of Travel.

"Now he's bragging about how he did Venice."

"What do you mean?"

"Most tourists spend a week in Venice. He did it in a day."—Kansas City Journal.

No Excuse.

"Is that horse you bought a kicker?"

"A kicker?" answered Mr. Sirius Barker. "I am the fellow who paid twice his value and who is buying the feed. What has the horse got to kick about?"—Washington Star.

His Misfortune.

The Poet—Poets are born, not made.

The Girl—I know. I wasn't blaming you.—Boston Transcript.

There are certain flowers the perfume of which, it is said, is produced by microbes.

MODERN HAIR DRESSING

has played havoc with the tresses of the fair sex, and druggists everywhere comment on the fact that they are selling large quantities of sage for making the old-fashioned "sage tea," such as was used by our grandmothers for promoting the growth of their hair and restoring its natural color. The demand for this well-known herb for this purpose has been so great that one manufacturer has taken advantage of the fact, and has placed on the market an ideal "sage tea," containing sulphur, a valuable remedy for dandruff and scalp rashes and irritations. This preparation, which is called Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur, is sold by all leading druggists for 50 cents and $1 a bottle, or will be sent direct by the Wyeth Chemical Company, 74 Cortlandt St., New York City, upon receipt of price.

THE WEATHER

Local forecast for Quincy and vicinity:

Wednesday, fair with slowly rising temperature; light variable winds.

Thursday promises to be fair and warmer, with southerly to westerly winds.

The temperature at noon today was 35 degrees; a year ago 65 degrees.

BRIEFS

Mrs. Kitson of Merrymount road returned this morning from a few days trip to New York.

A rally in the interest of Mayor Shea will be held at Quincy Point tonight, and one in the interest of Mr. Nichols at Wollaston.

The Merrymount Riding club rode to Hingham Saturday night and had dinner at the Cushing house, returning by moonlight. Nine of the club were present and it was a jolly outing.

The six-masted schooner Wyoming, the largest wooden sailing vessel in the world, is to be launched at Bath, Me., Dec. 14. She will probably be christened by one or both daughters of Gov. Brooks of Wyoming.

A meeting of the trustees of Fore River bridge was held at City Hall this morning. It was voted to put in some new dolphins an dmake other repairs necessary to make the bridge safe during the coming winter months.

An enthusiastic meeting of the Anti-Tuberculosis Society was held at the office of its president, H. M. Faxon, Monday night, nearly every member of the committee being present. Work will commence at once on the tuberculosis camp.

A special meeting of the Dorcas society was held in the vestry of the Universalist church, Tuesday evening and final preparations were made for the fair to be held next week.

Mrs. Charles Thompson of Whitney road entertained at her home Tuesday afternoon, the party being one of the series of eight being held this winter for various worthy charities.

The endless chain series of parties of eight to be given the coming season for charity was started merrily on its way last week at the home of Mrs. Theophilus King, Adams street. As each of the eight present is pledged to entertain eight others in some way it looks like an active season of parties as the eight goes on indefinitely and constantly increasing. The character of the entertainment is whatever the hostesses fancy and promises a variety. An automobile party is already booked.

A most successful surprise party was held in Electa hall Tuesday evening, the surprised one being Miss Katharine Regan of Quincy Point. Edward Donovan presented Miss Regan with a gold bracelet in behalf of her friends who gathered. There were solos during the evening by William Carrigan, and Edward Donovan, and buck and wing exhibition dance by an expert. Wilson's orchestra furnished the music and dancing was enjoyed from 8 to 11. The committee in charge consisted of Josephine Burns, Ella Regan and May Carrigan.

Members of the Arts and Crafts classes of the Quincy Women's club will be interested to know that right here in the city at the store of Nathan Amos on Granite street they can get every kind of a tool to work with also pierced brass patterns and supplies.

FATAL FOOTBALL ACCIDENTS

Gridiron's Death Roll Twice That of Last Year.

TWENTY-NINE MEMBERS KILLED

In Injury List Fractured Collar Bones Predominate, Followed by Noses, Arms, Legs, Ribs In Order Named. Minor Injuries More Numerous.

Despite the efforts of the football solons to open up the game and minimize the injuries, death's toll from the great college sport will be far greater this year than that of any previous gridiron season. Already no less than twenty-nine college or schoolboy players have either been killed in games or have died this year directly as the result of injuries sustained. This number is unprecedented in the history of college football, and with more than a score of players tossing today upon hospital cots hovering between life and death the number is certain to be substantially increased before the end of 1909. That the deaths from football a year ago will be doubled in 1909 appears to be a foregone conclusion.

In 1905, when the high water mark of deaths of former years in football was reached, there was a tremendous agitation all along the line. Eminent educators and authorities, led by President C. W. Eliot of Harvard university, made a determined fight for the abolition of all intercollegiate contests. The result was a revision of the rules and the introduction of the new football, replete with its forward passes and onside kicks. Even those who made the changes in the rules in the hope of debrutalizing the sport now admit that they have failed, in a measure at least, in their purpose, although from the standpoint of the spectator the game is probably more spectacular than ever before. But with the increase in the spectacular has come, this year at least, an increase in the number of fatalities and of injuries.

The injuries from football of a less serious nature than those actually resulting in death or permanent disability also promise to be unusually heavy this fall, judging not only from the reports of fractures already received, but from the records of breaks, dislocations and bruises kept by the trainers and physicians in attendance upon the big college elevens like Yale and Harvard, Princeton and Pennsylvania. Everywhere the report is the same. It is that the minor injuries are more numerous and more severe than a year ago. The reason is hard to find, except that injuries are an inherent element of football, for no radical changes in the rules for better or for worse were made by the gridiron legislators between last season and the current one.

The compilation of anything approaching a complete list of fractures sustained in football during the playing season is out of the question for the reason that so far as is possible football coaches and trainers conceal injuries to their squads so that football may look as good as possible before the public. Were it possible to compile an accurate list with all of the necessary statistics available it is certain that the names of over a thousand college and high school players would be included in the tabulation of fractures alone.

Where there is one broken bone there are easily a half dozen dislocations, sprains, wrenches or body bruises that compel temporary absence from practice on the part of the victims. It is well within the limitations of reason to assert that deaths, fractures, dislocations, bruises and minor hurts received every year by those who participate in the gridiron game amount close to 10,000.

The appended table of nearly 300 fractures thus far reported gives a pretty fair idea of the bones most generally broken upon the football field. In this list collar bone fractures predominate, with sixty, or about 20 per cent of the total. Fractured noses come second, with a percentage of approximately 14 per cent, the exact number of fractured nasal appendages being forty-two. Broken legs rank third in the list, with thirty-six, while broken ribs and arms make a pretty fight for fourth place, with twenty-six and twenty-four respectively. Then come ankles and shoulders, with twenty and nineteen, and so on through the list. The new rules have tended to diminish the number of fractured ribs, but only at the cost of other broken bones.

The deaths in football to date have resulted in more agitation against football this fall than at any time since the present playing rules were adopted. The representative varsity coaches of the country realize as well as the opponents of the game that something must be done, some new rules adopted, by which the risk of death or injury must be greatly reduced. The winter session of the football rules committee in New York this year is sure to be of unusual length and will result in some rather wholesale and radical changes following a discussion in which the sponsors for football in every section of the country are pretty sure to participate.

THE SEA ELEPHANT.

His Fearful Jaws the Chief Danger In an Attack.

The chief danger attending the killing of the sea elephant is in approaching too near his terrible jaws, which are capable of biting in two an iron rod the thickness of one's finger. The hunter, however, must get pretty close, as the thick hide and blubber have rendered the animal practically impervious to attack, the only vulnerable point being a spot about the size of a walnut above each eye. Careless hunters have at times got within reach of the brute's teeth and have escaped only by dexterously wriggling from their clothes. I had occasion once to shed my coat with great agility, one of the smaller beasts having caught me by the sleeve, says Captain B. D. Cleveland in the American Magazine.

One afternoon's kill had been about forty animals, some of which had given me and my four hunters considerable trouble. This was mainly due to the treacherous footing and the heavy nature of the work, not only in killing, but in stripping the ponderous brutes. We were anxious to make the afternoon's kill an even fifty, and night was fast coming on.

In cutting out two particularly hard fighters, a male and female, I had overlooked a young bull partly hidden behind an ice hummock. We had stripped both animals and, walking over to the hummock where our guns were stacked, I was leaning to pick mine up when, with a bellow of rage, the young bull reared and whipped his flail-like flippers at me. Luckily the guns were stacked so as to form a temporary barrier, but unluckily one thick paw was impaled on a bayonet. Rearing in fresh rage, the animal lunged at me with incredible speed, snapping the gun between his javelin teeth as though it were a straw. I leaped backward, but slipped.

Instantly he clutched at my body, but missed in the semidarkness, lunged and clutched again, catching my right arm in his powerful maw. His awkwardness enabled me to regain my feet, but, with a ripping tug, the animal fastened on to the sleeve of my heavy skin jacket, out of which I slipped just as one of my men drove a harpoon into him just above the eye.

EUGENIE'S WEDDING DAY.

The Gift of Violets From the Market Women of Paris.

Even on her wedding day the Empress Eugenie received a sign of ill omen. The market women of Paris presented her with a mountain of violets on the day of her marriage to Louis Napoleon.

And those market women—they boiled over! They yelled and pushed and crowded into the palace gardens. They screeched and screamed for the empress until at last a window opened, and Eugenie stepped out on the balcony, and, ever eager to please, she held in her hands a great mass of the violets the market women had sent her.

Then suddenly one old fish wife shrieked out at those of the committee: "Pigs! Idiots! It is the flower of sorrow you have sent to her." While quick another raved out: "It is the color of mourning that you send the bride of the emperor! Violets—purple violets to a bride! Pigs! Idiots! Devils! It is an omen—a sign of evil!"

And then the fight began! Oh, mon Dieu! They are terrible! They tear one another like wild beasts! The gendarmes try hard to make order, when a voice up above us says out clear and gentle, "Oh, soldiers, don't hurt them!" And the idea that any soldier on earth could hurt a dame des Halles was so funny that everybody stopped fighting to laugh. And they laugh and laugh and wipe off the blood and slap the gendarmes and say, "Don't hurt us, messieurs—don't!" And they dance and shout, and the beautiful empress stands now by the emperor and bows and throws violets to the crowd, and all below cry, "Vive l'Imperatrice!" And she smiles and smiles and so retires. But that old witch was right! Yes, madame, though the violet was the flower of the Bonaparte, it is the flower of sorrow, not fit to send a bride! It was an omen and given at the Tuileries it pointed to Chiselhurst. —Clara Morris in Woman's Home Companion.

Ups and Downs.

"Ups and downs," said an etymologist, "is a phrase of curious aptness.

"Take ups. Aviators tell us, balloonists tell us, alpinists tell us, that the higher one ascends, the more exhilarating grows the air, so that it is quite common, at a height of a mile or so, for men to sing and shout in pure hilarity and joy. So much for ups.

"Take downs. Submarine boatmen and divers and miners tell us that the deeper one descends below the earth's surface, the sadder one becomes. Those depths resound with oaths, groans, sobs. So much for downs.

"Ups and downs—an apt phrase, truly."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Crime and Penalty.

Aunt Jane—I think the young man who tried to steal a kiss should be punished. Dorothy—So do I, aunty, dear. Aunt Jane—I am glad to hear you say that, child. Dorothy—Yes; he—he should be punished severely for only trying.—Rochester Democrat.

Pandemonium.

"Nature knew what she was doing when she deprived fishes of a voice."

"How do you make that out?"

"What if a fish had to cackle over every egg it laid?"—Cleveland Leader.

Money may not be able to buy happiness, but it can buy off a great deal of unhappiness.—Lyndon.

BOYS ACTIVE AT Y. M. C. A.

Director Clee Has Many Attractions Planned

The activities of the Boys' Department of the Quincy Young Men's Christian Association are more numerous than ever. The interest shown by the boys is far beyond expectations and a bigger and better year than ever is now a reality. The membership is increasing daily and for the size of our city is now one of the largest Boy's Departments in the State. The events now planned are in three groups, Employed Boys, Junior Boys and Students.

The College Club for students is a wonder and is doing a great work. It has planned a meeting for every Tuesday afternoon and also a college night for Friday night of this week, at which the captain of last year's baseball team of Harvard will speak. Students of Quincy are invited to be present and enjoy the evening.

The next event under the direction of the club is a winner. It is the first annual banquet of the club on Dec. 17. The speakers are "Dou" Minot of Harvard football team and H. W. Gibson of Boston. Big preparations are being made, and this banquet bids fair to be the finest event ever held for older students.

Capt. Fish is also booked for Quincy Association. Basket ball is fast on the way and will be a strong feature as last year.

For Employed Boys the social committee have planned a supper for Dec. 14. A practical talk is booked and every Employed Boy in the Association is going to take part. At this meeting a new organization for Employed Boys is to be formed and the big work now progressing for these fellows will be carried on to a greater degree.

For Juniors the regular schedule will be kept moving, and a number of new ones. The Saturday morning meetings, which have been more than successful this season are a big feature and Saturday morning J. A. Matheson will speak on "Ragged Edges."

Dec. 11 and 18 the attraction is stereopticon and story of "Ted or what became of Hooking Jack."

Dec. 11 a social for Juniors at which George Phillips will speak on "Submarine Diving." At these morning meetings every boy in Quincy is invited to come and have a part in the big things.

All the outside clubs at South Quincy, Wollaston and Atlantic are as busy as usual, and have their schedules complete for the balance of the year.

All Bible Study clubs meet weekly as usual Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday. All the boys committees are working constantly keeping before them the motto of "Do Your Best." This is indeed a great year for the Boy's Department of the Association and every boy of Quincy ought to be in and "help the other fellow."

POOL TOURNAMENT.

The pool tournament which was agitated at the Y. M. C. A. early in the fall is about to become an actual fact. A committee chosen has prepared, a list of names and any one who has not been asked can enter if they will notify Harry Glover or Joseph Hogan. Great interest is being shown in this movement as there are several members who are very good with the cue, and the question of supremacy will be decided in this tournament. If you are a Y. M. C. A. member and a pool player see either Harry Glover, or Joseph Hogan at once and be listed, as it will commence in a few days.

BASKET BALL.

The Houghs Neck Independents will line up against the Dorchester Stars this evening at Pandora hall and a red hot game is expected. The Houghs Neck team has got the jump on all the other teams in the city, having already played four or five games, and they should give the fast Dorchester team a good argument. Such men as Larry Curly, Louis Abbott and Belly Robertson will be seen on the Dorchester five.

TODAY'S COURT.

John Higgins was fined $5 for trespass at Quincy. Appealed.

George Egan was fined $3 for drunkenness at Quincy.

Antonio Amarose was fined $20 for drunkenness at Braintree.

Fred E. Tucker was fined $13.56 costs for violation of the automobile law at Cohasset.

A Letter from Mr. HENRY RUSSELL
Director of the Boston Opera Company
And the Boston Opera School, in regard to the
Jewett Pianos

Gentlemen: I am glad to say that the Jewett pianos which we are using in the Boston Opera School are proving very satisfactory.

We planned to provide the School from the outset with the best possible equipment and, in the matter of pianos, we fixed a high standard of artistic requirements. It is, therefore, gratifying to have the wisdom of our choice of the Jewett Pianos thoroughly established by the excellent qualities of tone and action which these instruments reveal it actual use in the School.

Respectfully yours
HENRY RUSSELL

Their musical superiority makes the Jewett pianos the favorite instruments among well informed people in New England. So great is their popularity that each year probably more Jewett pianos are sold in this territory than of any other make of equal grade.

A variety of styles at from $375 up.

Purchasers of Jewett pianos secure —

Durability proved by actual test since 1860, rare musical quality recognized by competent authorities everywhere, case designs of unusual attractiveness, workmanship of the most reliable and skilful order, and finally, the absolutely dependable guarantee of New England's largest piano house.

Moderate monthly payments if desired.

COLD WATER THROWN ON NEW COURTHOUSE

Board of Trade Not As United As It Should Be to Succeed

A regular meeting of the Board of Trade was held Wednesday evening at its rooms in the Adams building, President Richards presiding.

A communication was received from Frank F. Crane giving a report of the Atlantic Deeper Water Ways convention and stating that he had been appointed a delegate to the Rivers and Harbors Congress that meets in Washington, Dec. 8, 9, and 10.

It was voted that he be appointed a delegate of the Board of Trade at this convention.

A communication was received from the Sorosis Shoe Company of Lynn in answer to a letter from the board, asking what inducements the board could offer to have the plant located in Quincy. Referred to the committee on new industries.

Under reports of special committees, the committee on the new court house building for Quincy reported that the committee had not met as yet. This opened up some discussion.

A. W. Thompson thought the opinion of Judge Avery should first be obtained.

E. J. Sandberg said if Judge Avery was opposed to a new court house there must be something wrong. He never knew a judge to be against a proposition of that kind, and he would be surprised if Judge Avery was against it.

At this point it was suggested that if a petition was to be presented it should be done at once as the time was short.

John A. McDonnell questioned if we got another county building. It was a question if the Legislature would appropriate money. It seemed to him that the more freedom we have the more monstrous buildings we see for courts. In countries where they are not as civilized as here there are no court buildings and the people have but little use for lawyers. It was something worth considering the erection of these costly buildings for a small minority of the people. The majority of our people were never inside a court house.

Mr. Sandberg said he understood that the committee had full power to draft a petition and send it to the County Commissioners.

Mr. Thompson was inclined to agree with Mr. McDonnell that there was some doubts about getting a building here.

W. H. Teasdale thought it a good idea to make a try for a building, even if we did not get it. At some future day a building will have to be erected, and if Quincy has its bid in first we can say we were the first to ask for it.

C. C. Foster thought now was the time to ask for the building.

Albert Whitman said a city as large as Quincy should have a court building and if we fight for it we can get it.

Eugene R. Stone said if we ask for it this year we would have a claim on it. It was a good idea to start the thing moving.

James M. Nowland could see where a session of the superior court here would be of great benefit. We should first get a session of the court here. Just what benefit a court building would be he could not see unless it was to ornament the square. Our first

COMMISSIONER HAMPERED

Says Councilman Gardner at Ward Five Rally

There was a well attended rally and smoke talk of the Republican voters of Precinct 2, Ward Five at Wollaston Club hall Wednesday night, presided over by Dr. F. E. Dawes, at which the Republican candidate for Mayor, Walter F. Nichols and Representative Langelier spoke, and the various councilmen.

Mr. Nichols outlined some of the campaign issues such as reorganization of water department, heavy and constantly increasing debt and interest burdens, more thorough care in expenditure of money appropriated by the Council. He arraigned the administration for the present shameful condition of the Wollaston school building on Beale street, for its entire failure to energetically remand from the State and Metropolitan Park authorities something more for Quincy than two dead end driveways, and a restricted entrance into the Blue Hills Reservation. If elected Mayor he declared these matters would be vigorously pushed.

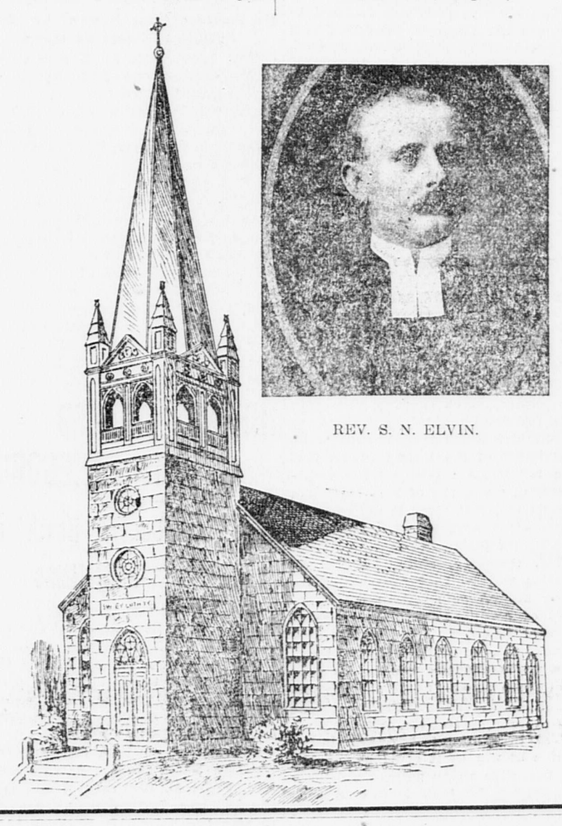
Representative Langelier confined most of his remarks to the political situation, and a plea for united work on the part of Republican committees and individual interest on the part of the candidate's friends.

Councilman Gardner spoke at some length and defended the councils extraordinarily large appropriations this year for street building and repairs on the ground that such were demanded by the people, but he deplored the fact that on account of the Commission being hampered results were unsatisfactory, and we were not getting a dollar's value for the dollar expended. He hoped, to see the Council's work supplemented and upheld by a Republican administration next year.

Fred R. Snow, the candidate for Council from precinct 2, said he believed he could do more effective work for Candidate Nichols and the Republican cause by quiet work than speech making. He would give his best efforts in the Council to satisfy his supporters.

In answer to the question of present outlook President Chase of the Republican City Committee said predictions were useless. There seemed, he said, to be an undercurrent of dissatisfaction with the democratic administration and its strength was problematical. The city would undoubtedly give a much greater Republican vote than last year and the result rested largely with the voters of Ward Five. The normal Republican vote in this ward would undoubtedly elect Mr. Nichols.

Brief remarks were made by the new members of the Ward Committee, Messrs Walter G. Field, William H. Leslie and Frederick G. Thayer, also by John Morgan, William H. Hingstone and others.



At the conclusion of the rally at Wollaston, Candidate Nichols hurried to Houghs Neck, where he addressed the Houghs Neck Associates at Pandora hall. Mr. Nichols' address was similar to that at South Quincy and Wollaston, as he confined himself to some of the prime issues of the campaign.

For Mayor Shea and the Democratic Candidates

At the Democratic rally held in Yules hall Wednesday evening, the Democratic candidates for the City Council from Ward Two were enthusiastically received. It was one of the largest crowds that ever turned out for a political rally in the ward, the hall being crowded to the doors.

William Carey as chairman, called the meeting to order. He then introduced Charles J. McGilvray who spoke mostly for the head of the ticket, William T. Shea.

Edward P. Histon candidate for election to the council was the next speaker and made a good impression. He asked for a chance to show what he could do for one year and at the

BRIEFS

A grand fair will be held next Tuesday and Wednesday evenings at the vestry of the Universalist church.

Mr. and Mrs. David Hansen of Lincoln avenue, Wollaston announce the birth of a son.

The annual meeting and election of officers of Quincy council, Knights of Columbus, will be held this evening.

The athletic meet of the Wollaston and Massachusetts Fields schools to have been held Wednesday was postponed for a few days.

The extremes of December noon temperature in Quincy since 1895 have been 67 on Dec. 12, 1899, and 2 below zero on Dec. 9 1902. Last December the noon extremes were 65 and 19.

Mrs. F. J. Goodwin of Pawtucket, R. I., will read a paper on "Diversion of Power" at the meeting of the Y. M. C. A. Auxiliary on Friday afternoon at the residence of Mrs. E. W. Sheppard on Greenleaf street.

Boys interested in the temperance prize speaking contest are requested to meet at Protection hall at 4 P. M. today. The boys will parade over a short route Saturday evening before the speaking at Faxon hall.

AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE.

The Massachusetts Agricultural College has recently issued an illustrated booklet which contains a large amount of interesting information about the institution—its object, entrance requirements, courses of study, equipment, student life, opportunities for its graduates, etc. It is illustrated with about twenty-five views which indicate that at Amherst, a spot of unusual natural beauty, there is located one of the most progressive and adequately equipped educational institutions of New England. It is also evident that the college is thoroughly preparing young men for positions of trust and influence in the various agricultural vocations. One of the noticeable features about the institution is that this fall its entering class numbers 130, and that its total enrolment of four year students is 315, both these figures represent an increase in attendance of over 100 per cent. in the last six years. A copy of this publication may be secured by writing to the president's office and asking for the M. A. C. booklet.

CRISIS IS CLOSE TO WAR STATUS

Secretary Knox Gives Passports to Zelaya's Representative

DELIVERS SCATHING LETTER

Chief Executive of Nicaragua Branded Practically as a Common Malefactor, Whose Administration Has Been a Blot Upon Name of Good Government—Cause of Revolutionists Recognized by United States—Murder of Americans Denounced

Washington, Dec. 2.—Secretary of State Knox late yesterday returned the passports of Felipe Rodriguez, charge d'affaires of the Nicaraguan legation, with a letter scathingly denouncing the Zelayan administration of the government of Nicaragua.

The letter is definitely declared to express the views of President Taft and is about as plain-spoken as anything emanating from the state department in many years.

The extraordinary feature of the letter is that it seems to evince a determination on the part of the United States to hold President Zelaya personally responsible for the alleged torture and execution of the Americans—Cannon and Groce—and it exhibits the unique situation of one government holding the chief executive of another practically as a common malefactor.

Zelaya is branded as a violator of solemn international conventions, a disturber of the national and international peace, a tyrant whose administration has been a blot upon the name of good government.

Secretary Knox virtually announces the recognition of the Nicaraguan revolutionists and declares it to be the conviction of the United States that the revolution represents the sentiments of a majority of the Nicaraguan people and that there is evidently no responsible government with which the United States can deal.

He, therefore, announces that all parties will be held accountable for their actions as affecting the interests of Americans and the peace of Central America. He further informed Rodriguez that while he has lost his diplomatic quality he may still serve as an "unofficial" channel of communication with the faction which he is regarded as representing.

This brings the crisis as near to the status of war as it could be brought by executive action without a definite declaration by both houses of congress, which will convene next Monday.

Mr. Knox's letter in all but so many words makes it plain that his action represents the wish and attitude of all the Central American states with the single exception of Honduras, which is regarded here as entirely dominated by Zelaya. Mexico has all along shown its sympathy with the United States in this matter.

Just what status the consular representatives of the United States in Nicaragua now enjoy is not definitely explained. It is expected, however, that Vice Consul Caldera, who has been occupying the legation in Managua, with the other consuls in that country, will be given their passports today. This is the usual procedure in such international cases as this.

GUESTS GET A SCARE

All Escape Safely When Fire Destroys Wing of a Lewiston Hotel

Lewiston, Me., Dec. 2.—Considerable excitement was caused among the 100 guests at the New DeWitt hotel by a fire which started in the boiler room and burned out the wing in which the kitchen was located.

The loss is estimated at $40,000. Some damage was done to the other portions of the hotel by smoke and water.

The guests were able to leave the building without difficulty, and no one was injured.

EARS BOXED IN PUBLIC

Critic of London Times Assaulted by Husband of a Singer

London, Dec. 2.—Resenting a notice which appeared in The Times concerning his wife, Clara Butt, the singer, R. K. Rumford, who is also a vocalist, went to Queen's hall during a concert and called The Times critic, Mr. Colles, into the vestibule and publicly boxed his ears.

Rumford has declined to apologize and Colles declares his intention of bringing proceedings in police court.

Lunatic Escapes From Asylum

Newburyport, Mass., Dec. 2.—The local police are keeping sharp watch for Fred Thompson of this city, who escaped from the Danvers insane asylum. Thompson was sent to Danvers on complaint of his wife, and it is feared he may return and do her harm.

Mitchell Takes Charge of The Sun

New York, Dec. 2.—Edward P. Mitchell, for many years on the editorial staff of the New York Sun, has been elected president of the Sun Printing and Publishing association, succeeding the late William M. Laffan.

MORE EVICTIONS TODAY

State Officials to Make Personal Investigation of Conditions at Ludlow

Ludlow, Mass., Dec. 2.—Nearly every deputy sheriff and special officer in the vicinity of Ludlow and Springfield has been ordered to report here today, when thirty more evictions are scheduled to take place.

What will add special interest to the events of today will be the presence of Lieutenant Governor Frothingham, who, with a party of counsellors, plans to make a visit to Ludlow. The visit will be unofficial, however, with nothing more in mind than to see personally the conditions which exist.

The situation remains very much the same. That there is little actual want evident now among the strikers is due to active interest shown by charitably-inclined people in the surrounding districts. A relief fund has already been started.

Bread, vegetables, meat and whatever else may be used by the homeless foreigners are being distributed where they will do the most good.

RARE PAINTING IN GOTHAM

Its Presence Made Known by Suit Against a Storage Company

New York, Dec. 2.—The presence in New York of one of the most celebrated paintings of the seventeenth century Italian artist, Maffeo d'Verona, valued at $100,000, and entitled "The Last Judgment," was made known when its owners, Mrs. Irene G. Coe and Mrs. Pauline Gieger, brought suit to collect $5000 damages against a storage company in whose warehouse it is alleged that the painting had a hole torn in it.

An attorney for the Fine Arts society, who appeared for the plaintiffs, said that the Italian government was not aware that the painting had left Italian territory. A copy of this, the original, he said, hung in the Cathedral of St. Mark in Venice.

INFANTS QUIETED WITH PAREGORIC

May Have Caused Death of Many In Baby Home

Providence, Dec. 2.—That the administration of drugs was made at the Myrtle baby home to keep the children quiet when they were restless was brought out at the coroner's inquest on the deaths of twenty-four infants in the home since June 19.

Overseer of the Poor Calef, in his testimony, told Coroner Babcock that Mrs. Ethel L. Gilbree told him that she had been instructed at the home to give the babies paregoric to keep them quiet.

Physicians state that the use of paregoric will cause intestinal troubles, and many of the children died from acute troubles of that nature.

BALLINGER EXONERATED

Wickersham Finds That None of the Charges Against Him Are Sustained

Washington, Dec. 2.—President Taft received a report from Attorney General Wickersham on Richard A. Ballinger, both as land commissioner and secretary of the interior, in which Ballinger is completely exonerated of all charges made against him. The investigation included also his conduct while out of office after he left the land office and before he came back to Washington to assume the duties of the interior secretary.

It is significant that one of the charges brought forth against Ballinger recently was that made by Louis R. Glavis, formerly a land agent, to the effect that in a decision Wickersham overruled Ballinger in the Cunningham coal land cases.

The report is really the latest phase in the Ballinger-Pinchot antagonism. It has the effect of putting the whole matter up to Pinchot.

HUNTER IS FINED $100

Incidentally He Furnishes Venison For Charitable Institutions

Albany, Dec. 2.—While endeavoring to carry venison out of the Adirondacks in three suit cases, Oliver H. Whitford was detected by Frank Stanyon, a Hamilton county game protector, arrested and fined $100.

The confiscated venison was received in Albany and given to local charitable institutions.

New York, Dec. 2.—E. H. Harriman's estate at the time of his death was valued at $149,000,000. This is said to be shown in the appraisers' estimate as completed and filed with the surrogate, which, however, has not been made public.

New Aeroplane Record

BENDERNAGEL CHANGES MIND

Denial of Statement That He Intended to "Squeal"

WILLING TO STAND BRUNT

Conclusion That Men Now on Trial Will Not Incriminate Anyone "Higher Up" Than Themselves In Sugar Trust Frauds—Testimony That Trust Cashier Paid Money to Men In Uniform of Customs Inspectors

New York, Dec. 2.—Something has happened to change the front of the defense in the trial of six former employes of the American Sugar Refining company on the charge of conspiring to defraud the government in the importation of sugar at the Williamsburg plant of the American Sugar Refining company.

Charles M. Beattie, who is appearing as special counsel for J. F. Bendernagel, the former cashier of the Williamsburg plant, declared Tuesday evening to several newspaper men that Bendernagel wouldn't shield those from whom he took his orders, but yesterday Beattie denied ever having made any such statement and said that nobody was going to "squeal" on the sugar trust.

What may have happened in between is entirely a matter of inference, although there are some of those who have followed the case who are of the belief that Beattie had come into the case so recently that he wasn't thoroughly in touch with the policy of the defense when he declared Bendernagel's disinclination to be "the goat" for the frauds on the Havemeyer and Elder dock.

The fact that Henry M. Cochrane, one of the counsel for the sugar trust, is appearing generally for the various defendants in addition to the special appearance of Beattie for Bendernagel and of Clarence K. Lexow for Oliver Spitzer, the former superintendent of the Williamsburg sugar docks, has led to the conclusion all along that the men now on trial would not incriminate anyone higher up than themselves.

The government's attack was directed primarily at Bendernagel. The four checkers, Kehoe, Boyle, Hennessey and Coyle, also on trial, came in only incidentally for reference and there was no testimony connecting them with the period within which the sugar weighing frauds were committed which are covered by the present indictments other than the identification of certain of their signatures on the pink books in which were entered up the true weights on imported sugar found by the city weighers and the false weights which resulted from the manipulation of the government's scales.

Against Bendernagel, however, Andrew M. Mallon, a former clerk in the cashier's office of the Williamsburg plant, gave testimony which accused Bendernagel of having paid money to men in the uniform of customs inspectors, and of having, with Spitzer and Edward Gerberock, who was formerly superintendent of the refinery, ordered changes in the pay of the six men who checked up the government weighers so that they got $18 a week and later $20 a week, as against $13.50 for the other checkers on the dock, down to June, 1907.

Mallon declared the envelopes of the six men were marked with the same amount as the other checkers received, although they contained a larger sum. After June the system of marking the envelopes was discontinued.

A hot fight started between counsel for the government and the defense over the introduction of government records covering the entry of the cargoes of sugar covered by the indictments. The defense objected to the introduction of this evidence on the ground that much of it did not relate to the specific acts set forth in the indictment and charged this against the defendants. The government contended that it had a perfect right to offer the records of all cargoes checked up by the defendants.

Judge Martin ruled that this evidence might be admitted extending up to the last date of entry of sugar specified in the indictments, namely, in Nov. 20, 1907. The rest of the day was largely taken up with the receipt of these records. They consist largely of the so-called "pink books" in which the company's checkers entered up the weights of sugar imported as formed by the government's and by the city weighers.

Deer Hunting In New Hampshire

Concord, N. H., Dec. 2.—The open season on deer has begun in seven of the ten counties in New Hampshire, to continue fifteen days. In the three northern counties a longer period is allowed for the killing of this game. The deer are said to be very plentiful.

Society Girl Kills Herself

Greensboro, N. C., Dec. 2.—With no known motive, other than a slight remonstrance from a member of her family about extravagant indulgences, Miss Ethel Norman, aged 17 and prominent in society in this city, committed suicide by shooting through the heart.

THE IMPOSSIBLE.

It Lies Just Beyond the Limit of Our Own Understanding.

Here is a striking parable by Miss E. Fox Howard, which we take from the "Friends' Fellowship Papers:"

"A dog tried to open a door. He scratched it, threw himself against it, struggled to get his nose under it and burrow his way out, but at last he decided that the door would not open and never could open, so he lay down before it and went to sleep.

"A child was watching the dog, and he laughed and turned the handle with his small fingers, and the door was open. Then he took a book, and, sitting on the floor, he turned over the leaves one by one and gazed at the queer black marks upon them without knowing what they meant, for he was a very little child and he could not read. As there were no pictures to be found he tossed it away.

"But a boy picked up the book and laughed and read page after page of a wonderful fairy tale. Then he went to school and puzzled his head over a sum which had to be brought to the class that morning. Try as he might the sum would not prove, and the boy said: 'I can't do it. I'm sure it can't be done. There must be a mistake in the book.'

"But the pupil's teacher laughed, and, taking the blotted exercise book from the boy, he quickly worked out and proved the sum. Then he turned to his own studies and went into the laboratory, for he was learning chemistry. All the morning he labored among the gases and the acids, but he could not get the right combinations and only succeeded in making a loud explosion. 'It's all rubbish to say that potash and carbon form potassium!' he said. 'They simply explode, and I defy any one to say they don't!'

"But the master, who had heard the noise, came and took it into his own hands, and soon the metal was dropping from the condenser. After school was over the master, who was getting an old man, sat in his study reading a paper on modern scientific thought. As he read his brow darkened, and at last he flung it down and said: 'It is a monstrous idea. How can the creation of the world have taken millions of years? The good old Bible account of the six days of creation is good enough for me.' And he wrote an angry letter of remonstrance to the great professor who had sent him the paper.

"But the professor only smiled, for he was a geologist and had read the message of the rocks. He himself, one of the deepest thinkers of the day, sat late into the night among his books, trying to fit some newly discovered laws of physics into his schemes of things and to bring his mind nearer to a solution of the great why of the universe. At last he bowed his head and said: 'It is impossible. Facts are too conflicting. I cannot explain them, and I doubt if there is any explanation.'

* * * * * * * *

"Just beyond the limit of our own understanding lies the impossible."

Reward of Industry.

Faithful Housewife—Mrs. Candour, is it? I can't stop my sewing now. Tell her I'm not at home.

Ann—Please, mum, I've been tellin' so many you're not at home I wish you'd see some uv 'em.

"Why, Ann?"

"I don't like the way they act. They look at each other and snicker so."

"Mercy! Do they suspect I am at home?"

"No, mum; I wish they did. I heard one uv 'em say they wouldn't like your husband to know uv your goin's on."

"Goings on! What do they mean?"

"They think, mum, you're the worst gadabout in town!"—Exchange.

With Reservation.

Here is the story of covenanting times in Scotland, of which an old laird of Galloway was the central figure:

Learning that he was about to be raided by Claverhouse, whose dragoons were coming in search of him, the old laird effected his escape disguised as one of his own plowmen. As he was leaving the house he was stopped by the dragoons, who asked if the laird as at home.

"Well," said the old covenanter, "he was there when I was there."

The dragoons went their way, and the old laird went his and lived to tell the truth another day.

His Mite of Sense.

"Well, gentlemen," said Tompkins to a couple of his friends, "you can talk as much as you please about the inferiority of women, but there are lots of them that can discount most of us for brains. Take my wife, for instance. She's got twice as much sense as I have, and I ain't ashamed to acknowledge it, either."

"But don't you think," said one of his auditors, "that you put rather a low estimate on your wife's intellectual powers?"—Liverpool Mercury.

Food of the Chinese.

In the Revue d'Hygiene Dr. Malegnon, who lived for many years in China, gives some curious details of the food of the Chinese. This is what he says of the sons of heaven and the way they eat eggs: "The Chinese are great eaters of eggs, which they take hard boiled. One finds them in all the roadside places for refreshment. The Celestials have an expression, 'Eggs of a hundred years.' The eggs are not always a century in age, but one is able to get them of many years' standing. The Celestials have a preference for the egg of the duck or goose. They are placed with aromatic herbs in slaked lime for a period, the minimum time of treatment being five or six weeks. Under the influence of time the yoke liquefies and takes a dark green color. The white coagulates and becomes green. The product of the eggs, which has a strong odor, from which a stranger betakes himself quickly, the Chinese eat as hors d'oeuvres, and it is said to have the taste of lobster."

Expense No Object.

During an inclement spell of weather a lady of the order of the newly rich was so unfortunate as to contract a painful affection of the throat, and she accordingly accepted the advice of a friend that she consult a great London specialist noted for his expensive fees.

"Your ailment is not a serious one," said the specialist after examination. "You'll soon be all right. I'll just indicate to your family surgeon precisely where to touch your throat with nitrate of silver, and I think that will meet the case exactly."

"Oh, doctor," protested the wealthy matron in a tone of mingled surprise and indignation, "do order him to use nitrate of gold! Expense is a matter, I assure you, quite immaterial to me!"—London Answers.

"IN A BAD WAY"

Many a Quincy Reader Will Feel Grateful for This Information.

When your back gives out;
Becomes lame, weak or aching;
When urinary troubles set in,
Your kidneys are "in a bad way."
Doan's Kidney Pills will cure you.
Here is local evidence to prove it:

Mrs. F. Olsen, 197 Whitwell Street, Quincy, Mass., says: "For some time my back was weak and gave me a great deal of trouble. I could not sit up in a chair for more than a few minutes at a time without having severe pains in my back. I was also subject to headaches and dizzy spells and at times was very nervous. I was becoming discouraged when Doan's Kidney Pills were brought to my attention. I procured a box at the Cox Drug Store and through their use received immediate relief. I did not expect to be speedily cured, as my condition was so serious, but I can say that the results could not have been more satisfactory. In a few weeks I was restored to good health. Doan's Kidney Pills certainly have my highest endorsement."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

JAMES J. JEFFRIES.

Judging by the latest pictures of James J. Jeffries, taken since his return from Europe, he is in splendid condition to meet Johnson. The fight will probably take place next spring.

BRIEFS

Snowy today.

Has winter arrived?

Only five days to the City election.

Supper and entertainment this evening at the Quincy Point church.

The first dance in a series of parties to be held monthly by the Berry Bros. employees, took place Wednesday evening in Electa hall. The floor directress was Miss Mary Grant.

A Band of Mercy club has been organized in Quincy with Albert Akerstrom as president, Fred Porter as secretary and Henry Rogers as treasurer. An invitation is extended to all boys to join, which they can do by calling at 162 Granite street. The object of the Band of Mercy is to protect all animals from cruel abuse, and all complaints of animals being abused should be made to this society.

The local branch of the Salvation Army is preparing to distribute between 50 and 100 baskets, and more if possible, at Christmas, among the most needy families of the city of Quincy. Each basket will contain a chicken, potatoes, can of peas, celery, bread, pie, coffee, sugar, cranberries, butter, apples, and a bag of candy. Capt. John A. Haglind of the local branch who has the Christmas baskets in charge solicites contributions.

—Over 5,000,000 vaccinations have been made in the Philippines since this Government has been in control there, and small pox has been nearly stamped out.

CAMPAIGN FIGURES.

Some interesting figures are now at hand in connection with the recent Y. M. C. A. campaign. There were 1517 different contributions, from one cent to $2625. Of these 1050 were $5 or under, averaging $3. Above $5 there were 467 which aggregated $24,000. Ninety-five out of town people contributed $1,846. Only $3,000 of the amount subscribed have been paid in, so that it may be necessary to wait until January before constructing the swimming pool. In Newton the same number of persons subscribed $155,000, while in Boston it took 6,000 contributions to raise $514,000.

SOLD DANGEROUS LOTION

Police Institute a Hunt For a Traveling Medicine Quack

Providence, Dec. 2.—A traveling medicine "quack" who visited the village of Thornton recently and gave a liniment to two women to cure rheumatism is much sought by the police. His two victims are now in a state of nervous exhaustion from the use of the "medicine," and they may lose their reason as a result.

Rose De Marco, 25 years old, and her sister, Mrs. Mary Manzane, 48 years old, are the victims. Although they were instructed to use the lotion externally, the drugs contained in it soaked through the pores, physicians say, and worked upon their nervous system.

The police have kept the matter quiet a week in the hope of catching the man, and it is believed that in the meantime other women of the village may have bought medicine from the man.

The bottle of medicine bears no marks which will enable the police to find where it was manufactured, or what it was supposed to have contained.

NEW WITNESS TURNS UP

Says He Saw Glover Enter Waltham Laundry With a Woman

Boston, Dec. 2.—A Waltham dispatch to The Post says: A young man who claims to have seen Clarence F. Glover go to the Waltham laundry with a woman on the night of the murder and to have heard the shots which caused Glover's death a few minutes later, told his story to The Post representative last night. His name has not before appeared as a witness in the case.

Carl Norton, 22 years old, is the witness, and he says that Police Inspector McKenna came and took down his statement in writing last week. Norton claims to have known Glover very well, and to have frequently applied to him for work.

NO TRUTH IN TALE OF PLOT TO KILL

Rockefeller Takes No Stock in Lurid Reports About Him

New York, Dec. 2.—"Oh, pshaw, young man, there was no plot."

John D. Rockefeller waved his hand in a manner designed to express contempt when he was asked about the Cleveland story to the effect that two desperadoes—names, descriptions and reasons unknown—had been overheard planning to kill the ruler of Standard Oil.

Mr. Rockefeller arrived from Cleveland to take up his residence for the winter in his house in this city. He was accompanied by Mrs. Rockefeller and a nurse, for Mrs. Rockefeller is evidently far from well. No detectives had accompanied him on the train, nor were any in the station to guard him against assassins, in spite of the lurid tales telegraphed east. Nor did Rockefeller care to dignify the plot story by discussion.

A GUILLOTINE PICNIC

Thousands of People Witness Beheading of a French Bandit

Paris, Dec. 2.—While thousands of spectators picnicked about the jail and made a holiday, Riboult, the bandit murderer, was guillotined at Montrebison.

When the blade dropped the spectators went wild with excitement. A riot followed when many attempted to dip their handkerchiefs in the blood of the executed man.

COTCH CATCHES A TARTAR

Failed to Throw Roller In Fifteen Minutes and Loses Big Forfeit

New York, Dec. 2.—Frank Gotch, champion wrestler of the world, again caught a tartar last night in Dr. R. E. Roller, formerly an amateur and now a professional. Gotch had agreed to forfeit $1000 if he failed to throw Roller in fteen minutes, and at the end of the bout both men were on their feet and fighting bitterly for a winning hold.

Commended For Double Rescue

Washington, Dec. 2.—For bravery and presence of mind displayed in saving the captain and a fireman of the tug Harry B during a storm at New Orleans the treasury department has commended Machinist T. C. Odderstol of the revenue cutter service.

Noted Army Officer Dead

Washington, Dec. 2.—Brigadier General Thomas McCurdy Vincent, U. S. A., retired, famous as an Indian fighter and as the organizer of the great United States volunteer army during the Civil war, died in this city.

Need of More Army Officers

Washington, Dec. 2.—A tentative promise to save the army $2,500,000 if given more officers, together with a new system of selection and detail, is made by Quartermaster General Aleshire in his annual report.

Earthquake In Asia Minor

Constantinople, Dec. 2.—According to a dispatch from Bitlis, Asiatic Turkey, several small villages in that vicinity have been destroyed by an earthquake. No lives are reported to have been lost.

PREMIER GETS INTO THE FRAY

Makes a Speech Declaring War on British Peers

REJECTION OF THE BUDGET

Termed a Breach of the Constitution In Motion Which He Will Put Before House of Commons—Will Have Strong Endorsement of Cabinet—Leaders of Various Parties Completing Plans For an Active Campaign

London, Dec. 2.—Premier Asquith announced in the house of commons that he would move a resolution to the effect that the action of the house of lords in refusing to pass into law the financial provisions made by the lower chamber for the expenses of the year was a breach of the constitution and an usurpation of the rights of the house of commons.

HERBERT H. ASQUITH.

When the premier entered the chamber yesterday afternoon, the supporters of the government rose to their feet and greeted him with ringing cheers. Immediately following the conclusion of routine business the prime minister took the floor.

As soon as he had concluded the house adjourned. In introducing his resolution Asquith will go exhaustively into the question of the privileges of the house of lords and the house of commons and state in detail the government's intentions. He will also fix the day of prorogation, which probably will be next Friday.

The political crisis caused by the unprecedented action of the house of lords in refusing its consent to the government's budget is developing rapidly. The cabinet, which had already determined upon the policy it would pursue in the event of Lord Lansdowne's amendment being carried, a conclusion which was foreseen from the first, met yesterday to condemn its decision and consider the wording of a motion which Asquith will ask the house of commons to adopt. This motion will constitute a remonstrance against what the Liberals contend to have been an invasion by the peers of the rights of the lower house.

All the members of the cabinet were present at the meeting, which excited so much popular interest that a great crowd gathered in the vicinity of No. 10 Downing street, the official residence of the premier, and where so many historic meetings have been held.

While the cabinet was in session leaders of the various parties were completing plans for the great political campaign that will rage in Great Britain and Ireland, the greatest England has ever seen. It will be a conflict of free trade against the tariff, of the house of lords against the people.

With the foreknowledge that the house of lords would reject the financial bill, the leaders of every party had prepared for the campaign before Tuesday night's action by the upper chamber. Today they are ready and the fight is on. The suffragettes promise to take a prominent part in the contest.

The budget was expressly intended by Lloyd-George to make the wealthy bear the chief burdens of taxation. While it left untaxed the main foodstuffs of the poor, it provided heavy duties on whisky and tobacco.

It provided an income tax of 18 cents on every $5 for incomes of $10,000, which is equal to $360 tax on every one receiving $10,000 a year.

It imposed a "super tax" of 2.4 percent on all incomes over $25,000.

It provided an inheritance tax running from 4 percent on $25,000 estates to 15 percent on $5,000,000 estates. An estate like Mr. Harriman's would pay $22,500,000 to the state.

It proposed a revaluation of the land which would vastly increase the rate of income and reduce by millions the income of such land holders as the Duke of Sutherland.

Perishes Trying to Rescue Savings

Bangor, Me., Dec. 2.—While trying to rescue his savings from his boarding house, which was in flames, Joseph Disco, 28 years old, was burned to death.

RAILROADS TIED UP

Flour Mills Closed, With Prospect of Great Smelters Following Suit

St. Paul, Dec. 2.—The strike order to the switchmen on the railroads entering here has made 12,000 men idle, closed the great flour mills, and unless the roads can at once get more coke and coal to the district the great copper smelters in Anaconda, employing 2500 men, must shut down.

The smelters at Great Falls are closed and 5000 men are idle. The entire town of Butte is dependent on the mines and smelters and faces a food famine, as does every town on the lines of the Great Northern, Northern Pacific and Chicago, Milwaukee and Puget Sound railroads.

In this city thousands of freight handlers and teamsters are losing time by reason of the freight blockade in the terminal towns, while a continuance of the strike for several days will throw additional thousands out of work.

The railroad yards are filled with stalled freight trains and an attempt to move a few by the aid of the office men drafted as switchmen is making no impression.

AUNT HELD AS SLAYER

Charged With Drowning Her Young Niece In a Bathtub

New York, Dec. 2.—Virginia Wardlaw, a bent and grayhaired spinster, was arraigned before a recorder at East Orange, N. J., formally charged with the murder of her young niece, Mrs. Ocey W. N. Snead, whose almost nude body was found in a bathtub in a deserted house in East Orange. Death, according to the coroner, was due to drowning in less than a foot of water.

In view of the many mysterious features of the case, a $20,000 insurance policy on the victim's life, the fact that she owned property valued at $16,000 and her aparent helplessness for months past, Miss Wardlaw was held without bail and committed to jail for examination on Monday.

NOT WELL POSTED IN GEOGRAPHY

Thief's Sentence Lengthened Because He Lied to Court

Rutland, Vt., Dec. 2.—For stealing 72 cents, William Howard of San Francisco must serve two years at hard labor in the state prison at Windsor. This was the sentence meted out to him by Judge Swinnerton.

Howard had stated that he had "rounded Cape Horn in a freight steamer from San Francisco to New York, stopping at Chicago on the way." The judge said his sentence would have been lighter if his geographical story had been truer.

The theft was made from the station of the Delaware and Hudson railroad at Castleton.

A DISAPPOINTED CHINAMAN

Expected Pardon Instead of Commutation of Death Sentence

Boston, Dec. 2.—Warry Charles, the Chinaman sentenced to death by electrocution for the murders in Chinatown in August, 1907, whose sentence has been commuted to life imprisonment, is much disappointed that his petition for a full pardon was not granted, as he had hoped that a full pardon might be given.

Joe Guey, the other Chinaman whose death sentence has been commuted, appeared wholly indifferent when told of the action of the governor and ocuncil.

KICKED BY A HORSE

Trainer Doyle Receives Fractured Skull and Dies as a Result

Providence, Dec. 2.—Richard Doyle, a local horseman and driver for Ed N. Gilles, while breaking Director Todd to harness at the Narragansett Park track, was kicked out of the sulky in which he and another man, Fred Purthell, were seated, and thrown to the ground.

The horse kicked him again, while he lay there, fracturing his skull. He died in a short time. The stud is owned by Frederick E. Perkins, owner of the race track.

Eight Miners Saved From Death

Knoxville, Dec. 2.—Eight men were found imprisoned on the fourth level of the London copper mine at Ducktown by a rescuing party. All were alive, but in a thoroughly exhausted condition. The men had been trapped in the mine by fire.

Charges Against Police Commission

Berlin, N. H., Dec. 2.—Governor Quinby and council have begun an investigation of the charge that the police commission of this city is protecting from twenty-five to twenty-eight illegal liquor saloons.

Increase In Public Debt

Washington, Dec. 2.—A public debt, exclusive of certificates and treasury notes, of $1,295,718,757, which is a net increase of $571,325, is the showing of the treasury report for Dec. 1.

Great Airship Race Planned

Paris, Dec. 2.—The Aero club of France has decided to organize a series of aviation events. These will include a race from Paris to Brussels, with or without stops.

DRIFT OF OPINION.

There is urgent need for a great awakening of a keener sense of civic responsibility, so that men of ability and reputation should come forward more readily to take their part in local affairs—Sanitary Record.

The Panama canal is going along well under the management of Colonel Goethals. If he needs anything it ought to be furnished. If what he needs is more control let him have it. The work has been started right, and it should not be stopped or hindered. The country is satisfied that Goethals knows his business, and is attending to it in a satisfactory way. Neither congressman nor anybody else should be permitted to interfere with the progress of the work. It may cost more than the estimates and it may take longer than expected, but it will eventually be completed, and stand as one of the great engineering feats of the world, as well as one of the most beneficial of the works of man.—Lynn Item.

In every branch of the public service in American cities today there is a demand for talent of the highest order and young men cannot devote their time more profitably to any study than to a study of civic problems. It requires now the same genius and intelligence, the same mastery of the science of government to govern a large city that it requires to govern a state or a nation. Indeed, the broadest opportunities for constructive statesmanship, it may be safely said, are now to be found in the great urban centres of this nation. And it is encouraging to know that the young men of the country realize it.—Haverhill Gazette.

Man comes into this world without his consent and leaves it against his will. During his stay on earth his time is spent in one continuous round of contraries and misunderstandings by the balance of our species. In his infancy he is an angel; in his boyhood he is a devil; in his manhood he is everything from a lizard up; in his duties he is a fool; if he raises a family he is a chump; if he raises a small check he is a thief; and then the law raises the devil with him; if he is a poor man, he is a poor manager and has no sense; if he is rich, he is dishonest, but considered smart; if he is in politics, he is a grafter and a crook; if he is out of politics, you can't please him, as he is an undesirable citizen; if he goes to church he is a hypocrite; if he stays away from church he is a sinner and dammed; if he donates to foreign missions he does it for show; if he doesn't he is stingy. When he first comes into the world everybody wants to kiss him—before he goes out they all want to kick him. If he dies young there was a great future before him; if he lives to a ripe old age he is simply in the way in living to save funeral expenses. Life is a funny road, but we all like to travel it just the same.—Fall River Journal.

The arrival in New York city a few days ago, by way of the Erie canal and Hudson river of a power boat and five barges from Buffalo, bringing 83,000 bushels of oats, furnishes an example of what may be expected of the Erie canal when its enlargement has been completed and it has resumed business with something like its original relative importance to the commerce of the state. This fleet was made up of boats that have been built in anticipation of the enlargement of the canal; and the crews reported having passed on the journey ninety-six horse-drawn boats and three fleets of boats drawn by tugs. The interstate commerce commission estimates twenty-five miles a day as the average rate made by freight cars in transit. This being the case, the canal has beaten the time made on the railroads. Later, when what is called the barge canal, or the Erie canal enlarged to accommodate thousand-ton barges, is completed, only three or four days will be required to move boats from Buffalo to the Hudson river. And with a capacity of thirty million tons a season, which is four times the present capacity of the canal, it will be seen that the factor of competition will enter into the common carrier business, in New York state, to an interesting extent. In fact, its good effect will doubtless be felt throughout the entire West, in every part of the country tributary to the commerce of the Great lakes.—Christian Science Monitor.

NON-PARTISAN.

The Houghs Neck Associates are to hold a non-partisan rally Friday evening at Pandora hall. Invitations have been extended to both Mayor Shea and Candidate Nichols, to all the candidates for Councilmen-at-large, and to the candidates for the City Council from Ward One.

Three Meals at Once.

"Now, Mary," said her mistress, "you must come to the door of the drawing room and say, 'Breakfast is ready, and supper is ready, but dinner is served.'"

The newly corralled domestic inwardly digested the concise instructions and that evening convulsed the guests who were awaiting the announcement of dinner by stepping between the portieres, dropping a courtesy and repeating, "Breakfast is ready and supper is ready, but dinner is ser-r-ved!"—Philadelphia Ledger.

Badly Expressed.

"The human monstrosity!" said a young lady attending a fair with her sweetheart. "Threepence! Wouldn't you like to have a look at that, Herbert?"

"No, dear," answered Herbert, anxious to bestow a neat compliment; "I am quite content to look at you."—London Mail.

A TRAGIC EXPERIENCE.

The Climax of a Woman's Return Trip to Her Home.

A New York woman had a curious and tragic experience, one that seems more like a grewsome page from French fiction than the plain recital of fact.

This woman started out with her husband to accompany him part way on a business trip he was taking to a southern city. It was arranged that she should stop to visit some friends at a point about halfway on the journey and after a two days' stay should proceed and rejoin her husband at his destination and return with him. She made her visit and when she reached the town where she had expected to meet her husband found that he was not at the hotel where he had been stopping, but had left hurriedly for New York the day before. She waited long enough to send telegrams to her husband's office and to their house in New York asking if he had arrived and to receive a negative answer from each place.

Concluding that he had been unable to reach her by telegraph while she was on the road, she decided to return home. She was disappointed, but not at all perturbed, as she journeyed northward. She had to change cars twice on the way. Each change involved a wait of ten or fifteen minutes at a small junction town. As she was pacing up and down the station platform at each of these places she saw a big, pine covered coffin box unloaded from the express car and put aboard the northbound train. At Jersey City the same box was being unloaded, and it crossed the ferry with her in a hearse. She noted idly that one of the hearse horses was white and the other black. She went first to her husband's office, but the hour was late in the afternoon, and it was closed. Then she went uptown to her home.

As she was about to enter the apartment house a hearse drawn by a white horse and a black one drove up, and the undertaker climbed down and pressed the button below her name on the row of call bells at the entrance. She asked him what it meant. Thinking she was some inquiring stranger, the undertaker told her that he was bringing home the body of a man who had died on a train near the city whence she had just come and that the undertaker who had taken charge of the body had forwarded it in compliance with the dying man's request. In a daze the woman asked the dead man's name. Then she fell fainting to the floor. It was her husband.—New York Press.

JUSTICE IN HAITI.

Why a Trader Was Consigned to Jail by a Magistrate.

In most lands that maintain a court of justice the institution commands the respect of the public. It has in its hands the means of securing an outward show of respect under any circumstances. In Haiti this power appears to be made a source of revenue, according to a story told by H. Prichard in "Where Black Rules White."

A Haitian owed a trader $28. A judgment requiring the Haitian to pay $4 a week into court was given, and the trader agreed to send a messenger to the magistrate every week for the money.

In due time he sent for the first installment and was informed that the Haitian had not paid up, but that he should be put in prison for his failure.

Three weeks passed with the same result. One morning the Haitian went to the trader's store. What good, he asked, would come to the trader if he, poor man, were thrown into prison? Let the trader forgive him his debt and earn thereby untold rewards in a future state.

After some talk the trader gave him a letter of remission, which he went off to present to the magistrate. The affair was settled, but the Haitian was struck by the bad grace with which the magistrate dismissed him.

He forthwith returned to the trader and asked him if he had received the $8 already paid into court. The trader looked surprised and said that he had received nothing.

"Then, since you have remitted the debt, that $8 is mine," said the Haitian.

Accordingly he went to the court to present his claim. The magistrate at once committed him to prison. A consul who had heard the story asked the magistrate what the man was sent to prison for.

"For contempt of court," was the reply.

Where Tipping Is Tabooed.

It may be interesting to mention that it is neither customary nor advisable to give tips anywhere west of the Sierra Madres. I did it on two occasions and in both cases learned to my regret that the waiters became so familiar with the guests and slack in their services both to myself and others that they were discharged from their employment by the Mexican proprietor, whose watchful eye discovered the lax attention pretty quickly and without complaint from the visitors. I felt very uncomfortable about it, for my intended kindness was in both instances the root of the trouble.—Outing Magazine.

What It Looks Like.

Little Elsie, aged three, who was walking in the garden with her nurse one evening, caught sight of the thin crescent of the new moon hanging low in the west and exclaimed in great excitement: "Oh, look, look, nursie! The moon's all gone away and there isn't anything left but just its skin!"—Delineator.

SIGNAL CORPS INSPECTION

Medals to Sergeant Sherwin and Private Welsh

The Signal Corps of Atlantic held their annual inspection and prize drill at Music Hall, Atlantic, on Tuesday evening before a large and enthusiastic audience.

The corps had received such good training under the efficient instruction of Captain F. M. Chubbuck and First Lieutenant C. W. Stocker, that it required the most discriminating work of the judges to award the prizes. After several hours of strenuous drilling the medals were finally given to Sergeant Gordon Sherwin of the noncommissioned officers and Henry Welsh of the privates.

Both the officers and privates looked extremely military in their Kahki uniforms and received many compliments upon their soldierly bearing. There is still an opportunity for young men between the ages of 16 and 21 to receive this training and those interested should report immediately to Capt. F. M. Chubbuck.

The committee of judges was as follows: Gen. H. H. Gary, Col. A. P. Smith, Maj. Smith, 1st. Serg. Pecks, Signal Corp. M. V. M. and 1st. Serg. R. Arey, Technology Battalion.

CARRIED MESSAGE TO GARCIA.

Major Andrew S. Rowan, United States Army, is about to retire voluntarily from the service. The news was received with regret by the army, where Major Rowan is justly popular, and also by all who wish the army well. In Major Rowan the army loses the kind of officer of which an army can never have too many—the modest capable man who does his work and makes no fuss about it.

Born in Virginia, graduated from West Point in 1881, Andrew S. Rowan entered the service as second lieutenant in the Fifteenth Infantry, was promoted first lieutenant in 1890, serving a few months in the Ninth Infantry, and then transferred to the Ninteenth. He had not been content merely to go through the routine of garrison duties in time of peace. He had acquired facility in the Spanish language, and studied the geography of various regions where he thought the army might be called to active service.

Because he knew Spanish, because he knew the topography of Cuba, and because he had shown himself on various occasions a brave and prudent soldier, Lieutenant Rowan was selected in the spring of 1898 to go on a hazardous mission. He was to get into the interior of Cuba, and into communication with the insurgent leader Calixto Garcia, to find out to what extent Garcia and his followers could be depended on to cooperate with an American expeditionary force in the war then imminent.

He crossed from Jamacia in a sailboat with a single companion—a Cuban. He made his way inland to Garcia's camp in the hills, delivered his message and observed the situation. He went on across the island to the north coast, and made his way in another sailboat 250 miles to Nassau.

He did what he was sent to do, and refused absolutely to pose or be posed as a hero. Of course, he risked his life. He would have been hanged or shot if the Spanish troops had caught him. That, however, was just a part of the day's work for Andrew S. Rowan, and from his viewpoint.

The incident appealed to the imagination of a writer of talents. He wrote a short prose poem about it—a kind of sermon, in fact, showing why the man who carried the message to Garcia had done an admirable thing and how. It was a timely bit of eulogy of the man who does the day's work in the day, without complaining or parade— just goes ahead and does it.

The writing was well done, like the deed it celebrated. It struck the popular fancy and the idea it set forth has struck in the public consciousness. It will probably live longest of all its author's somewhat voluminous work. No anthology of American prose would be complete without it.

That a writer of talent should have been thus moved to celebrate a deed worth doing is a threefold advantage. First to the writer, who by taking a really worthy theme and treating it well has secured for himself a remembrance that nothing else he has done would have obtained. Second to Rowan, whose well-doing thus became impressed upon the public consciousness as well as becoming a matter of official record. And most of all to American youth who by the conjunction were given a new and vivid impression of the merits and value and worthiness for emulation of the man who goes right ahead and does his plain duty without shrinking or strutting, without a moment's hesitation, and without a thought of the reward.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

Spontaneous Combustion.

Spontaneous combustion can only occur when oxidation causes the temperature to rise to the ignition point of the material. Spontaneous combustion of the human body is impossible on account of the heat regulating effect of the 75 or 80 per cent of water contained. The enormous heat necessary to dry the tissues sufficiently would destroy life long before ignition could take place. An old idea was that the alcohol in a confirmed drunkard might promote combustion, but Liebig showed that even if the body could give off inflammable vapor and this could become ignited the body itself would not be set on fire.

Her Proposal.

"You've been courting me now for a number of years, George," remarked a girl to a young man, "and I want to make a little leap year proposal."

"I—I am not in a position to m-marry just yet," stammered the youth, "but"—

"Who said anything about marriage?" interrupted the girl. "I was going to propose that you stop coming here and give somebody else a chance."—Philadelphia Inquirer.

QUINCY HIGH SCHOOL

Items of Interest to Students and Graduates

Miss Brown, the popular English teacher, is absent from school because of sickness.

The question of awarding a "Q" to the assistant manager has come up for action before the Athletic Committee and some decisive action will be necessary very soon. A few of the alumni have been heard from on this subject, as it is a matter in which their opinion will go a long way. If any past member of the school wishes to voice his opinion on the subject please do so immediately. The question as to the man who is to receive the "Q" does not come into the matter at all, it is simply whether or not we wish to break away from the established custom or not. The work of the manager is hard and as he puts a great deal of time and earnest effort into the position there seems to be no good reason why the assistant manager should not receive some reward for his services.

Glover Howe, Q. H. S., '08, who came to his home in Marlboro over Thanksgiving was in Quincy last Sunday. He returned to M. A. C. Sunday night.

It is rumored about the school that Russ Bates will resign his captaincy of the basket ball team. He thinks it is too much of a task as he also is the captain of the baseball squad. The logical selection in his place for captain would be the midget player, Billy Manning, although if the election is left until the team gets started some other candidate may loom large on the horizon as there are a bunch of fast basket ball players in the school this year.

The Golden Rod will be out this week and the scholars are anxiously awaiting it. One of the fine features about the issue is the good bits of reading volunteered by the alumni, who are at the different institutions of learning. It is interesting to note their views of college life.

Miss Gertrude Dean, a High school graduate, has severed her connection with Cobe's clothing establishment.

The play to be put on by the young people of the First Presbyterian church next Wednesday evening shows in its cast several former High school students: Miss Helen Cummings, Miss Anna R. Giles, Miss Margaret Craig and Irving L. Kemp. Great interest is being taken in this affair as it is in aid of the pipe organ fund of that church.

The work in the High school gymnasium is in full swing now, and every day there are different classes on the floor.

The first game of basket ball will probably be played at home about the first of January. The squad will report for practice next week and for the three weeks previous to the new year some good hard work will be in order. There is no reason why Quincy High's basket ball record should not be kept up to the standard of the past two years.

Miss Ruth Hardy, who came home from Oberlin college recently, has recovered from her indisposition and returned to her studies.

The return of many of the recent graduates for Thanksgiving vacation showed that a large number of them were wearing a college letter or class numerals on their sweaters showing that they have been keeping up their Athletic ability in the larger institutions.

The work of Franz Marceau in the recent cross country run was no surprise to his friends, and in fact many who witnessed the race say that but for the fact that he was thrown by a small boy crossing in front of him, he would have won the race. He was the High school editor's choice and came up to all expectations.

It is nearly time for some of the High school pupils to take their annual dip in Butler's pond as there is ice this week.

The college nights at the Y. M. C. A. are proving popular with the High school fellows. Good speakers are to be heard at every meeting. Hamilton Fish this year's football captain at Harvard will be the speaker at the next meeting which will occur this month.

Miss Esther Waugh, '13, of Bigelow street, spent the Thanksgiving holiday in Worcester.

The Deta Sigma club, composed of 1909 Q. H. S. girls, will hold their first meeting of this season this afternoon at the home of Miss Bessie Brooks on Hancock street. Plans for the club during the coming winter wil be discussed and adopted.

The "Club on the Hill," wil hold their first dancing party tomorrow evening in Brazee's hall, Wollaston. Many past and present members of the school belong to this club and the affair is an assured success.

* * *

Students and graduates of the Quincy High are requested to forward items for this department, which should reach the Daily Ledger office on or before Wednesday marked for School department.

AUTHORIZED TO BUILD

Tuberculosis Camp to be Started at Once

The first meeting of the new board of managers of the Quincy Anti-Tuberculosis Association was held on Monday. President Faxon called the meeting to order at four o'clock and nearly every member of the board was present. Besides the routine business, many matters of general interest were discussed.

It was voted to authorize the Camp Committee to proceed at once to erect a building according to plans submitted by Mr. Lawton. This building is to form a nucleus of the camp.

Mrs. Whitcher reported that the collections for the camp from Atlantic, amounted to $87.16. More than $1,600 are already paid or pledged.

President Faxon announced the appointment of the following committees:

Educational Committee—Albert L. Barbour (chairman), Mrs. W. Whitcher, Mrs. J. F. Welch, Mrs. N. S. Hunting and Mrs. Russell C. Low.

Committee on Cooperation and Relief—Frederic W. Plummer (chairman), Dr. George M. Sheahan, Mrs. Francis Abele, Jr., Mrs. Joseph A. Dasha, Mrs. Robert Teasdale, Mrs. Walter Pinkham, Mrs. R. McLennan, Miss Eliza Sheahan, Mrs. Sibley, Mrs. C. A. Howland, Mrs. Wilson Tisdale, Mrs. Forrest Royal.

Dispensary Committee—Dr. John A. Gordon (chairman), Mrs. D. E. Wadsworth, Mrs. Wilson Marsh.

Dispensary and Visiting Physicians—Dr. F. R. Burke (chairman), Dr. E. H. Bushnell, Dr. W. J. McCausland, Dr. John H. Ash, Dr. Charles S. Adams, Dr. R. McLennan, Dr. T. J. Dion, Dr. D. A. Bruce, Dr. G. M. Sheahan and Dr S. W. Ellsworth.

The Finance Committee to be announced later.

BAZAAR OPENED.

English Ivy lodge, Daughters of the Sons of St. George, opened its two days' bazaar Wednesday in Doble's hall. During the afternoon the ladies enjoyed whist, and in the evening there was an entertainment. Tables for the sale of useful and fancy articles were arranged about the hall and were in charge of the following ladies:

Aprons and fancy articles—Mrs. John Tutton, Mrs. Higgs and Mrs. Davey.

Handkerchiefs—Miss Etta Williams, Miss Maud Johnston and Miss Louise Prout.

Useful articles—Mrs. George Kink, Mrs. Gleason, Mrs. E. Beer and Mrs. Moyle.

Candy table—Miss Edna Chapple, Miss Lottie Rundle, Miss Jennie Beer.

Grab Bag—Mrs. Chapple.

Refreshments—Mrs. John Rendle, Mrs. James King, Mrs. Beer, Mrs. McConnell.

The committee in charge of the sale include: Mrs. Ellen R. Prout, Mrs. Lizzie Johnston, Mrs. Rendle, Mrs. Chapple. Mrs. Gleason, Mrs. John King and Mrs. Higgs.

—The children of France are often on their way to school a little after seven o'clock in the morning, and quite as often have not concluded their lessons earlier than nine o'clock in the evening. Young men in the higher classes frequently have appointments with their tutors at five o'clock in the morning in summer time.—American Educational Review.

NO-LICENSE RALLIES

Several Able Out-of-Town Speakers Coming

Five No-License rallies are announced for Sunday a union rally at 3 P. M. of the Swedish citizens, and the others in the evening at 7.30 at Quincy Music hall, at Atlantic Music hall, at the Wollaston Baptist church, at Doble's hall at South Quincy, and at the Quincy Point church.

At the Music hall rally the principal speakers will be ex-Mayor George H. Carter of Chelsea and Treasurer Sedgwick of the Fore River Shipbuilding Co. W. F. Cummings of Atlantic will preside the Standish Male Quartette will sing, and the Y. M. C. A. orchestra will play.

At the Atlantic rally, Amos P. Wilson of Lynn will be the principal speaker, and ten voters of the ward will urge a large No-License vote. Solos and quartette numbers will add to the program.

The Wollaston rally will also have an out-of-town speaker, Clarence A. Warren of Chelsea. Music under the direction of A. D. Albee will be a feature.

At the Quincy Point rally the speakers are to be announced.

At Doble's hall John L. Miller will preside, and there will be several speakers including J. A. Sedgwick, Rev. James A. Matheson and Rev. R. J. Davis.

On Saturday evening of this week in connection with these rallies there will be a Boys' speaking contest for prizes at Faxon hall. Three well known gentlemen will act as judges.

ANNIVERSARY

versary this week. The observance of the anniversary commenced Wednesday evening when a meeting of the Boston district mission was held at the church. Routine business was transacted and addresses were made by several out-of-town clergymen.

Tonight there will be a 20th anniversary festival, which will include a concert and an address by Rev. J. A. Anderson of Brockton.

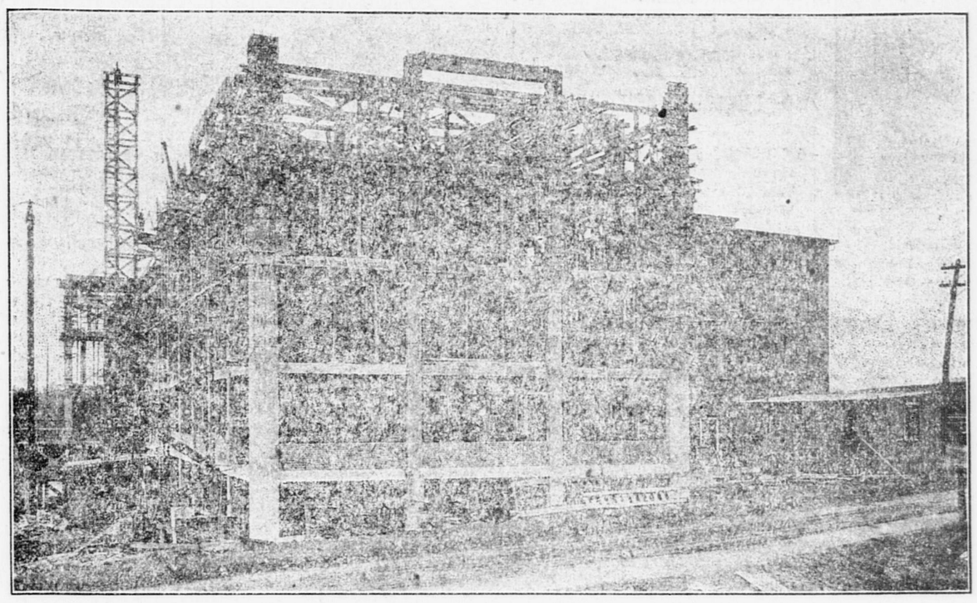
Sunday is the day of dedication. There will be a high mass at 10.30 with two sermons, one by Rev. C. T. Johnson of Boston on the meaning of the dedication, and the second by Rev. A. M. Herenius of Norwood to the Sunday school children.

Sunday afternoon at 2.45 the services will be in charge of Rev. Dr. Fritz Jacobson of Brooklyn, N. Y., president of the Swedish Lutheran New York conference. There will also be a short address by the president of the Boston district and Mayor Shea. The history of the church will be read to its four hundred members and there will be congratulatory exercises.

Sunday evening there will be communion service with song and music.

The Swedish Lutheran church was organized in 1889 with 60 members. For a time regular services were held in a hall. Then a church was built on the rocks at 199 Granite street. The church is of Quincy granite and is a very imposing structure. It was completed and dedicated in 1894.

Recently the church has been remodelled at a cost of $3,000. These alterations gave them a larger church room and a new front. A handsome new pipe organ has been installed at a cost of $1,600. Half of this sum was donated by Andrew Carnegie and the balance by the Young People's Society. This organ was put in position Nov. 4.



The church has also been presented by Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Johnson of Gothland street with a handsome altar painting costing $250, which was unveiled on Thanksgiving evening with appropriate exercises. The church now numbers 400 members.

K. & L. OF H. ELECTION.

Maple lodge, Knights and Ladies of Honor, elected the following officers at its meeting Wednesday evening:

Past Protector—Mrs. Rose A. Reed.
Protector—Albert Taber.
Vice Protector—Mary L. Taber.
Secretary—Edward Langley.
Financial Secretary—Mary E. Furnald.
Treasurer—Mrs. E. Hewson.
Chaplain—Mrs. Sarah Williams.
Guard—Nellie M. Cates.
Guardian—Clarence Boyce.
Sentinel—Dexter Rayce.
Trustees—Edward B. Langley, Rose A. Reed and Mrs. Mary Langley.

PROGRESS OF THE NEW SHOE FACTORY. AT SOUTH BRAINTREE.

Since the last mention made of it in these columns, the new concrete shoe factory in process of construction for the Rice & Hutchins Company has grown like the proverbial weed. The moulds have been removed from the lower stories so that the solidity and massiveness of the structure are apparent and at the same time a good idea of the general appearance of the building can be obtained.

The weather conditions owing to the balmy air and absence of rain have been peculiarly favorable to the pouring of concrete and the mild days have been taken full advantage of and the work rushed with all possible speed.

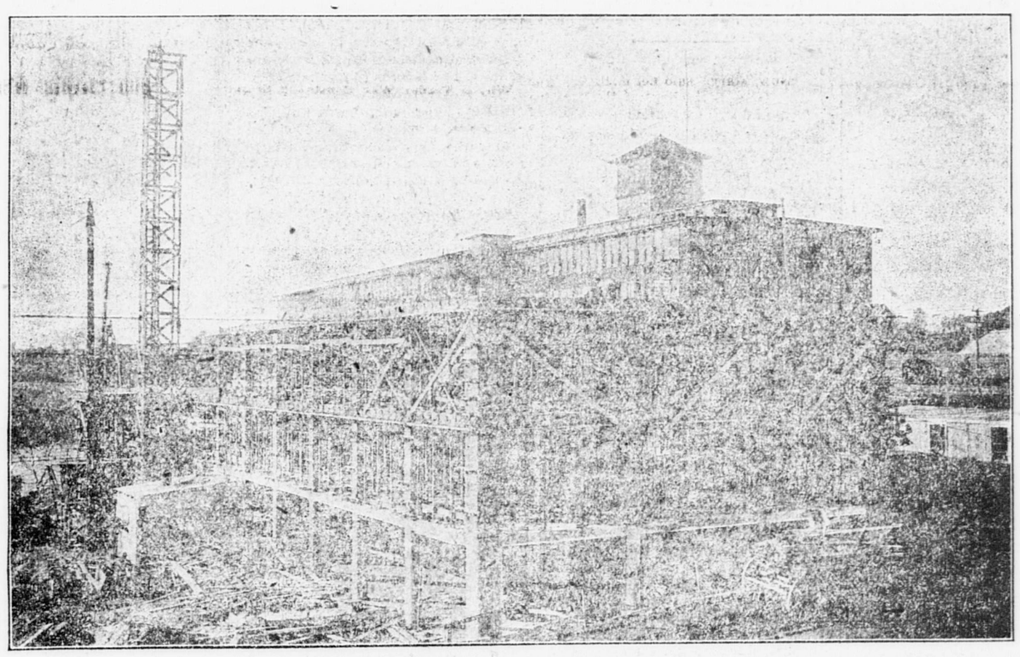
The frame or skeleton of the factory is complete up to the last story and moulds are being rapidly placed into position for that. At the same time, forms are being built and put into position for the roof. When this is finished the workmen on all floors will have more shelter from stormy weather and the work of finishing the building proper and also the interior details can be attended to regardless of the elements.

The roof is to be of the "saw-tooth" kind and it is thought this will afford much better lighting facilities than the old fashioned "monitor" style of roof.

The west side of the new factory which is very close to the old building is to be specially equipped as regards protection from fire. Massive steel window frames are to be used on this side and a special kind of wire glass will be used which will not melt or fall out from heat, should there be a fire in either factory.

The side walls are partly of brick and with the solid reinforced concrete construction, the building would seem to be as nearly fire proof as it is possible to make it. All the stairways are of iron and the fire-escapes are of the same material enclosed in brick towers or wells.

Some idea of the amount of money and labor required to erect such a building can be formed when it is seen that enough lumber to build a very good sized factory has to be used for the moulds and stagings and is of no especial use afterward.



Electricity will be the motive power of the new factory and this made it necessary to enlarge the engine and boiler rooms in the old building, as all the power will be generated there to operate motors in the new shop.

Two new boilers have been installed and will be all connected and ready for business in a short time. An addition has been built on to the coal pocket which will now hold hundreds of tons.

Workmen have been busy excavating for the foundations for the larger engine room which will be needed. In addition to the engine now in use a much larger one of greater horse power will be put in beside the old one.

The engine room will be built out toward the street so as to accommodate the new engine and other necessary machinery and when the power plant is completed it will have more than double the capacity of the old one and is calculated to be able to easily handle all the load which will be put upon it.

The Pearl street end of the building at the lower story is at present below the street level but this will be altogether above ground should the street be depressed and the grade crossing abolished. Much interest in the new factory is noticed and every day may be seen numerous spectators some of them with cameras getting snap shots from various vantage points.

BOARD OF TRADE

start should be to get a setting of the court here.

A motion that the committee be given further time was then voted.

The consolidation of the Board of Trade and Citizens Association then came up, and a letter was read from the secretary of the latter association stating the President Blackmur had been away and had not yet appointed a committee. He, however, would do so soon. Then the Citizens' Association would be glad to appoint a time for a conference.

Some little informal discussion on the benefits to both organizations followed, but it was decided that the report of the committee should be made before there was any general discussion.

Albert T. Whitman said he understood that the City Council had a special committee considering street railway accommodations, and he thought that the Board of Trade should cooperate with them. The suggestion was referred to the committee on railroad transportation.

Charles H. Johnson offered a resolution sympathizing with Mr. Burgess of the Boston Gear Works, a member of the board in the loss which he had sustained by the fire of Nov. 27, hoping that he would see the wisdom of rebuilding as soon as possible. The resolution pledged the support of the board, and was unanimously adopted.

The question of public landings was touched upon briefly, but no action was taken.

HUMANE EDUCATION WORK.

At the November meeting of the directors of the American Humane Education Society and the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, President Hill reported that the prosecuting agents of the Massachusetts Society in their investigation of complaints during the month, examined 5,258 animals, took 97 horses from work and mercifully killed 238 horses and other animals.

The Massachusetts Society has received a bequest of $7 517.94 from the estate of Miss Martha Harrington of Waltham, $2,000 from the estate of Miss Alice Byington, of Stockbridge; also a gift of $50 from Miss Lydia E. Summer. By the will of Miss Caroline Phelps Stokes the American Humane Education Society is to receive $20,000.

end of that time he said that he would return to them with a clean and business like record.

William H. Carey spoke, and at the close of his address introduced Councilman William H. Flynn. He was greeted by a great demonstration. His theme was mostly concerning his past fulfillment of promises from the political platform. Especially as concerned the playground, lights, sewer and car service.

The meeting closed with a few words from chairman Carey and Charles J. McGillvray, president of Democratic City Committee.

A SANTA CLAUS ASSOCIATION.

The Santa Claus Association is not dead. May it never die! This winter it will be doing business in Cleveland at the same old stand.

Santa Claus always has had more work to do than he could possibly accomplish, especially in the big cities. Often there have been little boys and girls whom he has been unable to reach with his wonderful pack of toys and other good things. And nearly always they have been the ones who have looked forward the most eagerly for his coming—the ones who seldom get gifts of any kind. Last year a few good people decided to form a company to help Santa Claus in Cleveland. Everybody could buy a share in it or as many shares as he wanted. Hundreds did buy, some paying five cents and some a hundred dollars. The child who paid only one cent was a member of the association and a partner of Santa Claus in as good standing as the man who invested many dollars.

It doesn't matter now how many children and poor families heard from Santa Claus last year through the association. The point is that an attempt will be made this Christmastide to reach at least ten thousand boys and girls and four thousand homes. As soon as the association is ready give something. When the stores blossom out in their brilliant Christmas gorgeousness and the air tingles with the spirit of good will to men and love to children, the thought occasionally comes to you that you would like to give something, if only a trifle, to a boy or girl or a struggling mother whom Santa Claus is likely to miss. But you don't quite know where to look for them and your work and your home duties drive you. In the past you have let many such wishes go unfulfilled. Don't do it this time. Buy a share in the Santa Claus Association and it will make your wish good, better than you could do it yourself.—Cleveland Leader.

PORTRAITS IN WAX.

An Old Art That Has Been Recently Revived.

NO LESSONS ARE NEEDED.

A Little Experience In Clay Modeling the Only Knowledge Necessary For This Cheap and Interesting Art Work.

The making of the quaint wax portraits that were so popular about a century ago has become of late years almost a forgotten art. But Miss Casella, an Englishwoman, has lately taken up the work as a hobby and finds that though it cannot be depended upon as a means of livelihood it yet offers a pleasant way of adding to one's income.

About a century ago it was quite the correct thing to have one's portrait modeled in wax, supposing that one's income did not "run" to being painted by a well known artist.

Then gradually photographs came in and wax portraits went "out." But one still comes across old ones sometimes either at sales or in museums.

The portrait itself is modeled in the wax, the wax is mounted on canvas, and the whole is framed in black wood. In a house furnished with antiques these wax portraits make a most appropriate finish to the walls.

Miss Casella, who has recently revived the art, first got the idea from seeing some of these old portraits in art galleries and museums abroad and came home feeling that she would like to try and model some herself.

After much perseverance she turned out such excellent work that the late Lord Leighton advised her to send some of it to the Royal academy. "I did so," she says. "They were accepted and exhibited, the first wax portraits to be exhibited at the academy."

The portraits she has done are mounted in exactly the same way as the old specimens—on canvas—and the framing of black wood is also adhered to.

After they have been done for a few months the wax gets to look something like ivory, and unless it is hung in a very warm place there is no danger of it softening.

The wax portrait work is comparatively easy if one knows a little about drawing and modeling, and it will doubtless be added to the up to date woman's list of accomplishments.

Thanksgiving Decorations.

An appropriate centerpiece on a Thanksgiving table last year was evolved from a toy boat. In the center of the table was an old fashioned oblong mirror, the frame hidden by a bank of florists' moss and fern leaves. On the mirror was the boat laden with autumn fruit, flying a little Mayflower pennant.

A Thanksgiving breakfast given in honor of a visiting college girl was noteworthy for the beauty and simplicity so effectively demonstrated by its decorations. The color scheme was green and white, the class colors. In the center of the bare table was an exquisite lace art square over green satin. On this was a tripod of college pennants, the base being banked with white chrysanthemums to give the effect of a vase. Lace plate doilies lined with green were used. Beside each plate were a miniature pennant and a superb white chrysanthemum.

For an "at home" on Thanksgiving afternoon the table was first covered with yellow cambric. Over this was draped yellow tulle so that it produced the effect of waves. It was held in place by sprays of smilax. In the center of the table was a silver epergne, its bowls of sparkling crystal filled with magnificent yellow chrysanthemums. At each corner was a tall brass candlestick with yellow candles and green shades.

Origin of Tea.

There is a pretty Japanese fable connected with the origin of the tea plant. A Buddhist priest, as penance for his sins, centuries ago forbade sleep to take possession of him. One night while standing, as was his custom, the power of Morpheus became too strong, and he slept. When the sleeper waked he was so overcome with remorse that he tore out his eyelashes and threw them on the ground, watering them with his bitter tears. A few days later on the spot where the eyelashes fell there appeared the leaves of the tea plant.

A Bathroom Case.

There seems to be no end to the ingenuity of manufacturers in designing and bringing out practical novelties for the use of the traveling public. A bathroom case which folds up in a compact manner is one of the latest. When not used for traveling purposes this can be attached to the wall within convenient reach. When fully opened a number of pockets are brought into view—fourteen, to be exact—each of which has a special purpose.

THE MERCHANT PRINCESS

Unique Achievement of Mrs. Charles Netcher of Chicago.

Mrs. Charles Netcher, a widow, mother of four children, two of whom are daughters, aged fourteen and sixteen respectively, and two boys, one nine, the other eighteen, the latter being at Yale, is the most unique example of feminine achievement in this country. From the position of saleswoman in the cloak department of a retail store in Chicago she became the head of one of the greatest department stores in the country. She personally directs more men and women than any woman in the land. She also manages the entire concern of which she has been the head since the death of her husband, in 1904, of the business which he had fostered and expanded for many years before he died from the effect of an operation for appendicitis. She carries life insurance for $1,500,000. At the time of his death she was insured in several life companies for a large amount, and after his death she increased her policies to the amount mentioned.

Thirty-five years before his death her husband was a bundle boy in a retail house in Chicago. From that he became the owner of the concern and extended the business. With him business came first, but Cupid finds his way generally to the heart of the busiest man on earth. The courtship of Charles Netcher and his young cloak department clerk was conducted in a very commercial way. He was forty-eight years old when he sent for her to come to his office. He was deep in his affairs when she reported.

He had forgotten for the moment what he wanted with her, but after scratching his head he remembered that he wished to ask her to become his wife. They talked over the proposition as they were in the habit of talking over store matters, and before she left the office she had promised as he desired. They were married a few months later. Four years after the marriage the husband took out a life insurance policy for half a million dollars for the benefit of his wife. He died two months later. The estate of which the widow became the sole executor amounted to more than a million dollars.

The Netcher home is an ample one on Drexel boulevard, an exclusive residential center of Chicago. Mrs. Netcher is an early riser. After breakfast she has a short constitutional and is at her big store in State street between 9:30 and 10. She drives home at noon and has luncheon with her three children, who are in possession of the house during her absence for business. She returns to business after luncheon and remains until 6. She finds her recreation at home, and that is all the vacation she takes. Her idea is that the only successful business is a life of work and sustained effort. She has been heard to say, "The busy life is the only life worth while."

While she cares nothing for social diversions, her home life is in life with that of the exclusive woman. She is fond of the refined atmosphere, and her house is furnished accordingly, and the meals on her table are served with the same care and elegance as are the meals in the home of the woman whose life is rounded by social environment.

Her business is not confined to the routine of the desk. She walks miles in her great store every day, looking after the needs of each department and the welfare of her employees. The head of each department reports to her, and she makes the orders necessary for every detail. The man who calls with a line of samples sees Mrs. Netcher. She is, as she must be, thoroughly up on the demands of trade and the fluctuations of the market that affect her business. Every head of a department in her store is a man, and all are young. No one ever makes a transaction without first conferring with her personally. Her business judgment is unerring, and she is just with all her help, from the head of a department to the rawest cash girl or boy in the house. AMANDA RIDDLE.

Honors For Chicago Women.

The following Chicago women have received foreign recognition in the way of decorations: Mrs. Potter Palmer has been made a member of the Legion of Honor of France and of the Order of Leopold of Belgium; Mrs. Ellen M. Henrotin has been decorated four times, is an academic officer and officer of public instruction in France and is a member of the Order of Leopold of Belgium and of the Chefakat (Order of Mercy) in Turkey; Mrs. Henry Channon and Mrs. M. H. Knowles have been honored by France.

THE QUEST OF THE RED SLIPPER.

Dickey Secured the Prize and Got His Reward.

By CLARISSA MACKIE.

[Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.]

An hour after dinner on that first Saturday evening Dicky Ames left his comfortable chair in the smoking room and made his way to the great entrance hall, where the younger guests were gathered about a roaring driftwood fire.

He leaned against the high chimneypiece and from his shadowy corner watched the light and sparkle of Kitty Austin's lovely dark face. Once her soft eyes met his wistful glance, and she threw him a smile that set his heart to beating heavily.

"Kitty says she shall not dance until her slipper has been found," laughed Edith Bolter, with a mischievous glance at Dicky.

He leaned forward and glanced down at the hearth, where a little red slipper rested lightly on the fender. The other foot was hidden amid the soft fluffiness of Kitty's red skirts.

"Where did you lose it?" asked Dicky eagerly.

Kitty blushed, and a distressed look came into her beautiful eyes. Dicky remembered that he had met a similar glance across the dinner table earlier in the evening.

"Miss Austin won't tell," drawled Chambers lazily, "but it is a fact that she has not stirred from her chimney corner since dinner."

A laugh went around the circle, but Dicky winced at the air of quiet possession which Mark Chambers had assumed toward Kitty. He drew a long breath and turned away.

"I will find the slipper," he said, coloring boyishly.

"And Kitty shall give you the first dance," bantered Edith.

Dicky paused. "I will be honored," he said stiffly. "But the service is its own reward."

The men stirred uneasily, and Chambers half rose from his seat, only to sink down beside Kitty on the settle.

DICKY AMES SAT UPON THE PROSTRATE BODY OF A MAN.

"I prefer this seat to deeds of venture," he said carelessly, with a smile at Kitty.

But Miss Austin was looking around at the circle of blase faces. She lifted her eyes and flashed a strange glance into the only face which reflected her own fresh, unspoiled youth.

And Dicky, with that look engraved upon his clean heart, made his way toward the dining room with a dizzy look in his blue eyes and an amazing wonder knitting his forehead.

It could not be possible that lovely little Kitty Austin, whom he had loved so hopelessly, would look at a struggling young lawyer, one so painfully young and diffident and so obviously struggling, but—

He pushed the dining room door softly open and found himself in total darkness. It was characteristic of Dicky's romantic and chivalrous nature that he would not profane this quest with the sputtering flare of a prosaic match or the white light of the electroliers.

He took a few steps forward and touched the polished edge of the table. Then he dropped to his knees on the soft rug and crawled under the big piece of furniture.

His fingers groped over the floor and suddenly closed upon a bit of soft kid, which as suddenly wriggled out of his grasp. The next instant a pair of long arms were twined about him, and he was writhing in silent combat with an unseen foe.

Over and over they rolled, the strange man panting heavily and muttering angry imprecations under his breath as Dicky strove with him for the possession of the red slipper.

It was snatched from Dicky's grasp, and the high heel came in sharp contact with his temple, and he felt the blood trickling down into his eyes. There was a jeweled buckle that tore his fingers as he fought for the prize.

The man laughed exultingly at Dicky's involuntary exclamation of pain, and then they clutched one another savagely, and Dicky Ames got the upper hold.

A heavy chair toppled over with a crash on the parquet floor, and almost instantly a door opened, and Saunders, the butler, snapped on the lights.

His shout of surprise brought a chorus of shrieking maid servants, while through the opposite door the guests streamed into the room.

In the midst of wild disorder Dicky Ames sat upon the prostrate body of a man, a being with sullen eyes and heavy jowl, who glared at them savagely. Near him on the rug lay a gleaming revolver and a black mask and a burglar's jimmy.

Dicky Ames, with blood stained face and one eye rapidly discoloring, with torn clothing, the white expanse of shirt front stained an ominous crimson, minus collar and tie—Dicky Ames gory, slightly bewildered, but smiling, was holding the twitching hands of his captive in a strong grip, while in his other hand dangled a tattered red slipper!

"Has wicked a-lookin' specimen has Hi care to know, sir," wheezed Saunders as he carefully disposed his bulk upon the unfortunate burglar. "Hif one of you gentlemen will kindly telephone to the police Hi will relieve Mr. Hames."

Dicky got stiffly upon his feet and looked dazedly about him. Chambers was eying him with jealous distrust.

"Where did you find him, Ames?" he sneered.

"Under the table," returned Dicky shortly.

"In the dark?"

Dicky nodded and peered about for a sight of Kitty.

"She is sitting by the fire alone," whispered Edith Bolter, with a friendly little push.

Silently they opened ranks to let the victor through, and more than one man stared enviously after him.

Some one had sped the news to Kitty, and she was sitting on the settle with bright, tearful eyes and very pink cheeks when Dicky came marching down the long hall, the red slipper swinging from one bleeding hand. He dropped on his knees before her.

Kitty thrust out a timid silk stockinged foot, and Dicky tenderly fitted the little torn slipped to its place. She touched his broad shoulder with her fan.

"Rise, Sir Knight of the Slipper!" she said, with a tremulous little laugh.

Dicky sat beside her on the high backed settle, in her tender, compassionate eyes a bleeding and scarred veteran. Soft strains of a waltz came from the drawing room.

"Kitty," said the struggling young lawyer, with strange diffidence, "I suppose you couldn't—er—you couldn't care enough about me—to"— His voice failed, and he looked down at the soft mist of dark hair beside him.

And, lo, the dark hair touched his shoulder for a fleeting instant as Kitty whispered softly:

"Indeed, indeed, I could!"

True Stories About Large Feet.

The conversation turned on big feet, remarks a writer in Tit-Bits, when one of the company said he believed his pal, Smith, would take some beating in that line.

"I was out walking with Smith one day when he slipped down with the soles of his boots pointing to a grocer's window. The grocer rushed out to inquire who was putting the shutters up."

"That's pretty fair," said a soldier who was present, "but a fellow in our company beat it hollow. After a sharp fight with the enemy we were obliged to retreat, when on looking back we saw one of our men standing upright on the field. The fact was the poor fellow had got such feet that he never fell down when he was shot."

"Well," said a horse dealer who sat in the corner, "that's rather tall. But let me have a try. A fellow came down to our stables the other day in a hurry to hire a horse for a journey he was going on. 'I'll have that one,' said he, pointing to a horse in the yard. 'Why, there isn't a man in the world can ride that animal,' I said. 'He'll work in a cart or plow, but no one can stay on his back.' 'I'll try him anyway,' said the stranger as he sprang into the saddle. I expected to see him pitched off, but the horse looked around, saw the man's feet and trotted quietly off. He thought he was between a pair of shafts."

An Exciting Situation.

It was the ninth inning, and the visiting team was at bat. The score was a tie, and every spectator in grand stand or bleacher was on edge. To make it more exciting the bases were full, with two men out, and the team's best swatter was up, with three balls and no strikes to his credit.

In this trying moment the pitcher flung one straight at the plate.

"Str-r-r-ike one!"

A yell broke from thousands of throats.

Again the ball darted toward the plate.

"Str-r-r-ike two!"

Another unearthly yell wafted up from the assemblage. Then a deathlike stillness fell over all as the pitcher carefully adjusted himself for the next and last effort.

In the midst of this pervading hush a young lady just back of the catcher loudly appealed to her escort:

"Will, I do hope the Giants win."

"They'll stand a good show if they put this man out."

"Everybody here seems to want to have him put out, don't they, Will?"

"They certainly do."

"Then why doesn't one of those idle policemen put the horrid thing out?"—Judge.

to users of Mother's Cereals

These cereals are famous for quality among the housewives of America.

Carefully our buyers collect the finest grain in all American markets. They are known as being finicky. Carefully our mills pick from this cream the ripest, choicest grains. Carefully our mill hands pick from these kernels the biggest, the fattest, the finest. Only the best grains ever find their way to a Mother's package. Carefully this product is selected from the select, is cleansed, then sterilized and packed in a Mother's sanitary package. Here is a list of Mother's Cereals. Every one is the best of its kind.

Mother's Oats
Not like other oats. Not only rolled to make their cooking easy, but crushed to make them easily digested.

Mother's Wheat Hearts
(The cream of the wheat)
Is a pure granulated wheat food, thoroughly sterilized and easily digested.

Mother's Corn Flakes (Toasted)
The best corn, big, full, sweet corn, shaved as thin as a whisper and toasted into a rich golden yellow.

Mother's Old Fashioned Steel Cut Oatmeal
Thoroughly pan roasted, all of the natural sweetness of the oats retained and makes the best gruel.

Mother's Yellow Corn Meal
The kind from which you can make the corn bread, cakes, mush and muffins.

Mother's White Corn Meal
Carefully prepared from the finest grains. Delicious for corn bread and cakes. The kind dearest to the heart of the southern housewife.

Mother's Granulated Hominy
Made from carefully selected white corn, by modern methods of manufacture. A food far superior to the ordinary hominy.

Mother's Coarse Pearl Hominy
Made from selected white flint corn of the highest quality. Coarser than Mother's Hominy Grits and requires a little longer in the cooking.

The Mother's Oats Fireless Cooker, given free with coupons found in Mother's Cereals, needs no fuel of any sort. Ask your grocer how you can get one free. If he doesn't keep Mother's cereals, send us his name and yours and we will send you free a useful souvenir.

CHAPTER VII.

MORE WRECKS.

THE next morning Moran grudgingly announced that he would probably be able to get Jackson a temporary job in the bakeshop. The helper was still sick.

Gentle soon arrived, accompanied by the young diver. Both were intensely interested in the millionaire's venture. This morning Gentle was off duty, while Philip had another diving job to attend to. Philip went away, first arranging with Haggleton to meet him at Chatham square at a quarter past 12.

Nor was the morning wasted. Gentle put up shelves; Haggleton sorted out rubbish. Gentle quietly noticed that Joe was actually busy under the driving influence of the millionaire. Jenny helped with suggestions and little touches. The flat was beginning to take on a homelike air.

At 12 o'clock Haggleton left the flat to keep his appointment. He was in excellent spirits.

"Ah," exclaimed Philip as they met, "so you came! You're game, all right. Well, let's eat—in here. Keep your hat on."

They entered a Bowery restaurant near Chatham square, a battered place seen through two dusty windows. At long tables were silent, shifty eyed men who seemed to sit as far apart as possible. And they all kept their hats on and their coat collars turned up, while hard faced waiters moved among them bawling out orders.

"Not bad, that pie," declared Haggleton as they came out. "Now I'm ready for anything you can show me, the worst you can show me."

Philip's face was set. This man wanted to see poverty and misery. Very well.

"I know an old lady on Roosevelt street," he said, "who is dying of consumption. We'll go there first."

On the way he spoke briefly of the case. The old lady had no one in the world to care for her but a little granddaughter eight years old. The child went to school, so the sick woman was absolutely alone for hours every day. And she was so feeble she could scarcely lift herself from the bed.

Philip turned into a dark hallway with greasy green walls; they climbed four flights of stairs to a tiny room at the back. The floor was bare of covering, and the only furniture was a cot bed, two chairs and a little stove. There was one window, and the walls were painted red.

The dying woman lay propped against a pillow, and her thin face brightened as she saw Philip. No, she wasn't lonely, and, anyway, Ella mustn't miss her school. Oh, yes, they were comfortable enough. Ella didn't mind sleeping on a blanket—over there in the corner. The rent? Why, $4 a month. It was a nice room, only she wished the sun could shine in. She loved the sun. There were a few weeks in June when the sun did shine in, but June was a long way off. She closed her eyes wearily and lay still.

"Well?" asked Philip.

"There's nothing to say," replied Haggleton. "She's going to die. We're all going to die."

"But that child—only eight years old?"

"It's life," said Haggleton.

The next case was farther down the street—an Irish longshoreman about thirty-five, who also was nearing his end—consumption and cancer of the throat. He had been in the hospital, but had come home for his last days. He wanted to be near the wife and the kid—a little fellow of five, playing about, barefoot, on the cold floor.

The sick man lay in a foul back room where there was no window. He knew that he was dying, but he was happy to be home again near the wife and the kid. He was in no pain.

Haggleton beckoned the woman into the front room and questioned her. It was exposure to bad weather that had caused his sickness, not drinking. Did she work herself? Yes; she did cleaning.

As they came away Haggleton discussed this case. What could you expect? There must have been some taint in him. A sound man doesn't get cancer and consumption. He didn't; Philip didn't. This Irishman was evidently unsound.

"Haven't you any pity for an unsound man?" protested Philip.

"What's the use of pity? An unsound man is unsound. He's sure to perish; better he should. The way to improve the race is to prune away the weak and unworthy. That's what poverty does."

"And the weak ought to perish—you really mean that?"

"Certainly, whether they're weak in body or mind."

"My God!" exclaimed Philip. "That's the most brutal talk I ever heard!"

"Brutal, yes, but—think it over. I say the weak and the unworthy ought to perish. It's true when you grow fruits, when you breed animals, isn't it? Then why isn't it true if you want to build up a race of men?"

"Because"—Philip hesitated—"because the greatest authority in the world is against you."

"What authority is that?"

"The authority that says, 'Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me.'"

"H'm!" grunted Haggleton and fell into silence.

They had come to a block of better looking tenements and made their way to a four room flat with signs of relative prosperity if not of cleanliness. This was the home of a strong Italian woman who supported her family by taking in washing. The mother explained that her husband had temporarily abandoned her, so she had taken two lady boarders.

The two lady boarders presently appeared, one showing a hand bulkily bandaged and the other a very queer face. It was the girl with the bandaged hand who had stirred Philip's interest. She was a "dipper" at the gold dust factory in which Jenny Moran worked and had contracted tuberculosis of the joints. This had shown itself in her hand, which had swollen to double its size and had just been operated upon at the hospital. She unwrapped the cloth and exposed a sickly, whitish mass with deep red cuts where the knife had gone. The hand looked dead and useless.

Philip whispered to Haggleton that the doctor had told him the disease would probably spread through the girl's body and ultimately kill her. It was clearly a life put in jeopardy by a dangerous trade.

But Haggleton's curiosity was not yet satisfied. He wanted to know what was the matter with the other lady boarder's face. And after some questioning he discovered that she was the victim of a beauty doctor. In spite of her poverty, she had somehow raised $90 and given it to this wretch—sixty for removing a deep frown line in her forehead and thirty for filling in a wrinkle. And the result was that the paraffin injected into the forehead had run together in a lump, so that she seemed to have a perpetual angry boil between her eyes, while the paraffin for the wrinkle had spread under her cheek, making it now red, now purple, according to the weather. She had become a living barometer.

"The greatest authority in the world is against you."

"Now, then," triumphed Haggleton on the floor below, "was I right in saying that the poor are extravagant? Ninety dollars for a beauty doctor when she had no shoes!"

"She was foolish," admitted Philip, "but there are worse things than that."

He turned into a forbidding street that stretched like a sinister canyon between two rows of evil looking tenements.

"Do you know who owns this block?" asked Philip.

"Why—er—yes, of course; I own it."

"And it's one of the possessions you needn't be proud of. Every room and corner is poisoned with consumption germs. They call it 'lung block.'"

"'Lung block,'" mused Haggleton. "Well, that's only a name."

Philip entered the first tenement at hand and stopped at two narrow doors that stood side by side halfway down the hall. He opened these doors and looked in. Then he went up another flight and opened two corresponding doors.

"What are you doing?"

"Wait," replied Philip, and he continued his search in the next tenement.

"Ah!" he exclaimed. "I thought so." They were standing in the half lighted hallway of a third floor.

"Look there!" He pointed to the boards under one of the two doors.

"They are wet," said Haggleton. Then he looked closer. "No; it's not water. It—it's red!"

"Open the door," said Philip.

Haggleton obeyed and in spite of himself started back at the stench. "Horrible!" he cried. "What is it?"

"One of the signs," answered Philip, "a thing you can see almost any day in this block."

"But—but where does it come from?"

Philip answered sternly: "From the men and women and children who pay you rent for tainted homes. Sometimes it's sprinkled all along the halls. They have no marble bathrooms, sir, these tenants of yours, when they have hemorrhages!"

He Beat the Baker.

His name was Johnny, and he was the idol of his mother's heart in spite of what the neighbors might say to his detriment.

"You'll get my bread today before returning to school, John," remarked his mother to the boy while he indulged in his midday meal.

"Yes, mother," answered he and shortly went forth to carry out his mother's wishes.

"A quartern of bread—yesterday's, please," murmured John sweetly as he tendered fivepence halfpenny in payment of the two loaves forthcoming.

"Bread has gone up, my boy, one halfpenny," remarked Mr. Dough as he held out his hand for the needful balance.

"When?" queried John thoughtfully as the prospect of a distasteful double journey flashed across his mind.

"This morning, my lad, if that is any consolation."

Johnny's face brightened visibly. "Yes, I think it is," he remarked spasmodically, "for it was yesterday's bread I ordered."

The baker concluded he had no claim.—London Telegraph.

The Candle Tree.

One of the wonders of the vegetable kingdom is undoubtedly the candle tree of Panama, known to botanists as Parmentiera cerifera. This tree produces from its stem and older branches a great profusion of yellowish, cylindrical, smooth fruits, twelve to eighteen inches long, which appear exactly like wax candles, as the botanical name implies. So close is this resemblance that travelers, seeing the tree for the first time, are liable to be temporarily puzzled as to whether the candles of shops are made in factories or grown on trees! The candle-like fruits are suspended from the branches and bare stem by short, slender stalks, dangling in the air, and readily give the impression of the chandler's shop. As night falls and the numerous fireflies move among the fruit this impression is intensified. The inexperienced traveler is not infrequently informed that the fireflies perform the duty of lighting up these "candles" at night when light is required by the denizens of the jungle—London Strand.

A Lich Gate.

A lich gate is a shed, generally of oak, over the entrance of a churchyard, beneath which the bearers paused when bringing a body for interment. Here the clergyman met the body and read the introductory part of the burial service as he preceded the funeral train into the church. Examples of old lich gates are still to be seen in many country churchyards. In Wales they are more modern and are usually built of stone. Some of the old lich gates are formed with one wide door turning on a central pivot and self closing by means of a rude pulley wheel in the roof and a stone weight inclosed in an iron frame, a primitive but effective piece of machinery. In Herefordshire they are also called "scallage" or "scallenge" gates. "Lich gate" is derived from the Anglo-Saxon lich, a corpse; hence the north country "lyke wake."—London Answers.

Hypnotic Power In Animals.

An interesting instance of the hypnotic power possessed by a good many animals is given by a correspondent of the Glasgow Herald. One morning outside Elgin a blackbird was observed to be standing by the roadside, paying no heed to the footsteps of the passerby. It was gazing fixedly at four young weasels under the hedge, which were approaching in a semicircle, apparently to surround it. Just then a warning cry was heard from behind, uttered presumably by the parent weasel, and the young ones disappeared in the hedge. The bird still remained powerless and immovable, and only after repeated urging did it fly to a tree near by, when it gave forth a weak, frightened sound, as though still under the influence of the terror which had arrested its faculties.

A BOSTON GIRL'S BUDGET.

Boy Cornetists in Park Street Belfry Play "Home, Sweet Home" to Departing Toilers—Football Game Leaves a Legacy of Sore Throats and Sore Heads—Bostonians Have the Get-Presents-Quick Habit—The First Symphony Soloist Trained Exclusively on This Side of the Water.

The Harvard-Yale game has left many sore throats—and it is to be feared a few sore heads—in its wake. Nevertheless there will be just as much shouting next year, for one side or the other.

Thousands of workers in the great city on their way to spend Thanksgiving in the old home felt their blood quicken and pleasant anticipations crowd thick and fast as they passed the Park Street Church Wednesday noon and heard the strains of "Old Hundred "and "Home, Sweet Home" float clear and pure from the belfry where the boy cornetists, after the plan inaugurated last year, bade them a musical Godspeed.

People in other cities who think of the Hub's rapid transit facilities as something complete, do not always realize what a lot of new construction is going on to perfect a model system. Just now residents of the southern suburbs of Boston are giving thanks that the Forest Hills Elevated extension has been opened, and that trains instead of humble trolley cars are regularly carrying them to and from their downtown destinations. Those who have occasion to change cars at Dudley Street, to be sure ,have had serious times finding themselves in the great system of stairs, overhead walks "merry-go-rounds," and the like, but when they get used to it they find that the plan is really very simple and conducive to the least possible crowding and confusion. During the final operations at the Dudley Street Terminal it has been necessary to shift the various car lines frequently ,starting them from different parts of the station than is usual, but at no time has the Elevated Company failed to take care of its patrons even under the most complicated conditions. Boston is really getting to be quite a big city—the rush hour at the terminal reminds one forcibly of Brooklyn Bridge.

"And the greatest of these is charity." In spite of, or rather because of, the red tape which Boston's Overseers of the Poor tied about the Salvation Army, the public has contributed generously through private channels to the work of the Army in providing dinners and baskets of food for the poor on Thanksgiving Day. It was feared that only a very small number could be provided for, but when the day arrived over 4,500 dinners were furnished, some 2,500 of these being sent out in baskets to families. This is about 1,000 more than last year. Knowledge of the restrictions imposed by the Overseers of the Poor is now sufficiently widespread to arouse the hope that the Christmas funds may come in promptly and that every private property holder in and around Boston will allow the Army to station one of its lieutenants thereon for the purpose of collecting the wherewithal to make many hearts light on Christmas Day. But perhaps before that time the limitations which threatened to handicap Colonel Gifford and his aides may be removed and their good work be allowed to continue on the even tenor of its way.

Because the get-presents-quick habit has been preached for some years back many Bostonese shoppers are already beginning to wish that they had started even earlier to get those Christmas gifts. The stores are filling up and it is quite impossible to do more than half the errands which one sets out to accomplish. It is noticeable, however, that many more people this year than last are wearing a satisfied smile as they look at the hurrying crowds of gift-seekers and the remark is frequently heard, "Oh, yes, I have almost all my Christmas presents bought already—just a few little things to finish up. And, really, I have saved quite a little money by getting them early, to say nothing of my nerves; it is so much easier when you can take your time and get just what you want." These fortunate beings, it is safe to say, will be much better natured, and in much better physical condition on Christmas morning to enjoy their own gifts, than the worn out wrecks who have elbowed through the stores the entire week before and then been dissatisfied with their purchases.

The Bryn Mawr club of Boston is preparing to give two notable performances Dec. 10-11 of the Greek play "Medea" by Euripides in Gilbert Murray's verse translation. Greek plays are confined, as a rule, to college or club productions and the forthcoming event promises to be a rare treat for Hubbites. Daily rehearsals are taking place in Sanders theatre, Cambridge, and under the direction of no less a personage than George Riddle who is still remembered for his presentation of Oedipus Tyrannus at Harvard in 1881. The music is by Malcolm Lang, son of the late B. J. Lang, who is also training the singers and accompanists. Joseph Lindon Smith, the well known painter, is in charge of the costuming and scenery, and there seems to be no possible excuse for the performance being anything but a success. The purpose of the Bryn Mawr club in making this unique effort is to increase the fund which is being raised by graduates of Bryn Mawr in order to obtain a large gift which has been promised conditionally by the General Education Board. Nothing of equal importance to this Greek play has been seen in Boston since the performance of Agamemnon at the Stadium. If the two performances scheduled to take place in Jordan Hall are as successful as is anticipated, it is rumored that a third presentation may be given.

A marked change in the attitude of Americans toward professional musicians is evident. The recent concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra, given in Sanders theatre of Harvard University, was the first occasion on which this famous musical organization has ever accompanied a soloist who has neither studied nor played in one of the European musical centres. The musician so unusually honored was Miss Florence Fern Larrabee, a young southern girl who some time ago gained the attention of Ignace Paderewski through her rendering of his own Concerto in A minor for the pianoforte in which she was accompanied by the orchestra of the New England Conservatory of Music. So impressed was the great artist that he took the copy from which Miss Larrabee had played and wrote upon it: "With congratulations upon a very fine performance of this concerto. I. J. Paderewski." Miss Larrabee is one of the increasing number of young American music students who feel that it is possible to obtain an adequate and finished education in this country without undergoing the hardships, the dangers which accompany the so-called Bohemian way of living in the foreign art and music quarters, and the exorbitant financial demands which are made of Americans before they are allowed to make their debut in some small provincial town. She came to Boston from Virginia four years ago and entered the New England Conservatory of Music, where she studied for three years with Carl Stasny of the faculty, after which she received a diploma as a graduate of the pianoforte department. Shortly after the performance which gained the commendation of Paderewski Miss Larrabee gave a private recital in Mr. Stasny's room at the Conservatory, at which her audience consisted of Max Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. This exhibition of her ability resulted in her being chosen as soloist for the orchestra at its Cambridge concert on November 18. No less significant of the growing prominence of American music is the fact that her particular part of the program was the second concerto in D minor by the gifted composer, Edward MacDowell. This attitude of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, taken in conjunction with the policy of the Boston Opera Company which is giving young American singers opportunities of making their debut in grand opera in this country, indicates that the trained musician on this side of the water is coming to his own, and promises much for the future of vocal and instrumental music as well as composition by native talent.

The Forbidden Fruit.

The botanical curiosities of the island of Ceylon are replete with varied interest. One of them is "the forbidden fruit," or "Eve's apple tree." Its native name is diwi kadura, kadura signifying "forbidden" and diwi "tigers." The flower of this extraordinary production is said to emit a fine scent. The color of the fruit, which hangs from the branches in a very peculiar and striking manner, is very beautiful, being orange on the outside and a deep crimson within. The fruit itself presents the appearance of having had a piece bitten out of it. This circumstance, together with the fact of its being a deadly poison, led the Mohammedans on their first discovery of Ceylon, which they assigned as the site of paradise, to represent it as the forbidden fruit of the garden of Eden, for, although the finest and most tempting in appearance of any, it had been impressed, such was their idea, with the mark of Eve's having bitten it to warn men from meddling with a substance possessing such noxious properties.

A Mild Hint.

Two guests came to spend the evening and didn't know when to depart. The host and hostess were patient with them, very patient, but when 11, 12 and finally 1 o'clock struck the husband realized that something must be done. He was an original chap, and in his droll way he looked over at his wife and said mildly:

"My dear, hadn't we better get up to bed? Our friends may want to be going."

The Separation.

"I understand that she is separated from her husband."

"Yes."

"Oh, tell me all about it. What did she do?"

"Nothing. He died."

NO MORE GRAY HAIR.

It is easier to preserve the color of the hair than to restore it, although it is possible to do both. Our grandmothers understood the secret. They made and used a "sage tea," and their dark, glossy hair long after middle life was due to this fact. Our mothers have gray hair before they are fifty, but they are beginning to appreciate the wisdom of our grandmothers in using "sage tea" for their hair, and are fast following suit. The present generation has the advantage of the past in that it can get a ready to use preparation called Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur. As a scalp tonic and color restorer, this preparation is vastly superior to the ordinary "sage tea" made by our grandmothers, and it can be bought for 50 cents and $1 a bottle at almost any first-class drug store, or will be sent direct by the Wyeth Chemical Company, 74 Cortlandt St., New York City, upon receipt of price.

THE WEATHER

Local forecast for Quincy and vicinity:

Thursday, snow in the morning followed by rain; gradually rising temperature.

Cloudy and unsettled weather with occasional rains is indicated for Friday.

The temperature at noon today was 36 degrees; a year ago 40 degrees.

BRIEFS

The bill of lading for the new steamer has been received and the engine is expected to arrive in Quincy by tonight's freight.

Harry W. McCabe of South Quincy, will appear in a vaudeville act at Quincy Music hall tonight. This is the first time he has appeared in his home town.

The many friends of Edward Hodge of Town hill, will be sorry to learn that he is ill in Chicago, where he went to work a few weeks ago. Mr. Hodge was taken sick shortly after his arrival in Chicago with rheumatism and since then has been unable to work.

The funeral of Dexter Smith the dramatist and song writer, who died suddenly in Boston on Sunday took place Wednesday afternoon from the home of Frank Gardner Smith, his brother, of 519 Washington street, Brookline. The services were conducted by Rev. Dr. Conrad of the Park Street church. Quincy friends sent floral tributes.

Miss Carol Parris who formerly resided with Mrs. Arthur Roberts on Crescent street, has gone to Springfield. Miss Parris was president of the Lend-A-Hand club and also a member of the Epworth League of the Hall Place M. E. church and will be greatly missed, not only by the members of these societies with whom she actively worked but all the friends she made during her stay in West Quincy, and she carries with her the best wishes of all with whom she was associated.

The first of a series of mission meetings was held Wednesday night at the Swedish Lutheran church. Nine ministers were present and a lively discussion took place, on the subject: "Means for furthering the Kingdom of God." The Jubeteum will continue throughout the week. Thursday evening a concert will take place when Miss Edith Vennemark from Cambridge will sing and others will take part in the program.

A large circle of friends will sympathize with Mr. and Mrs. Daniel J. Deasy of Woodward avenue in the death this morning of their oldest child, William Arthur Deasy, of heart failure following diphtheria. It was thought that he and his brother Edward had passed the crisis, as the disease had left them, but his heart was weakened. William was a pupil of the Coddington school, aged 12 years, and will be remembered as one of the pages at the annual balls held by the Elks at Quincy Music hall. Private funeral services were held this afternoon.

BRIGHT PROSPECT FOR ICE HOCKEY

Quality of Game Will be Better Than That of Last Season.

NEW LEAGUES BEING FORMED

Banner Year Anticipated For Game of Crooked Stick and Rubber Disk. Great Interest In College Game—Intercollegiate Schedule.

The exceedingly dubious prospects which were held forth at the close of last season for ice hockey this winter have been cleared away, and an optimistic sun is shining forth from a clear sky. There were many who have followed the game since its infancy who predicted that the season of 1909-10 would be productive of poor hockey, and on the surface of things they were figuring along the right lines. But they neglected to realize that the managements of the various hockey league teams were fully aware of the conditions.

Immediately after the close of last season these men started work. It was hard work, too, to build up their various clubs so that they could make a good showing this season, but they went about it in a businesslike manner, and it is believed at this time that their efforts have been crowned with success.

It is now predicted by those on the inside of hockey matters that the coming season will be one of the banner years of the great winter sport.

The increasing popularity of the game is evidenced by the many projects for organizing leagues that are arising in different sections of the country. Talk is still rife of a league to include Cleveland, Chicago, Pittsburg and New York and one or two cities across the border. However, it seems as though this plan has not taken tangible form that would lead one to expect developments this season. On the other hand, the organization of minor amateur leagues throughout the middle west and the evident booming of the sport at the eastern colleges lend color to the thought that the game of the crooked stick and rubber disk will in a few years attain really big proportions.

No better example of the increasing popularity of hockey is at hand than that afforded by the admitting of Cornell into the Intercollegiate Hockey league. For three years the Ithacans tried to obtain entrance into the organization, but were not successful until recently.

But it appears that Cornell is not the only college that is taking up

READ, PRINCETON'S CLEVER COVERPOINT.

[Read, Princeton star coverpoint, was one of the stellar lights in the Intercollegiate hockey world last season. He was given a place on several all collegiate teams He is one of the greatest defensive players in the country.]

hockey on a more extensive scale. Williams, Pennsylvania, Carnegie Tech and Rensselaer Tech are clamoring for dates with members of the "big six." From present indications at least two of these sevens may play in New York during the coming season. Princeton will very probably face off with Williams on Dec. 23, and arrangements are said to be under way to bring Pennsylvania's stick wielders to Gotham.

If the plans of Pittsburg and Cleveland men go through a four, five or seven club circuit will be formed shortly, and when the ice season closes it will be possible to determine the college championship of western Pennsylvania and Ohio.

It was originally planned to organize a league composed of teams representing the University of Pittsburg, Carnegie Tech, Washington and Jefferson and Penn State. In view of the rapidly increasing enthusiasm in hockey, demonstrated in Cleveland and Columbus, it was then suggested that Western Reserve and Case of Cleveland and Ohio State university of Columbus be invited to join.

The schedule for the eastern intercollegiate colleges is as follows:

The dates are: Jan. 6, Princeton versus Columbia at New York; 8, Cornell versus Harvard at New York; 12, Columbia versus Harvard at Cambridge (if ice); 12, Dartmouth versus Princeton at Boston; 15, Princeton versus Harvard at New York; 20, Dartmouth versus Columbia at Boston; 22, Princeton versus Cornell at New York; 22, Dartmouth versus Yale at Boston; 26, Yale versus Princeton at New York. Feb. 5, Yale versus Cornell at New York; 9, Dartmouth versus Cornell at Boston; 10, Yale versus Columbia at New York; 12, Harvard versus Dartmouth at Boston; 19, Columbia versus Cornell at New York; 19, Harvard versus Yale at Boston.

ST. MARYS IN TIE GAME

A 19 to 19 Score with St. Alphonsus A. A.

The St. Mary's first team and St. Alphonsus played a tie game Wednesday night at West Roxbury, the score being 19 to 19, although the fans that were with them claim the game, and state the score 20 to 19, on account of a foul on St. Alphonsus. When the St. Mary's were about to shoot the basket the ball was kick out of the players hands and before the ball could be recovered the last half gong was sounded. The St. Alphonsus claim tie score, but according to the rules the St. Mary's should receive the basket and the score would then read St. Mary's 20, St. Alphonsus 19. The feature plays of the game was of Roberston, and Sullivan who had their shooting eye on the basket by shooting clean baskets from the floor.

| ST ALPHONSUS | ST MARY'S |
|---|---|
| Duffy, rf | lb Mullen |
| Doran, lf | rb, Duggan |
| Kiley, c | c, McLoughlin |
| Mullaly, rb | lf, Sullivan |
| Cameron, lb | rf, Robertson |

Score, St Alphonsus 19, St Mary's 19. Goals from floor, Cameron 3, Mullaly 3, Kiley 2, Robertson 3, Sullivan 2, McLoughlin 2, Duggan 2. Goals from fouls, Doran 3, Mullen. Referee, Delaney. Scorer, Newman. Time, 20m halves. Attendance 1'0.

DORCHESTER STARS WIN.

The Dorchester Stars defeated the Houghs Neck Independents Wednesday night at basket ball in Pandora hall, Houghs Neck, 30 to 21. Conly starred for Dorchester, while Trask did great work for Houghs Neck. The line-up:

|---|---|
| Abbott rf | rf, Kiley |
| Trask, lf | sf, Seavey |
| Hodgkinson, c | c, Finlay |
| Acorn, rb | rb, Conly |
| Coughlan, lb | lb, Gallagher |

Score: Dorchester, 30; Houghs Neck, 21. Referee, Manning. Time keeper, O'Brien.

WHIST TOURNAMENT.

The weekly whist tournament of the Granite City club Wednesday evening brought out a good number of players. The play was started at 8.30 with eight tables and 25 hands were played. The top score was 39 won and 17 lost, a percent of 69 plus. The second best score was 36 won and 19 lost, a percent of 65 plus. There were several who secured over 60 per cent. The two best scores were made by Mark L. Read, Jr., and J. H. Penniman.

TODAY'S COURT.

Nathaniel Curley was arraigned for drunkenness at Holbrook. Case continued until Dec. 29.

Antonio Amerosa was fined $20 for creating a disturbance on the steam cars at Quincy.

Samuel Davidson was fined $35 for running a moving picture show without a license at Music hall. Case continued until Dec. 15.

OPEN LETTER TO MAYOR

G. B. Bates Asks Six Pertinent Questions

Editor of Daily Ledger:

I have prepared an open letter to Mayor Shea which I desire published in your wide-awake paper tomorrow. It will ask him to explain to the voters six questions, as follows::

First,—Juggleing of the temperance question vs. 29 licenses.

Second—Grade crossing depression, vs. Chinese walls.

Third—Removal of officials for political reasons vs. not removing for the good of the service.

Fourth—Official unrighteousness vs. civic righteousness.

Fifth—Discrimination and unfair methods in the letting of city contracts and work vs. a square deal.

Sixth—Unmitigated extravagance in our city affairs vs. economical, safe and sane methods in the spending of the taxpayers' money.

G. B. Bates.

Dimmock Street, Quincy.

NEW SUPERINTENDENT.

F. E. Perkins, who has been employed as foreman and in other capacities at the Dover street locomotive terminal of the New York, New Haven & Hartford railroad has severed his connection with the railroad and has accepted a position as superintendant in the rubber factory situated on the site of the old paper mill on Hancock street, South Braintree. The first of the week he was presented a beautiful chest of silver by his shopmates. John H. Dahlgren, another old employee of the railroad made the presentation in the presence of the assembled employees. A box of flowers was also given Mr. Perkins for his wife. He was completely surprised and visibly effected but managed to give expression to a few words of thanks and appreciation. Mr. Perkins served the road for twenty-one years.

IMPROVEMENT ASSOCIATION.

An adjourned meeting of the West Quincy Improvement Association was held Thursday evening with President Stephen B. Little in the chair. Several citizens were elected to membership which now numbers between 75 and 100.

The new by-laws of the association were distributed among the members. A general discussion followed on the needs of that section of the city, and with united action it is expected that some of the things desired will be realized.

No definite action was taken upon any matter at the meeting other than it was decided that a supper should be held before New Year to bring the members together in a social way.

CORNER LOT SECURED

By St. Paul's Swedish Methodist Church

The members of the Swedish Methodist church gathered in the church Thursday evening to turn in their pledge cards. These cards have this year taken the place of any fair or entertainment to raise funds for the church and were very successful, as $300 was turned in, and at least $100 more are expected. The highest card brought in by one member had $72.

The corner lot on the north of the church, at the corner of Granite and Fort streets has been purchased by the church and part of this sum will be expended in clearing the title in the land courts. The pastor, Rev. E. Rydstrom feels highly satisfied with the result as does also William Gellotte, who was very active in the campaign to raise the money.

ANNIVERSARY EXERCISES

Work of the Swedish Lutheran Church Reviewed

Services were held Thursday evening in the Swedish Lutheran church in connection with the 20th anniversary. The church was well filled to hear the treat offered for there were ten prominent ministers from all over New England on hand to speak. The pastor Rev. S. N. Elvin was in charge of the ceremonies and he had an interesting and varied program prepared.

It was the second day of the celebration, and from 9 till 12 in the forenoon a business meeting was held at which the mission work in the Boston district was discussed, and also the issuing of a Swedish Lutheran paper.

The program of the evening consisted of a concert and address by Rev. J. A. Anderson of Brockton, and the church was filled to overflowing. Rev. Anderson is a well known and able speaker.

The services opened with a Pepargel solo followed by the singing of a Psalm. There were selections during the evening from the choir and also solos by Miss Edith Wennmark. A duet by Miss E. Whitting and Fritz Swanson was thoroughly enjoyed as was also the trio singing of Fritz, Arthur and Edward Swanson.

Rev. J. A. Anderson outlined the history of the church, its remarkable growth and its noble work in doing good amongst its people in Quincy.

Benediction was offered by Rev. A. M. L. Herannius. The ten ministers who were present representing the Boston District were: President—Rev. John E. Everett of Manchester, N. H.; Secretary—Rev. A. C. Helander of North Easton; Rev. C. F. Johnson of Boston; Rev. A. M. L. Herannius of Norwood; Rev. J. A. Anderson of Brockton; Rev. E. J. Peterson of Waltham; A. F. Eastrom of Boston; Rev. A. Hamlof of Lowell; Rev. A. A. Wilfred of Lynn; and Rev. Henry Jacobson of Cambridge.

CANDIDATE AT ATLANTIC.

A smoke talk in the interest of Walter F. Nichols for Mayor was held at Atlantic on Thursday evening at which Mr. Nichols outlined some of the issues of the campaign which was practically the same as were advanced at the South Quincy and Wollaston meetings. Remarks were also made by a number of citizens and candidates for the Council. The meeting was an enthusiastic one, and confidence is the ability of the Republican candidate to win were expressed by all of the speakers. After the meeting Mr. Nichols went to Ward Two where he held a conference with the Ward Committee. As there is no hall in that ward it will not be possible to hold a rally there.

FIREMAN ELECTROCUTED ON FIRE ALARM

Accident Occured at Corner of Beale and Farrington Streets, Wollaston

Fred Jones, aged 38 years, of Edison Park, an electrician employed on the fire alarm wires, was electrocuted this noon by becoming entangled in the wires on the pole in front of the Wollaston Unitarian church, at the corner of Beale and Farrington streets.

Jones, with Superintendent of Fire Alarm Michael J. Barry, was at work on the fire alarm wires. Barry stood on the ground, and Mr. Jones mounted the pole to work on the wires. He stood on the second arm working when his left hand came in contact with the alternation current electric light wire carrying 2000 volts. There was a flash and Jones fell over the wires, his cheek resting upon them. Realizing what had happened Barry ran to the Wollaston fire station and telephoned the Electric Light Co. to shut off the current.

A hurry call was also sent out for the police ambulance and physicians, and to Chief Williams. In the meantime the Wollaston truck made a quick hitch and ran to the scene. A ladder was raised and Mr. Barry mounted the pole. With considerable difficulty a rope was passed about the prostrate body and he was lowered to the ground.

The body had hardly been taken down when Medical Examiner Jones dashed up in his automobile. Doctors Thompson, Record and Adams were also soon on the scene. The doctors went to work trying to restore life. While a slight spark of life was visible, but little hopes were entertained of reviving the unfortunate man.

After working on him for half an hour he was placed on a stretcher and taken into a nearby house. There the physicians continued their efforts to restore life until after 1 o'clock when they gave it up.

The contact was evidently made through the man's left hand for one finger was burnt to a crisp. The ladder used was also burned where it came in contact with the wires. The accident happened just about noon and it was an hour later before hope of reviving life was given up.

The wire that did the damage was burned off ,and dropped into the street across the car track and cars were delayed until the arrival of the Electric Light Co. emergency crew.

Mr. Jones has been employed on the fire department wires for some years and has had several narrow escapes from being electrocuted. It was about a year ago that he was overcome by gas while working in a telephone manhole and fell against the wires and received a severe shock which incapacitated him from duty for some weeks.

Mr. Jones was a married man and leaves a widow and four children. The body was taken in the police ambulance to Hall's undertaking rooms.

HEART TO HEART TALK

At Conference on the Street Railway Service

The special committee on street railway service held an important meeting Thursday evening which was attended by the committee on railway service of the West Quincy Improvement Association and other citizens. Superintendents Conway and Gammon of the Street Railway company were also present.

The meeting was in the nature of a heart to heart talk on railway service in Quincy. The committee and gentlemen present spoke at length telling what grievances and complaints they had to make. One of the main things discussed was the matter of a suitable waiting room in City Square, all of the gentlemen present telling of the great need of such a room. The West Quincy gentlemen desired most of all a continuation of the line from East Milton over Granite avenue to connect with the Adams street line of the Boston Elevated. Some of the minor matters that would tend to improve the service and the convenience of the travelling public were also touched upon.

After the complaints had been outlined, Supt. Conway took them up and spoke at length. It was the desire of the railway to do what it could for its patrons. Some of the things mentioned would be remedied and the more important matters he promised to investigate and look into immediately.

The meeting which was largely a conference was perfectly harmonious and much good will doubtless result from the work of the committee who have the matter in hand.

SWEDISH SOCIAL.

One of the most picturesque affairs ever held in Electa hall took place Thursday evening when the Swedish LLadies sewing circle connected with the Swedish Socialist club held their annual dancing party and social . The ladies attended in full national costume, two representing each province in Norway and Sweden. In their bright costumes, dancing their national dance which translated to English is called, "My girl and I," they were a pretty and fascinating sight. Those in costume were: Mrs. M. Stromberg, Mrs. H. Nelson, Mrs. H. O.'Brien, Miss Fannie Diralles, Miss Anna Olsen, Misses Edith and Ellen Nelson, Miss D. Peterson, Miss E. Kolstrom, Miss Agnes Johnson, Miss Louise Vester, Miss Agnes Levquist, Miss Corinne Ericson, and Miss Anna Peterson.

NOMINEES FOR TUESDAY

Three Candidates in the Field for Mayor

All nominations have now been made for the City election of next week. The voters at large must select a Mayor from a list of three: William T. Shea, who is a candidate for re-election, and has the endorsement of Democrats and Citizens; Walter F. Nichols, the Republican candidate; and Edgar Norton, the Socialist candidate. Mr. Nichols' name appears first on the ballot.

Five Councilman at large are to be elected, and the Republicans have a complete ticket, including two members of the present Council, an ex-Councilman , an ex-Representative, and Ernest W. Branch for many years connected with the Sewerage department as engineer. Edward J. Sandberg has both the Republican and Democratic nominations, and is the only candidate endorsed by Democrats. In addition, as Independents, are two members of the present City Council, Alfred H. Gilson and Charles A. Hadlock, and also two Socialists, nine in all for the five places.

Edward H. Bushnell, who is a candidate for reelection on the School Board, is opposed by George M. Sheahan, a Democrat.

Voters at large are also asked to vote Yes or No on the License question, and Yes or No on the acceptance of the act allowing the city to pension firemen.

For Councilmen from Ward, there are in Ward One five nominees for three places. In Ward Two eight nominees. In Ward Three, six. In Ward Four, five. In Ward Five, four. And in Ward Six, five. In all 33 nominees for 18 places.

For School Committee from Ward One and Ward Five there are no contests, both Dexter E. Wadsworth and William G. Curtis being candidates for reelection.

The vote for Mayor last year was as follows:

BRIEFS

The Wollaston Tennis club will hold the second of its series of dances at Brazee's hall tonight.

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Frechette of New York have been the guests for the past week of Mr. and Mrs . J. B. Picard of Rodman street.

Mrs. L. Laporte formerly of Boston now residing in Quincy, will leave this week for California to spend the winter months.

The flag on the Coddington school was half mast Thursday out of respect of William Arthur Deasy, a pupil of the school, who died that day.

Miss Bessie Dean Cooper, who was teacher in French last year in the Quincy High school and who resigned her position in June to study at Yale, has written a very interesting article in Harper's Magazine for December under the title "A Hilltop in Paris" with illustrations etched by C. H. White. Miss Cooper spent the previous year studying in Paris before she came to Quincy, and her historial reminiscences are written in a very pleasing and scholarly manner.

There is a general misunderstanding about the Billiken dance planned for Thanksgiving eve at Atlantic Music hall. Several members of the club and their friends arrived at the hall between 8 and 9 o'clock and as the orchestra had not arrived they considered the dance postponed. The music came at quarter of ten, having been detained by the storm, and the dance was held, only six couples being present. Some dissatisfaction is felt by people who purchased tickets but as the club members have had to meet expenses they do not feel that it is necessary to refund the money of ticket holders.

WEYMOUTH D. A. R.

Susannah Tufts chapter, D. A. R., of Weymouth, held its regular meeting on Monday afternoon, at the home of Mrs. Charles T. Crane, 100 Quincy street, East Braintree, with many members present. The afternoon was well filled with business connected with the work of the chapter. This chapter with Colonel Thomas Lathrop chapter of Cohasset, is to entertain at D. A. R. headquarters. Pierce building, Boston ,on Dec. 13, and arrangements for that day were completed. Ways and means for raising money were discussed at some length and it was voted to have each member earn a dollar before the January meeting. It also was proposed to have a lecture in the near future. At the close of the business meeting, one of the members of the chapter read a most interesting paper describing a trip to the Northwest, made by the way of Denver to Seattle, with a visit to the Exposition. The trip included the Canadian Pacific region and the Yellowstone Park. The well-written paper held the attention of all from start to finish. The writer had many postal cards and other pictures which added much to the interest. At the close, the hostess served simple refreshments and the chapter adjourned till December.

—Citizens of the United States are planning to present a statue of George Washington to the Argentinian government upon the centennial of its independence in 1910.

—"How is your courtship coming along?"

"Oh, fairly well."

"Are you getting any nearer her father?"

"A trifle since fall began. We've moved in from the front veranda to the parlor and he's moved in from the back porch to the kitchen."—Washington Herald.

MESSAGE IS COMPLETED

Many Important Issues Are Said to Be Vigorously Discussed by Taft

Washington, Dec. 3.—President Taft has finished his annual message and proofs of the document are expected to reach him not later than this afternoon, when arrangements will be made at once for mailing it to newspapers throughout the country—a contrast with the Roosevelt habit of preparing messages two weeks ahead. It is estimated that beyond Denver the message must reach the publishers by wire.

Members who have been permitted to see the message say that it will lack nothing of the vigor of preceding utterances, but will discuss the great issues with no air of preachment.

Representatives Douglas of Ohio and Austin of Tennessee are deeply interested in the establishment of a bureau of mines and mining, telling the president that if there had been such a bureau with up-to-date methods the horrible mine disaster at Cherry, Ills., probably would have been averted. The president has made a recommendation for such a bureau.

MUST HAVE THEIR TIPS

Waiters Serve Notice on Coal Barons and Win Their Point

Pittsburg, Dec. 3.—The waiters at the exclusive Duquesne here gave the members of the house committee a bad half-hour last night when they announced that owing to the anti-tipping regulations which Chairman Hubbard was endeavoring to enforce they would not officiate at the dinner to be given to several United States senators by the Coal Operators' association last night.

A committee from the waiters also informed Hubbard that, even should he rescind the obnoxious order, they would refuse to serve millionaire members of the club whom they knew from past experiences as "dead ones."

It took Hubbard about half an hour to capitulate and the waiters are now "cocks of the walk."

RUEF IS RELEASED ON $300,000 BAIL

One Result of Defeat of Reformers In 'Frisco

San Francisco, Dec. 3.—Judge Cabannis ordered the release from custody of Abraham Ruef on $300,000 bail. This action followed a report by three physicians appointed by the court to examine the physical condition of the former political leader.

Ruef has been confined in the county jail since Nov. 13 of last year, his previous bail having been declared forfeited on the day Prosecutor Heney was shot in the courtroom.

Ruef is under sentence of fourteen years in the state prison for having bribed a supervisor to vote for a trolley franchise for the United railroads.

His release is regarded as a direct result of the recent election, when the reformers were badly beaten.

TWO VESSELS WRECKED

Three Members of the Crew of One of Them Are Drowned

Boston, Dec. 3.—Two wrecks off the Massachusetts coast yesterday cost the lives of three men, while eleven other members of the vessels' crews were rescued by government and volunteer life savers. The heavy northeasterly gale which has swept the coast for four days is responsible for both catastrophes.

Off Nantucket the crew of the steamer Vaderland performed a thrilling rescue at sea by saving seven lives from the schooner Eugene Borda as she foundered.

The treacherous Peaked Hill bars off Cape Cod also caused the loss of the schooner Mizpah and three members of her crew. Four others were saved by use of the breeches buoy.

NO WARNING OF DANGER

Men In St. Paul Mine Kept Working After Fire Was Discovered

Cherry, Ills., Dec. 3.—In the course of the testimony heard at the coroner's inquest, David Wright, one of the survivors of the St. Paul mine disaster, declared that the men were permitted to continue their work for more than half an hour after the discovery of the fire without any warning of danger.

Mrs. Margaret Troyer said she saw the last car of coal come to the surface two hours after the first alarm of fire. This statement was corroborated by Mrs. William Mills.

License Campaign Opens

New Bedford, Mass., Dec. 3.—David S. Rose, mayor of Milwaukee, addressed a rally here under the auspices of the Manufacturers and Dealers' league of New England, an organization which purposes to conduct a campaign for license in various cities of Massachusetts.

Boston Honors John Brown

Boston, Dec. 3.—The fiftieth anniversary of the execution of John Brown was observed in Faneuil Hall yesterday. Three sessions were held and many addresses were delivered on the life of Brown and the exciting events in which Boston leaders and Faneuil Hall played a part.

ASQUITH RESOLUTION PASSED

Declares That Rights of House of Commons Have Been Usurped and Breach of Constitution Committed by Rejection of Budget—King to Dissolve Parliament Today—Laborites Promise Premier Full Support

London, Dec. 3.—The house of commons, by a vote of 349 to 134, passed a resolution of Premier Asquith, to the effect that in rejecting the government's budget bill the house of lords had committed a breach of the constitution and usurped the rights of the house of commons.

Premier Asquith announced that the government had advised King Edward to dissolve parliament, and that the king had accepted the invitation. The premier added that if the Liberals were returned to power the first act of the government would be the re-enactment of all the taxes for which provision was made in the budget rejected by the house of lords. It is understood that parliament will be dissolved so as to permit the holding of elections between Jan. 10 and 20. The prorogation will take place today.

All the preliminaries to the great political battle are being cleared away at Sandringham, where the king held a meeting with the privy council, during which he signed an order proroguing parliament until Jan. 17, 1910. The fixing of this date was a mere formality, as before that time the present house will have been dissolved.

The centre of interest was the house of commons, where Asquith, on behalf of his government, delivered the reply to the action of the lords in withholding their consent upon the budget. The house was crowded with members and the galleries were filled with lords, diplomats and other distinguished personages.

Premier Asquith's first words as he rose amid the wildest demonstration of enthusiasm to move the resolution of which he had given notice on Tuesday were: "We are meeting under circumstances without example in the history of the British parliament."

With much emphasis Asquith declared that the house of commons would prove unworthy of its traditions if it allowed a single day to pass without making clear that it did not mean to brook the great indignity and arrogant usurpation of its rights.

After quoting authorities in favor of his contention that the commons had the exclusive right to determine the matter of taxation and expenditure, Asquith concluded:

"We are living under a system of false balances and loaded dice. When democracy voted for a Liberal government the dormant second chamber awoke from its slumbers and nullified the work of the house of commons. we shall ask the house by its vote and we shall ask the constituencies at the earliest possible moment to declare that the organ for the voice of the free people of this country is to be found in the accredited representatives of the nation."

The government's resolution was presented in the words in which notice of it was given and in substance as follows:

"Resolved, That the action of the house of lords in refusing to pass into law the financial provisions made by this chamber for the expenses of the year was a breach of the constitution and an usurpation of the rights of the house of commons."

Following the premier, A. J. Balfour strenuously defended the action of the lords, who, he said, had a clear conviction of their powers. Though the reference of bills to the country by the lords was rare, their opponents had no right to lay claim to this rarity as showing that the power of the upper chamber in this respect should fall into desuetude.

Labor Leader Arthur Henderson declared that the government would have the wholehearted support of his party. Following the debate, division was had on the resolution, which was carried by a vote of 349 to 134.

In announcing the support of the government by the Laborites, Henderson declared that the continuance of the second chamber as constituted at present was absurd. The lords, no longer content with their long record of obstruction and mutilation and destruction of legislation, through which they had defrauded the people of many of the fruits of self-government, had become emboldened sufficiently, he said, to try their hand at usurpation of the rights of the house of commons in regard to matters of finance. All the power that the Labor party possessed, he added, would be used to assist in securing an emphatic verdict that the county affirm the sense of the resolution presented by the prime minister.

Cuba's Heavy Imports

Havana, Dec. 3.—The customs receipts at Havana for the month of November amounted to $1,759,682, the largest in three years.

Rickard and Gleason Will Be Promoters of Johnson-Jeffries Scrap

New York, Dec. 3.—"Tex" Rickart of Goldfield and Ely, Nev., coupled with John J. Gleason of San Francisco, won the privilege of conducting the fight between Jack Johnson and James J. Jeffries for a purse of $101,000.

The picture privileges will be in charge of the fighters, but under the conditions of the bid one-third of the profits in the displays of them must be turned over to the promoters. The picture receipts are to be split evenly between the fighters by mutual agreement.

That the fight will be decided at Gleason's baseball park near San Francisco on July 4 is a near certainty. If a guarantee is put up by the business men of Salt Lake City, who are eager to have the championship battle there, Utah has a chance, but otherwise that state will be passed up.

Ely has a better chance than Salt Lake City. The only objection to San Francisco arises from the fact that it is a long distance from Broadway.

GOVERNOR IS DEFIED

Former City Marshal Blocks Investigation of Police Commission

Concord, N. H., Dec. 3.—The investigation before Governor Quinby and counsel of the Berlin police commission was abruptly adjourned until Dec. 28 because former City Marshal Youngcliff of that city refused to appear as a witness. He had been duly summoned and Attorney General Eastman tried in vain to induce him to come here and testify.

It is claimed that when Youngcliff was city marshal of Berlin in 1908 he told Mayor Bartlett that he had got police board instruction to "protect" certain liquor dealers and not to make raids until after election.

Governor Quinby said the question of his power to compel attendance of witnesses had never been raised before, but he intended to have the extent of his authority in this respect established.

YOUTH MAY HAVE WALKED IN SLEEP

Charged With Assault Upon Parents With a Pistol

South Framingham, Mass., Dec. 3.—What the police say may prove to be a somnambulist's attempt to murder two persons was disclosed by the arrest of 17-year-old Hinman Knowlton, son of Frederick H. Knowlton and wife, on a charge of assault.

While Mr. and Mrs. Knowlton were abed three shots were fired into the room, one grazing Mrs. Knowlton's forehead, another hitting Knowlton in the upper lip and jaw and the third embedding itself in the bed clothes. A revolver said to be owned by the son was found on the kitchen floor.

The first the police knew of the shooting was when Mrs. Knowlton's father-in-law came to the police station and asked that a warrant be sworn out charging young Knowlton with ascsault and battery.

CAUGHT BY HUSBAND

Woman Who Eloped From Boston Lands In Nashua Court

Nashua, N. H., Dec. 3.—In police court Clarence B. Partridge and Mrs. Florence G. Hayes of Boston were arraigned on a statutory charge, but at the request of Mrs. Hayes' husband, Richard B. Hayes, a Boston attorney, the complaint was amended and made more serious.

This results from the fact that Mrs. Hayes had left home two weeks ago with Partridge and came to this city, where they were living as man and wife. Hayes came here and swore out a warrant for their arrest. The police went to the house and found Partridge and Mrs. Hayes there.

Both defendants were held under $4000 bounds for appearance at superior court.

CELL LOCKS USELESS

Prisoners Could Easily Escape From Newburyport Police Headquarters

Newburyport, Mass., Dec. 3.—Following the escape of Joseph Turpin from his cell at police headquarters, City Marshal McLean had the cells examined and the very startling fact came to light that eight of the cages had been worked upon by prisoners until the locks could be easily pushed from their fastenings.

The cells are brick affairs with iron-barred doors. In nearly every case the cement had been dug from between the bricks.

Aged Woman Dies In Fire

Boston, Dec. 3.—In a small fire at 54 Appleton street Ellen E. Wass, aged 75, lost her life. She was a boarder in the house and was cooking her breakfast on a small oil stove in her room. In some manner the stove was tipped over and her clothing caught fire.

WYETH'S
SAGE AND SULPHUR
HAIR RESTORER
Grew a Full Growth of Hair On a Bald Head

Here's the Proof

For two or three years my hair had been falling out and getting quite thin, until the top of my head was entirely bald. About four months ago I commenced using Sage and Sulphur. The first bottle seemed to do some good and I kept using it regularly, until now I have used four bottles. The whole top of my head is now fairly covered with hair and it keeps coming in thicker. I shall keep on using it a while longer, as I notice a constant improvement.

SAGE FOR DARKENING THE HAIR.

There is nothing new about the idea of using sage for restoring the color of the hair. Our great-grandmothers kept their locks soft, dark and glossy by using a "sage tea." Whenever their hair fell out or took on a dull, faded or streaked appearance, they made a brew of sage leaves and applied it to their hair with wonderfully beneficial effect. Nowadays we don't have to resort to the old-time, tiresome method of gathering the herbs and making the brew. This is done by skillful chemists better than we could do it ourselves, and all we have to do is to call for the ready-made product. Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur, containing sage in the proper strength, with the addition of Sulphur, another old-time scalp remedy. This preparation is sold by all first-class druggists for 50c. and $1.00 a bottle, or is sent direct by the Wyeth Chemical Company, 74 Cortlandt St., New York City, upon receipt of price.

AMERICA IS ON THE OFFENSIVE

Naval Forces Are Being Hurried to Central America

THE VICKSBURG AT CORINTO

Formidable Array of Warships Hemming Nicaragua, With Large Forces of Fighters Ready to Face Zelaya's Men If Necessary—Admiral Kimball Chosen to Handle Delicate Questions Which May Demand Quick Response

Washington, Dec. 3.—Naval forces of the United States are being moved forward to both coasts of Central America, to protect American life and property in Nicaragua by force of arms, if the necessity arises.

With the departure from Philadelphia of the troop ship Prairie with 700 marines aboard for the Isthmus of Panama, and if it be so decreed, for Nicaragua, and with the sailing from Magdalena Bay of the protected cruiser Albany, and the gunboat Yorktown for Corinto, on the Pacific coast of Nicaragua, the activity of the navy department on both oceans that wash the Nicaraguan shores became manifest.

Besides, the cruisers Des Moines and Tacoma and the gunboat Marietta are lying off Port Limon, Costa Rica, ready for any call upon them, and the guns of the gunboat Vicksburg are pointed toward the custom house and town of Corinto. The gunboat Princeton is endeavoring to make her way from the Bremerton navy yard, Washington, to Corinto, also.

In addition, the transport Buffalo will sail from Panama for Corinto, with probably as many as 1100 marines aboard.

The concentration of four warships together with the Buffalo with all her marines at Corinto is taken to indicate the determination of the officials here to be able to meet any call upon them for the protection of American citizens. On the Albany are about 280 bluejackets and on the Vicksburg, Yorktown and Princeton about 150 each. These, together with the marines, would make an army equal to any organization reported to be serving under Zelaya.

At the same time the United States will have a formidable force within striking distance of the Atlantic coast in case of danger to American lives or property in that section of Nicaragua. The cruisers Des Moines and Tacoma each have 280 men aboard and the gunboat Marietta has 150 men.

With the probability of many delicate questions arising in Nicaragua and of their demanding immediate response, the navy department decided to send a flag officer to Nicaragua to take command of the American naval forces. Rear Admiral William W. Kimball was chosen for the duty.

He sailed for Colon, Panama, yesterday, on the Prairie. He will make his way from there to Corinto, doubtless as rapidly as possible.

Admiral Kimball has been a member of the naval boards of examination and retirements and of construction for more than a year.

ALLEGED STAMP FRAUD

Worcester Postmaster Causes Arrest of an Insurance Agent

Worcester, Mass., Dec. 3.—On complaint of Postmaster Hunt, who has held up over a score of mail packages bearing stamps alleged to have been previously cancelled, but the marks of which are said to have been erased, Henry Martin, an accident insurance agent, was arrested by United States Deputy Marshal Ruhl.

The specific charge against him is that he used or attempted to use in payment of postage cancelled postage stamps and did remove or attempted to remove the marks of cancellation from the stamps with intent to use the stamps in payment of postage.

BADLY HURT AT FOOTBALL

New Jersey Boy Is Stricken Blind In a Hard Tackle Play

Asbury Park, N. J., Dec. 3.—Harold Yetman, a 15-year-old schoolboy, was stricken blind by a hard tackle during a football play.

The boy arose from the scrimmage and groped his way unsteadily across the field until his companions realized the gravity of his accident and took him home. The physician who attended him says that sight may be restored.

Charges Made Too Late

Albany, Dec. 3.—Governor Hughes declined to entertain the charges preferred against President Coler of the borough of Brooklyn by commissioners of accounts of New York city, on the ground that they were presented too late to permit of their proper consideration, since the borough president's term expires with the present year.

Laffan's Estate Goes to Wife

New York, Dec. 3.—The will of the late William M. Laffan, proprietor of the New York Sun, as filed for probate leaves all his property to his wife, who survives him. There were no children.

GETS MEDAL OF HONOR

Gratuity of $100 Also Goes to Brave Water Tender on Warship Salem

Washington, Dec. 3.—President Taft made a hero glad when, in the White House, he pinned a navy department medal of honor upon the breast of John King, water tender of the U. S. S. Salem.

The symbol was earned through an act of bravery which occurred on the ship in Boston harbor, Sept. 13, when a boiler tube blew out and the escape of the flame, hot gases and steam threatened the lives of all in the fire-room. King stepped into the hottest part of the flame, opened the auxiliary feed stop valve to the boiler and closed the boiler stop valve.

One man was overcome by the heat and King lifted him out into safety, and, although seriously burned, would have returned to the fire-room to do more, had he not been forcibly prevented. King also received a gratuity of $100 from the navy department.

MAY REACH $100,000

Wholesale Thefts of Freight From Boston and Maine Sheds

Boston, Dec. 3.—More arrests are expected in connection with robberies from the Boston and Maine amounting to about $100,000 during the past three weeks. All the property taken from the freight sheds has been recovered.

The four men who have already been arrested were arraigned yesterday in the police court and held in $3500 bonds for appearance on Dec. 9. They are Thomas O'Neil, 42, employed in the freight shed as a foreman, who is said to have been at the head of the scheme; Ralph Turansky, 27, a junk dealer; Herman Goldstein, 28, and Henry Goldstein, 23.

These four men are specifically charged with stealing from the Boston and Maine, while in the event of more arrests it is declared that others implicated will be held for conspiracy.

ST. PAUL POLICE IN FEAR OF CLASH

Both Sides In Big Railroad Strike Express Confidence

St. Paul, Dec. 3.—Chief O'Connor of the police department practically admitted that he considered the strike situation serious when he issued orders requiring all members of his day force to stay on duty at central station until 10:30 in the evening. The order will continue until all danger of a clash between the strikers and the strike-breakers is ended.

According to the railroad officials, the beginning of the end of the switchmen's strike is in sight. One prominent official, who has been active in managing the strike, said that the railroads were handling 30 percent of all business offered.

Between 200 and 300 men arrived from Chicago and were distributed about St. Paul, Minneapolis and Duluth.

As against the optimistic statements of the railroad managers the strike leaders say they are in a stronger position than they have been since the strike started.

PROBING NORTON'S STORY

Thinks Woman He Saw With Glover Was Not Hattie Le Blanc

Waltham, Mass., Dec. 3.—Officers of the local police force, assisted by the state police, have further investigated the story of Carl Norton to the effect that he saw Clarence F. Glover, on the night of the murder, go into the laundry with a woman whom he does not believe was Hattie Le Blanc.

While the officers discovered evidence corroborating Norton's story as he told it to Police Inspector McKenna, they refused to make it public. The facts secured, however, were considered of enough importance to be turned over to District Attorney Higgins.

Milk For Babies Full of Germs

Providence, Dec. 3.—The quality of the condensed milk used at the Myrtle baby home here was denounced as poor by Chairman Swarts of the state board of health, at the inquest into the deaths of twenty-four infants at the home during the past few months. He said that an examination of the milk had revealed the presence of an excessive amount of bacteria.

Child Mistreated and Killed

New York, Dec. 3.—A shocking crime was revealed with the discovery of the body of a 7-year-old girl on the roof of an Eleventh avenue tenement. That the child was subjected to mistreatment and murdered there seems to be little doubt.

Woman Sued by Stepson

Lynn, Mass., Dec. 3.—William H. Holden, a lather by trade, has brought suit against his stepmother, Mrs. Elizabeth Holden, in the sum of $3000, alleging that she alienated the affections of his wife.

Baltimore, Dec. 3.—Fire broke out last night in the building at 104 South Sharp street. It spread rapidly and within a short time had done damage estimated at $150,000 to $200,000.

INTO OFFICES OF SUGAR TRUST

Government's Counsel Succeeds In Pushing Fraud Case

COURT'S IMPORTANT RULING

Prosecution Scores a Point by Judge Admitting Evidence of Weight Differences, Against Vigorous Fight—Trust Had One Way to Pay Tariff and Another Way to Pay Producers—Testimony of an Auditor

New York, Dec. 3.—By the estimony of W. E. Foster, auditor of the American Sugar Refining company, the government pushed its case against the six former employes of the sugar trust for conspiracy to defraud the United States into the offices of the sugar company at 117 Wall street.

Foster was one of the several witnesses against whose testimony the defense made such violent objections that Judge Martin was eventually disposed to allow the government to lead the witness to the conclusion desired to be stated as a matter of judicial discretion. The defense had been interrupting every answer with a repetition of objections already made and passed upon.

Foster said that he had been auditor of the sugar trust for eight or ten years and was familitar with the general routine followed in the importation of sugar at the Havemeyer and Elder refinery in Williamsburg, where the sugar-weighing frauds occurred. He identified the signature of Bendernagel, the former cashier of this refinery, who is one of the defendants, and also Bendernagel's initials on a return covering a sugar importation and known as the city weigher's return.

It had already appeared in the evidence that the sugar was weighed twice on the Williamsburg docks, once by government weighers on the doctored scales, where were employed as checkers four of the defendants now on trial, under the direction of Oliver Spitzer, who is also charged with the conspiracy. The sugar was weighed the second time on correct scales by city weighers representing the merchants who sold it to the trust, and the government has been seeking to show that whereas these two weighings gave a difference of some thirteen pounds to a cart load, the sugar trust paid its bills on the basis of the return of the city weighers.

Foster testified that the paper which W. T. Dennison of the government's counsel showed him was a city weigher's return, which had been received at 117 Wall street, then sent to Bendernagel at the refinery for comparison with the original data, and subsequently returned to the office of the trust.

"Were the bills paid there for the sugar received?" asked Dennison. The defense strongly objected, but the answer was allowed to stand. The witness replied in the affirmative and Dennison followed up his question by asking whether any effort was ever made before the bills were paid at the Wall street office, aside from the verification by Bendernagel to ascertain if the weights were correct.

This brought vigorous objection by all three counsels for the defense, which Judge Martin squelched by saying that he had already ruled on this line of testimony and would not allow a prolonged discussion.

Then Dennison started to have the witness identify invoice bills sent in by sellers of sugar to the trust and met with another strong objection when he asked whether a certain initialing on the bills showed that they were found correct and paid. At the suggestion of the court Dennison undertook to separate his questions into several shorter ones, but when the witness tried to answer more objections were made until Judge Martin finally said:

"In view of these objections, Mr. Dennison, the court will permit you to ask the leading question as a matter of its discretion. The character of the objections is such that the court permits counsel in this instance to state to the witness what he desires to prove."

Foster then identified the invoice bills, some of them covering shipments of sugar involved in the present cases.

With the coming of cold weather and snow in Massachusetts is the announcement that strawberries are ripe in Texas. You can get a whole quart for a dollar.

Already drowning accidents are being reported but that does not prevent the boys and girls from venturing on thin ice. A little patience and the youngsters will probably get all the cold weather and skating they desire.

Now that the Quincy Anti-Tuberculosis Association has authorized the erection of a building for camp purposes and appointed standing committees it will soon be ready to begin work for the cure of those afflicted. Quincy is taking an advanced stand in this movement and other cities are watching for results.

The appeal of the president of the Citizens No-License League, for ready funds to conduct the campaign, should meet with a prompt response. There are many expenses and those who give freely of their time should be supplied with the funds to make an aggressive fight. Much more could be accomplished during the year if the committee had funds.

Congratulations to the Swedish Lutheran church on its success in raising funds for a new organ and other improvements to their edifice, which have cost $3,000. They now have an attractive and well appointed church, and their 20th anniversary is indeed a happy one. About 400 are now enrolled as members making this church one of the largest in the city, and they are doing a good work.

Now that the Board of Trade is committed to the movement for a Courthouse in this city there should be a united front to secure it. The County Commissioners know the needs better than most of the citizens of Quincy, and it is for them to decide how large a courthouse shall be erected and how large an appropriation will suffice. At present the county is paying a large rental for quarters in the Hancock building in City Square.

Champ Clark is out with a prediction that the next House of Representatives will be controlled by the Democrats. As a prophet Mr. Clark has not been entirely accurate in the past. He was certain Mr. Bryan would be President and he was sure that Mr. Cannon would never be Speaker. If Mr. Clark happened to be right this time we wonder whether the House Democracy would be controlled by his followers or the followers of Representative Fitzgerald. It is well to remember that while the Republicans in Congress are not united on all things they are not only whit farther apart then the Democrats. There are many who believe that Mr. Clark is proving a distinct failure as minority leader. He is long on epigrams and voice and short on ability to weld his party associates into a compact fighting machine to harrass the majority. The fact that, under Mr. Clark's leadership the Democrats in Congress failed to offer any practical substitute for the Payne tariff bill but confined their efforts to picking flaws in the Republican measure, is hardly calculated to encourage their efforts for a hold on popular favor. A minority party which is merely a stumbling block in the roadway ought not complain if it is run over. When Mr. Clark is run over in the Congressional elections a year hence we will not be surprised if he rises, shakes off the dust and mud, and boldly predicts that the House will surely be Democratic in 1913.

Secretary Meyer's plans for the reorganization of the Navy Department are expected greatly to promote the efficiency of the naval service. The country at large has had little patience with the internal bickerings and jealousies which have existed in the Navy Department since its organization. The same troubles obtained in the War Department for many years and it was not until Elihu Root's master hand began the direction of affairs that the military branch of the government service was reorganized and made strong and efficient. When Mr. Meyer took charge of the Navy portfolio he attacked the problems with deliberation and ability. He was impressed with the fundamental principle that the efficiency of the floating navy and its personnel must, after all, be the chief end and aim of all naval administration. Mr. Meyer submitted the various problems involved to special boards and then referred the reports of these boards to a general board of which Rear Admiral Swift was made chairman.

Three important ends are sought in the pending reorganization. They are increased efficiency and economy in navy yard administration, a redistribution of duties in the Navy Department to obviate duplications of work, and, finally, the creation of an advisory board which shall render competent technical advice to the civilian Secretary of the Navy, instead of leaving him at the mercy of factional advisers and over enthusiastic theorists. Until recent years interest in the American navy was confined to the coast states. The sea victories of the Spanish war and the spectacular "round-the-world" trip of the fleet aroused a general popular interest in our fighting men-of-war. The great sums which the American people are devoting annually to the upbuilding of their navy entitles them to the best possible administration. Mr. Meyer's efforts are deserving of commendation and it is hoped that Congress will place no obstacles in the way of his well matured reorganization plans.

DRIFT OF OPINION.

The signs are many that the people are shaking off the old obsession which held them to the belief that politics had a legitimate place in municipal administration. A few business agents of character and capacity will be the form of municipal government of the future.—Haverhill Gazette.

OUR NEW PRESS.

Several of the contemporaries of the Daily Ledger have commented on our new Duplex press. We clip the following:

A KIND WISH.

The Quincy, Mass., Ledger has doubled the number of its columns with the installation of a new press, which means a doubling of its prosperity, The Times hopes.

OUGHT TO REJOICE.

The Quincy Daily Ledger is rejoicing in a new press and the people of Quincy ought to rejoime in so good a daily paper.

MODERN PAPER.

Congratulations to the Quincy Daily Ledger ,the intrinsic excellence of which has been so fittingly appreciated by the good people of the City of Presidents, that it has been obliged to install a new press, and now appears as a modern seven-column, eight-page newspaper.—Milford Daily Journal.

INCREASE IN CIRCULATION.

Monday afternoon, Nov. 22, by invitation of our neighbor, the Quincy Daily Ledger, we witnessed the first running of their new Duplex press, which gives the city a bigger and busier daily. It was a pleasant treat and while extending our thanks for the courtesy, we wish them success and an extensive increase in circulation which the big Ledger deserves.—Quincy Advertiser.

LONG SERVICE.

We congratulate the Geo. W. Prescott Publishing Co., of Quincy upon the enlargement of their daily paper, The Evening Daily Ledger, from four to eight pages also upon its attractive appearance, printed upon a new cylinder perfecting press that feeds itself and produces the Ledger folded and trimmed, ready for delivery. The publications of the Prescotts, viz: The Quincy Daily Ledger The Braintree Observer and the Quincy Patriot, are all well printed and ably edited, and having an abundance of material their advertising is made attractive. The Prescotts are all first class printers and able newspaper people, receiving a thorough training from their father, an old time printer, the late Geo. W. Prescott, who spent over 50 years of his useful life in publishing the Quincy Patriot. He was highly respected by all with whom he did business, and by the newspaper fraternity who knew him best, most highly esteemed. May prosperity attend the plant he so successfully established.—Athol Chronicle.

—Proposals for one of the most remarkable pieces of engineering work ever undertaken have been placed before the New York Board of Estimate. The plans involve the expenditure of nearly $50,000,000 for building a great subterranean aqueduct 300 feet below the streets of the city to distribute the water supply which in a few years will be available from the great Catskill reservoir.

POSSIBILITIES OF MONORAILWAY

Chicago Witnesses Say It May Revolutionize Traffic.

TRAIN LIKE HOTEL POSSIBLE.

Economy Seen In Louis Brennan's Invention, That Seems to Defy Laws of Gravitation—Speed of One Hundred and Fifty Miles an Hour Predicted.

Chicago railroad officials who have recently returned from London are inclined to believe that in the monorailway, or gyroscope railroad, Louis Brennan, B. C., has an invention which bids fair to revolutionize some of the fields, at least, of transportation.

What they saw at the public demonstrations at Chatham, England, of the possibilities of the monorailway was a railroad car forty feet long, ten feet wide and thirteen feet high, weighing twenty-two tons, mounted on a single rail and running freely around curves while safely carrying forty passengers, who experienced less vibration than would have been the case in an ordinary passenger coach.

The principle upon which the monorailway operates is that of the spinning top, which maintains its equilibrium by means of its rapid revolutions or gyrations. The characteristic feature of this system of transportation is that each vehicle is capable of maintaining its balance upon an ordinary rail laid upon sleepers on the ground, whether it is standing still or moving in either direction at any rate of speed. This is done notwithstanding the fact that the center of gravity is several feet above the rail and that wind pressure, shifting of load, centrifugal action or any combination of these forces may tend to upset it. Automatic stability mechanism of extreme simplicity carried by the vehicle itself endows it with this power.

Principle of Mechanism.

The mechanism consists essentially of two flywheels rotated directly by electric motors in opposite directions at a very high velocity and mounted so that their gyrostatic action and stored up energy can be utilized. The flywheels are mounted on high class bearings and are placed in a vacuum, so that the air and friction are reduced to a minimum and consequently the power required to keep them in rapid motion is very small. The stored up energy in the flywheels when revolving at full speed is so great and the friction so small that the driving current is cut off altogether they will run at sufficient velocity to impart stability to the vehicle for several hours, while it will take from two to three days before they come to rest. The stability mechanism, whose weight is small, occupies but little space in the cab at one end of the vehicle.

The wheels of the car are placed in a single row beneath the center of the vehicle and are carried on bogy trucks which are so pivoted as to provide for horizontal curves on the track and also for vertical ones. This enables the vehicle to run upon curves of even less radius than the length of the vehicles itself or to run on crooked rails or on rails laid over uneven ground without danger of derailment. The motive power of the monorailway may be either steam, petrol, oil, gas or electricity. In the experiments made thus far petrol has been used as an electric generator, the power of each vehicle being self contained and ready for immediate use. Use of it any moment is made possible by keeping the gyro wheels in constant rotation by a current from a small accumulator, the engine being at rest. In order that the vehicle may be able to ascend steep inclines the wheels are all power driven, and change gears are provided for use in hilly country.

Large Coach Made Possible.

Great economy is obtained by making the vehicles much wider than the ordinary passenger coach. On this point Mr. Brennan claims that he has plans for a passenger car 100 feet in length and 20 feet wide. He also declares that such a coach may be driven safely at a speed of 150 miles an hour while travelers are making a transcontinental journey in rooms as large and as luxuriously furnished as those of a modern city hotel.

The rail upon which the car runs has a curved top, and its weight is that of the ordinary rail, but the sleepers, or ties, are only one-half the usual size of railroad ties. It is stated that flying lines of a monorailway can be built with great rapidity over uneven ground with but a slight expenditure of labor.

The bridges required for the use of the monorailway are of the simplest possible construction.

Hotel on Rails Predicted.

The expenditure of fuel necessary to operate the monorailway is very much less than it is with an ordinary railroad. This fact is due to the absence of flange friction on curves and to the vehicles running without oscillation or jolting. The absence of these same factors makes an increase of 200 or 300 per cent in the speed of the train a safe possibility; consequently Mr. Brennan confidently declares that his dream of a transcontinental railroad furnished with a traveling hotel having rooms fifteen to twenty feet wide and carrying passengers in perfect comfort and safety at a speed of 120 to 150 miles an hour will surely be realized.

WATSON THE POET.

How Author of Much Discussed Poem Was Awarded a Pension.

William Watson, the English poet, whose name has been much before the public lately because of his recent poem, "The Woman with the Serpent's Tongue," in which he is popularly supposed to have attacked the character of an Englishwoman of high rank, denied before sailing for New York the other day that his visit had anything to do with Richard Le Gallienne's challenge to personal combat.

"My object in going to America," he said, "is to show the wonders of the new world to my young wife and to study the customs of that great country and its democratic people." Speaking of his controversy with Mr. Gallienne, Mr. Watson laughed over it and said that it was so trivial as not to deserve mention. He said that he would certainly not call on Mr. Le Gallienne, but would be pleased to see him if he cared to call.

Mr. Watson is now very comfortably off. Some twelve years ago an uncle who lived in Liverpool died, leaving him a fair sized fortune, so, as he says, he writes now only when he feels like it and consequently is able to do his best work. But such was not always the case. In fact, he enjoys a pension of £100 a year, given him from the civil list by Lord Rosebery when prime minister. It was very acceptable then.

In telling how it came about, Mr. Watson said that one morning he received a note from Lord Rosebery asking him to call at 10 Downing street. When he presented himself Lord Rosebery said:

"I understand, Mr. Watson, that things are not going so well with you as they might."

Mr. Watson confessed that this was so, and Lord Rosebery said he had been thinking the matter over and had decided to give him a pension from the civil list, adding:

"You know it is a national recognition of your genius, and I have decided to recommend you for £100 a year—the same as Tennyson had."

"But Lord Tennyson had £200," suggested Watson.

"Did he?" said the prime minister. Both laughed heartily, but Watson got only the smaller allowance.

On the same occasion Lord Rosebery sounded Watson on the laureateship, saying:

"Don't you think it should be abolished?"

"Not if you are thinking of offering it to me," was Watson's rejoinder.

TO LASSO AFRICAN ANIMALS.

Buffalo Jones Will Try Cowboy Methods In Wilds of Dark Continent.

"I'm going to start for Africa next March to rope and tie with my own hands a specimen of every dangerous wild animal in Africa."

This announcement was recently made by C. J. (Buffalo) Jones, a friend of Buffalo Bill, Pawnee Bill and other famous plainsmen and an Indian fighter of note.

"The expedition will be financed by two men whose names I am not yet at liberty to give," said Mr. Jones, "and I'm going to prove that any animal, from a tiger down to an antelope, can be safely handled by an American plainsman with no other weapon than a lariat."

"How about the elephant?" Mr. Jones was asked.

"That's the only animal of which I'll have to choose a young one," he said. "No rope could hold a full grown elephant, but all my other specimens will be full grown.

"In Africa I'll do the first part of the roping alone. For the rest I'll have two of the best ropers in the west—M. D. Loveless of Capitan, N. M., and James T. Owens of Fredonia, Ariz. We will have specially prepared lariats, partly woven of wire so that no tooth or claw can cut or break them. As to our mounts, we will have the best trained cow horses we can find in the west."

Buffalo Jones is now crossbreeding buffaloes and cattle in Arizona for the United States government.

SWIFT WORK ON SKEES.

Norwegian Shot Down a Mountain Side at a Two Mile a Minute Clip.

Nels Larson, a Norwegian, gave a remarkable exhibition the other morning at Caldwell of proficiency in the use of skees. He ran down the western slope of Caldwell mountain to Pine Brook, N. J., a distance of nearly four miles, in four and three-quarter minutes. The run was made in the snow crust and was timed by George Race and Harold Jones.

Before sunrise the whole of northern New Jersey was covered with a stiff snow crust which would almost bear up a horse. Larson started from a point on the mountain brow just south of the Monomonock inn at 6:30 o'clock. He arrived at the Pine Brook hotel at 6:34.45. For the first mile the descent was very steep, but the rest of the journey was on almost level ground. Larson covered the first mile in about half a minute. The impetus thus gained was sufficient to carry him the second mile nearly as rapidly. The last two miles were made by skating on the skees.

Plan to Mark a Republic's Centenary.

The 100,000 British residents of Argentina have decided to erect a memorial clock tower on some prominent site in Buenos Aires, to mark the first centenary of Argentine independence, in 1910. A monument will be erected by the Spanish community in Argentina—a large and wealthy body—while the French, Italian and other foreign elements have similar plans on foot.

Several applications for membership were received and a committee appointed to arrange for the installation of the new officers.

—The following is the Franklin Sentinel's receipt for success:

"Get a move on, get a shove on.
Never mind which way you're moting,
Locomote, locomote!
Grab your rival by the throat.
Tear his coat, get his goat.
Call his bluff, make him luff.
Make him sheer off, bite his ear off!
That's success."

The man who faithfully follows that prescription will, when successful be a battle-scared veteran.

RIVERS AND HARBORS

Quincy Will be Represented at Washington Congress

The Atlantic Deeper Waterways Convention which closed its sessions at Norfolk, Va., Nov. 20, marks, for this year, the end of waterway conventions that have for their purpose the advocacy of a particular waterway project.

These conventions, beginning in September on the Pacific Coast, have been held during the past three months in practically every important section of the country and on December 8, 9 and 10 the special advocates of different waterway improvement projects will assemble at Washington, at the sixth annual convention of the National Rivers and Harbors congress, to advocate in contradidistinction of what the local conventions have been held for, a waterway policy and not a waterway project. Quincy will be represented by Frank Fessenden Crane.

At this convention there will come together representatives from all sections who will forget for the time being every local project and uniting will demand of the federal lawmakers that a waterway policy be enacted and put into effect which they know will in turn benefit their particular project as they can demonstrate the worth of same.

President Taft who addressed the Norfolk Convention has attended three different waterway conventions in the past forty days and his utterances on the subject of waterway improvement has shown a depth of understanding and study of the subject possessed, if at all but by few men in public life. At Corpus Christi, Texas, he characterized tersely the past dealing by Congress with river and harbor improvements, "as a procession of jerks." At New Orleans he plainly stated that the worth of any particular river or harbor improvement, no matter how strongly advocated, must first be carefully examined by a board of United States engineers and by them favorably reported upon before the government can be expected to begin work thereon.

In this statement, he assumed the exact position of the National Rivers and Harbors Congress, for in its advocacy of improved waterways and the adoption of a policy that would provide the funds for same, it has always held that every waterway project should be endorsed by the engineer corps and accepted by the United States Congress before it could participate in the benefits of the policy advocated.

During the past five years there has been a wonderful awakening of public sentiment toward the necessity of improving the natural channels of transportation of the country, for with the growth of population, and the consequent growth of tonnage to be moved, the railroads have proven themselves, under normal conditions, to be entirely inadequate, and the serious freight congestion of three years ago, which practically paralyzed the industries of the nation, seems in the renewed prosperity and activity of the people to be again rapidly approaching.

The waterway sentiment which has been aroused has been done by true friends of the cause who have realized that until there has been adopted and put into effect a general waterway policy, no special projects, no matter how beneficial they may be to special sections of the country or how strongly advocated by the friends thereof, would move forward to completion any faster in the future than they have in the past, unless the old order was changed.

The National Rivers and Harbors Congress has been preaching this doctrine until every section of the union is now fully aroused to the fact that all special projects must give way to a waterway policy which when put into effect, will be of direct and immediate benefit to every section that has a genuine claim for the improvement of a river, the deepening of a harbor or the building of a connecting canal or channel.

MILTON.

There will be three basket-ball games at the gymnasium when the First team, the Midgets and the Silent Five line up against out of town opponents on Saturday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Thompson of Brackett street have announced their intention of leaving for California some time this month.

The Fire Chief's auto which has been ordered will probably arrive next Monday. It is a Pope-Hartford, four seater and with chemical attachment.

Mrs. Gilbert Hamlin announces a dance for next Thursday evening to be held in Ellsworth hall.

A large number attended the mock trial held in the Town Hall Monday evening under the auspices of the Roger Wolcott Camp, Sons of Veterans. The jury which was composed of the most prominent men in Milton gave their verdict to the satisfaction of all concerned, Charles S. Pierce presided and made an able judge.

Edward J. Eaton entertained twenty-three members of his family Thanksgiving day, these included children and grandchildren.

The apron and necktie party of the Cunningham Gym was largely attended and a very enjoyable occasion.

The annual fair and bazaar under the direction of the Ladies Aid Society of the East Congregational church was held Wednesday evening in the vestry of the church. The room was handsomely decorated in Autumn colors. A profusion of varicolored leaves and green plants common to this season of the year were scattered about until the vestry resembled a miniature forest. A delightful supper was served and was followed by an entertainment which consisted of readings by Mrs. Irad Hardy. During the evening Caldwell's orchestra of Brockton furnished some of the finest music that has been heard in Milton for sometime. Mrs. Ira Hill the president of the Ladies Aid society had charge of the arrangements, and much credit is due her for the success of the affair. Those in charge of the tables were as follows: Fancy table—Mrs. Stephen Wiley and Mrs. L. Bolten; Household table—Mrs. Warren Woodbury and Mrs. Frederick Hamlin; Childrens' table—Mrs. G. H. Cordefordand and Miss Elizabeth M. Hill; Candy table—Miss M. A. Babcock and Mrs. L. Elden; Cake table—Mrs. Albert Huckins and Mrs. G. Webster.

DRAMATICS AT QUINGY POINT

Good Supper Served First by Ladies Aid

The old fashioned boiled dinner is still popular. This fact was proven Thursday night by the number who turned out to the supper prepared by the Ladies Aid society of the Washington Street Congregational church and served in the church vestry. There were piano and vocal solos by Mr. and Mrs. G. R. White, and Miss Marion White, following the supper. A farce entitled "No cure no pay" was also presented which delighted the large audience many of whom had arrived after supper. The cast of the play was as follows:

Mrs. Languist (a lady who has lately acquired wealth) Mrs George Wheeler
Alice, her daughter Miss Reed
Lucy Niken, friend of Alice Mrs. Robert Reed
Jennie Carter, friend of Alice Mrs. Fannie Hirke
Susan Dean, friend of Alice Mrs. Annie Merritt
Bridget, Queen of kitchen Mrs James Harris
Aunt Maria Midget, (a little hard of hearing) Mrs. George E Sprague

The chairman of the arrangement committee, was Mrs. P. H. Holman and the other members of the committee were: Miss E. M. Freeman, Mrs. Walter Hayden, Mrs. Thomas Lincoln, Mrs. Bradford Hayden, Mrs. William Lee and Mrs. William Hayden.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES.

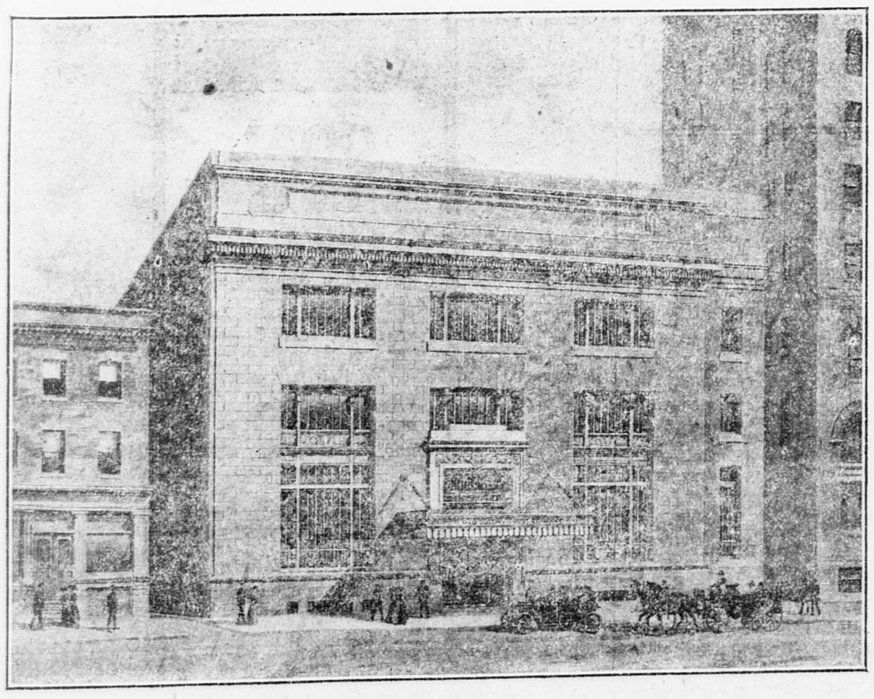
At the meeting of the Y. M. C. A. College club tonight the fellows will hear a mighty good speaker in Edward McLaughlin of Harvard. He played on the Harvard varsity baseball team last year and will give an interesting account of some of his base ball experiences.

Saturday morning at 9 o'clock, Rev. J. A. Matheson will address the boys of Quincy at the Y. M. C. A. building taking as his subject, "Ragged Edges." All the boys in Quincy are invited to be on hand.



A meeting for older fellows will be held Sunday afternoon in the assembly hall at the association. H. C. Leggat of the Worcester Y. M. C. A. has been secured as speaker. Every fellow over 15 is invited to attend and judging from the list of fine speakers the Y. M. C. A. has been drawing from this season, this will be no exception and well worth attending.

Basket ball Saturday night in the gymnasium with two good games. This is a fine chance to see the local boys in action and get a line on what the Y. M. C. A. will present for a lineup this year.

There will be a meeting of all the candidates for a track team in the physical director's office, Saturday evening. At that time a captain will be chosen to lead the runners of 1909-'10.

—Five miles of the Panama canal have been opened to navigation and steamships plying between San Francisco and Panama and the west coast ports of South America and Panama are using this part of the Canal daily.

AS TO LOSING MONEY.

A Case Showing the Importance a Ten Dollar Bill May Reach.

"To some men," said a man now of amplest means, "the loss of $10,000 might be a joke, and then to some the loss of a ten dollar bill might be a tragedy.

"Poor? Why, we were so poor that we had to count every cent, every penny. Not that we were miserable. We were very far from that. As a matter of fact, we were happy, but we certainly did have all the time to sail very close to the wind.

"There were four of us—wife, two children and myself—and, bless you, how we did have to figure and scrimp to make both ends meet. I've seen the time, many a time, when a nickel was of great importance to us, when it was the last cent for carfare. I often think what a blessing it was that we were none of us ever sick; that nothing ever happened to us. I don't know what we'd done if there had.

"I was going to tell you what it might be to some folks to lose a ten dollar bill.

"Ten dollars was the amount of our monthly rent, and whatever else we did we always saved out of my week's pay the weekly proportion of the rent, to have it ready when it was due. I always used to get a ten dollar bill in my pay envelope, and when it came to the last Saturday in the month we just used to take the ten dollar bill out of the envelope to pay the rent with, and then we had the amount we'd saved out of three weeks to go on for current expenses.

"Well, one last Saturday that happened to come three days before the end of the month we took the ten dollar bill out of the envelope as usual for the rent and as usual my wife put it away—she always looked after the finances—and there we were all comfortable and happy, with the next month's rent all ready, and then on the last day of the month, when she went to get it out to have it handy when the landlord came she couldn't find it!

"If that wasn't a tragely I don't know a tragedy when I meet it. I don't suppose I took it quite so hard as she did, and I'd have shown it as little as I could anyway on her account, but to her it was nothing less than a calamity.

"When the children had gone to bed we tore the house apart. We looked and looked and looked into every nook and corner over and over again, but that ten dollar bill, with all that it meant to us—and I doubt if you can imagine how much it did mean—was gone. That was the first thing we had on our minds when we woke up in the morning, and gloomy enough for us that morning was. And then when I was eating my breakfast in our modest dining room she looked in at the door from the kitchen, and 'I've found it!' she said, and so she had, just where three days before she had hidden it away, and so was our great gloom changed to joy—to joy with a large, large J.

"Yes, sir. We got more now, by considerable, and now she has what she wants; now she doesn't have to skimp. In these days I take her home myself now and then a ten dollar bouquet. We can afford it. But I never shall forget as long as I live how we felt when we thought we'd lost that ten dollar bill or the joy that came to us when we found it, for, you see, how a loss strikes you depends so much on how much you've got."—New York Sun.

Climbs Up the Trunk.

The native elephant driver never has to bother with a step ladder in mounting his beast after he has trained him for a little time, for the easiest way to get up is to ascend by way of the trunk. Standing in front of the elephant, the driver grasps him by the ears, this being a signal that he wishes to mount, and the obedient monster promptly arches his trunk so that the master can easily step upon it and go right on up to the top of the elephant's head.

Tom's Wellwisher.

In a Philadelphia club a member was met not long ago by the announcement from a fellow member that a friend of both had fallen ill.

"I understand from the physician," said the first member, "that Tom has brain fever. He'll recover, but it's thought his mind will be a blank."

"I trust the diagnosis is incorrect," came in fervent tones from the second member, "inasmuch as Tom owes me $160."—Lippincott's.

MAYORALTY PLURALITIES

That of Mayor Shea Last Year Not Largest

This is the 21st year of the city governement of Quincy, and the City of President has had just ten Mayors. Politically there have been six Republicans and four Democrats. The Republicans have served 14 years and the Democrats 7 years. The average of the Republicans is over two years each, and the average of the Democrats less than two years each, none have served more than two years. Among the Republicans Mayors Fairbanks, Bryant and Thompson served three years, and none have served a longer term.

During the first 16 years of the city the elections were close and the pluralities small, never exceeding 400. But Mayor Thompson twice received over 1,000 plurality, and Mayor Shea received 532 his first year and was reelected by 1,116. The largest plurality was given Mayor Thompson his second year 1,644.

The Mayors of Quincy each year with their politics, and the plurality by which they were elected, are given below:

—If we keep before us the ten most important things we have to do, we are sure that we are not chasing things that do not exist. Train your mind to do this. If I should ask almost any business man, "What are the ten most important things you have to do?" he will have to stop awhile and think. Now, if he doesn't know what the ten most important things in his business are, how can he be sure that he is working on these important things?—Hugh Chalmers.

La France SHOE for WOMEN

For those who are critical

La France Shoes embody the solution of what has long been considered a most difficult problem—the production of a shoe which meets the requirements of critical and fastidious women at a reasonable price.

In style they are unequalled. In materials and workmanship they will stand comparison with the most expensive custom work. Finally, no other shoe so perfectly combines comfort and fit with style, grace, and beauty.

The very next time you are down town come in and look at our complete line of La France models for Fall and Winter.

We have the shoe that will exactly please you.

POOR SIDEWALKS.

Editor of the Ledger:

Mayor Shea's statement made at Farnum hall, reported in the Daily Ledger on Wednesday says, "our women and children are entitled to a sidewalk clean and dry to walk on." This evidently does not apply to Standish avenue, the condition of which near Hancock street would not fulfil the requirements for dry.

The gutter has not been cleaned out since Mayor Thompson's time, and now the sidewalk is several inches, perhaps a foot lower than the street on account of it. Consequently every time it rains the sidewalk is covered with two or three inches of water. It is a street much used by High school scholars as well as a thoroughfare to Wollaston station. Altho Commissioner Bainbridge was asked in October to have a few hours' work done at this place, and that while the stone crusher was within a stone's throw of the low sidewalk, he did not see fit to have it done.

CHRISTMAS MAIL.

All money orders, registered letters and parcels for all parts of Great Britain should be mailed not later than December 16 for Christmas. For Sweden, Finland, Norway, Italy, Russia, Germany, France, etc., the mailing should not be later than December 11.

Parcels may be sent to almost all countries in Europe by "parcel-post" at twelve cents per pound, weight limits 11 pounds. Inquire at stamp window for full particulars regarding prohibited articles, greatest length, width, etc. Parcel-post packages for Great Britain cannot be registered. Printed books, calendars and pictures are rated as third class matter; rate, two ounces for one cent. Weight limit, four pounds and six ounces.

Mail your packages early and register ones of value, fee ten cents in addition to the postage. Indemnity to fifty dollars for loss. Letters or writing except "Merry Christmas" or similar greeting not allowed in packages of merchandise. Merchandise is mailable to Canada at domestic rates (one cent an ounce) unsealed.

Do your mailing, registering and money order business during the morning hours and avoid the rush. Be sure your Christmas post cards are stamped before depositing them in the mails. Do not call at the post-office for packages, extra carriers will deliver them promptly.

MAYOR PROUD OF LINCOLN

Erected Within Appropriation at Small Cost

Mayor Shea takes exceptions to the statements made at the Republican rally in Ward Three on Tuesday night in regard to the Lincoln school. In an interview this morning the Mayor said:

"Certain men connected with the city government have made statements to public that the addition to the Lincoln school was full of glaring defects, and otherwise sought to convey the impression that the city did not get a fair return for the money expended on this work. In order that the public may have an opportunity to judge for themselves the Lincoln school building will be open for public inspection from 9 A. M. to 4 P. M. Saturday, Dec. 4."

Continuing, he said, that he felt proud of the work on the Lincoln school. That we had succeeded in erecting four splendid rooms at a cost of $12,000 or $3,000 a room. The work being done within the appropriation. Other school buildings have cost from $5,000 to $6,000 per room, and I know of no school in Quincy built at such a low figure as the Lincoln school and the work will compare favorably with any other school building in Quincy."

AN UNCOOKED DINNER.

Considerable interest is being taken in the uncooked dinner to be served Monday by the Twentieth Century club of Boston, for the benefit of the American Peace society. A glance over the menu leads one to hope that the blessing before the meal will be far-reaching in its scope and that the 150 who partake will survive. Following is the menu:

GIRLS WHO SEEK BUSINESS

Application Made on Scented Note Paper Is Fatal, and Stunning Dress Effect In Personal Call Doesn't Count.

NOWADAYS, when housewifery is so much out of fashion and the so called business woman has stepped to the front, there is in every city and town a little army of those who are looking for work, an army of girls who are doing their best to evade the responsibilities and possible drudgery of home life. Some of these young women are well equipped for the competition which they have chosen to enter. Some of them are so fully prepared to undertake the duties of office positions that they have no difficulty in making the fact apparent. It is for those who are unsophisticated and ignorant of the way to success that this note of warning is sounded.

First of all, dear girl about to "place yourself" in a business career, do not fail to remember that much depends on your carefulness in this most important matter. Unless your circumstances compel you to accept anything that is offered take plenty of time, wait until you succeed in obtaining a position with a firm bearing a reputation for fair dealing both with employees and customers. It will be far wiser for you to secure a position with such a house than to go elsewhere at a better salary.

Consider also that you may be going to spend most of your waking hours for several years to come in one office or store. You are very young, and your ideals will be formed by your environment. There is absolutely no limit to the influence such association may have on your character. Should you be so unfortunate as to come in constant contact with petty meannesses, with repeated occasions of business deceit and unscrupulous business methods, the intimacy must in time lower your standard of uprightness No matter how faultless your original intention, in time you will become less intolerant of doubtful business methods, and you will find it harder and harder to discriminate between what "is right" and what "will pass."

Having selected a firm the members of which have a reputation of being gentlemen and good citizens, your next step will be to make your application for a position in a businesslike manner. This is really a very important feature of the matter, although, if one may judge from the carelessness exhibited by a great number of place seekers, its importance is unappreciated grossly. What, for instance, would be thought of the business instinct of the girl who sends in her application on a highly scented sheet of blue note paper, the writing so angular as to be practically illegible, about half a dozen sprawling words to the page? What kind of impression would such a mishive make on a business man in search of a competent assistant?

Can you not see, my dear, that your written proffer of your services should be a straight out and out business proposition, a sample of what you can do as a business woman? It is your best opportunity to make a favorable impression. If your application is strictly to the point and modeled after the most approved business form it will meet with respectful consideration; if otherwise, it will go into the wastebasket without further ceremony.

Should you apply personally the matter of your appearance must be taken into consideration. It is just here that many girls show the very poorest judgment. Recently a rather bright young woman of my acquaintance, whose letter in answer to an advertisement had made an excellent impression, was invited to call for a personal interview. Against the counsel of her mother the aspirant arrayed herself in a pink linen gown with a Dutch neck, her hair a mass of puffs and curls, her feet in low shoes and openwork stockings. The "boss" caught a glimpse of her as she sat waiting in the outer office and sent his stenographer to tell her that she would not do.

Do not try to mix furbelows and feathers with your business matters. They may not be precisely antagonistic, but they do not combine readily. Wear as good clothes as you can afford, but beware of cheap finery. There is every reason why you should be as well groomed as possible.

SHIRLEY BREESE.

WHY STOOP TO SHAM?

The Woman Who Takes Such a Step Loses Her Identity.

Who has not met that superior woman an whose proud boast it is that she never bothers about the small things of life? She has a theory that it is a lamentable waste of energy to pay attention to little things and that one who does it never has any time for matters really worth while.

It is quite possible that you have admired such women and wished that you could be equally independent of the trifles which consume so large a proportion of the average housewife's waking hours and are apt to haunt her dreams. Perhaps you have envied this emancipated creature with her grand air of ignoring small economies and taking large responsibilities. Actual investigation shows her to be a fraud.

Can you recall even a single instance when one of these voluble creatures who disdained small things actually achieved any permanent success in business or in social matters or in anything else? Gradually she comes to grief and loses social and commercial credit.

Akin to the woman who has a contempt for trifles is she who chooses deliberately to deny herself most of the little comforts of life for a series of years in order that she may accumulate sufficient to make a single tremendous splurge. It is the passion for show which is at the bottom of such an abnormal way of living. A woman of my acquaintance who is markedly level headed in most matters lived from hand to mouth for several years in order to accumulate sufficient money to pay her way for a single season at an ultra fashionable hotel. Another has been denying herself all of the luxuries and many of the comforts of life for several seasons to enable her to become the owner of a costly sealskin coat and fur set.

This is sham pure and simple, and sham is always in bad taste. Woman loses her identity when she stoops to sham of any kind. She who loses her interest in the small things of life is greatly to be pitied. They are the things which are actually all important. The slightest happening of each day will often turn our path into a different channel, to our advantage, if our hearts are right and our brains clear to make use of our opportunities when they come.

Women thinking and studying to make their homes and the lives of those near to them happy and prosperous must deal with the small things of life. How can they rid themselves of the responsibility, and why should they wish to do it?

Her Home Is on the Sea.

Mrs. Agnes J. Connell is the wife of a skipper and a licensed pilot as well. For twenty years her home has been on the seas. She was born among the Thousand islands, in the St. Lawrence river. So was her husband. They went to school together and were sweethearts then. When they were wed her husband was a skipper. His business kept him from home a good deal of the time, and as they were always fond of one another she felt his absence. She suggested that they give up their home on land and that she accompany him on his voyages. He acceded, and she at once set about learning the business. She received her sailing master's certificate from the port of San Francisco in 1901. She is an accredited pilot for the great lakes and the St. Lawrence river and also holds a government license entitling her to navigate any kind of craft in any waters. At any time she can relieve her husband, if necessary, and can handle his big 5,300 ton steamer with ease. In 1892 she acted as an officer on one of the ships that carried provisions to the starving natives during the famine in India. In 1902 she made the trip from New York to San Francisco as fourth officer on the steamer Finance.

FASHION GOSSIP FROM NEW YORK

Simple Evening Frocks: Dancing Gowns: Black The Craze Of The Moment: Draped Effects.

Dame Fashion is a lady of many moods and while some of her designs are costly and over elaborate, others are simple and chic in the extreme. For it is more the way the evening frock is cut and draped than what it happens to be made of that counts this season.

SHORT DANCING FROCKS.

Very many of the newest evening gowns have short skirts. The narrow train of last summer is out of date and rounder lines prevail. This fashion is hailed with delight by many women as short skirts are much more economical and appropriate for dancing than long trailing garments. Some of these dresses made of chiffon or net are prettily trimmed around the neck with garlands of artificial flowers or touches of gold or silver tissue. They are cut decollete and have very short sleeves.

A NEW IDEA IN EVENING COATS.

A charming new idea in evening coats has just been introduced in New York that will most certainly delight the heart of the girl whose last year's coat needs freshening a little to bring it up to date. The very newest coats made with collarless necks or with collars turning away from the throat have a long scarf of chiffon or net in the color of the coat or its lining attached to one side of the neck. This is swathed several times around the throat and falls over the coat in front.

THE VOGUE FOR BLACK.

There is a perfect craze for black in the fashionable world at present. Street frocks, evening gowns, hats and furs are all extremely modish in this sable hue. And to accompany these toilettes are well-cut shoes of patent leather or calf skin. With these the finest of black stockings are worn.

Clever shoppers have discovered that it is possible to obtain dainty fineness of texture in the fashionable black hosiery by selecting Etheopian Double-foot Stockings which are sheer from the instep up and have the foot woven so that they outlast heavier hose. For presents nice fine shapely stockings are very much appreciated and it is not difficult to embroider small scattered designs or since plain styles are popular one can confine all the fussiness to the package, making it pretty with ribbons and seals.

A LOVELY FROCK.

The designers of some of the newest frocks seem to have gone mad over draperies. These naturally do not appear in tailor gowns but run riot in dressy frocks of soft materials. A lovely gown of soft blue woolen had a waist laid in pleats on each side of a plain vest of fancy gold net. The skirt portion came up in princess effect to the bust and was cut almost like the bib of an apron. It was draped slightly to the hip line, the material being arranged in slight folds across the figure at the waist line. The bottom of the skirt was finished by a shaped flounce headed by a row of braid. The drapery on this frock was very slight yet the effect was much better and the costume much more serviceable than some of the over elaborate effects.

FASHIONABLE DRESS ACCESSORIES.

The yokes and vests on nearly all the fashionable frocks this season show a complete absence of tucking, lace or net stretched perfectly plain is the very newest mode. Fagotting is again a feature of some of the latest waists.

Many artificial flowers are used with evening gowns. These garnitures are worn at the decolletage or waist line.

Long hair pins and combs made of shell and imitations of tortoise and amber with square tops are seen in the modish coiffure.

Lucy Carter.

The above designs are by The McCall Company, New York, Designers and Makers of McCall Patterns.

How He Worked the Artist.

This account of how an intimate friend of the great artist Kyosai obtained one of the painter's drawings is from Mrs. Hugh Frazer's "Letters From Japan:"

Kyosai always refused if asked outright for a sketch. So his friend began the negotiation by offering the artist an excellent dinner. When Kyosai had drunk deeply and seemed in a mellow humor his host called for drawing materials, saying that he felt an artistic fancy taking possession of him. No one was surprised, as Japanese gentlemen often amuse themselves in this way after a feast. The servant then brought an enormous sheet of white paper and spread it on the floor with the brushes and Indian ink beside it. The crafty host, without looking at his guest, sank on his knees and began to draw, apparently absorbed in his occupation, but intentionally producing weak and incoherent lines. Kyosai watched the feeble effort in silence and growing irritation, and at last jumped up, dashed the tyro aside and tore the brush out of his hand, exclaiming: "Out of the way, you wretched bungler! I will teach you how to draw!" And the result was a priceless sketch, which remained in the possession of the wily entertainer.

Loving Letters.

Never burn kindly written letters. It is so pleasant to read them over when the ink is brown, the paper yellow with age and the hands that traced the friendly words are folded over the hearts that prompted them. Keep all loving letters. Burn only the harsh ones and in burning forgive and forget them.

Man's Superiority.

"Woman," exclaimed the suffragette, "is the equal of man in every respect."

"Oh, I don't know," replied a man in the audience; "it takes a man to put an angleworm on a fishhook."—Detroit Free Press.

It Was Hard.

Hamfatter Hamlet (the actor)—That hard boiled egg gave me a headache. His Friend—You shouldn't eat hard boiled eggs. Hamfatter—I didn't eat it. A fellow hit me with it behind the ear.

Coaxing.

Mrs. Brown—I'm afraid to let you have a bicycle. Little Johnny—Don't feel that way, ma. Even if it did kill me, remember that it would be the last thing I ever asked you for.

CHAPTER VIII.

AFTER THE BALL.

A FEW nights later Philip kept his promise to Jenny Moran and accompanied her to one of the numerous balls that form so important a factor of the social life of the lower east side of New York in winter.

As they entered the hall about 200 couples were doing a slow twostep with set and serious faces, most of the girls chewing gum in time to the measure and many of the young men holding lighted cigars or cigarettes between two fingers, while the other two clasped the lady's hand.

One look at Philip's face showed Jenny that he did not care much for this, and as she cared very little about it herself (what she wanted was to get him alone) she suggested that they go up into the gallery and look on, and, if Philip felt like ordering two glasses of beer, why, that would be very nice. Philip ordered the beer, and they took seats in the gallery.

Presently the music struck up an inviting waltz with a languorous, intensified beat, and Jenny leaned forward with a half sad, half longing expression which, she knew very well, heightened her beauty, especially in profile. Then suddenly she turned to him with a warm, appealing look. "I suppose I must give it all up, mustn't I, Phil?"

She was like a disappointed child, and he felt sorry for her. "You mean dancing? Why, no! There's no harm in dancing."

They danced the next waltz, and as Philip held the lithe young creature and felt her graceful, supple movements he realized vaguely that she was not created for factory toil and a dull tenement life. And Jenny, gliding to the delicious measure, forgot all but one thing—that she was here in Philip's arms.

On their way home Philip tried to have a serious talk with her, but it was not so easy to say just the right thing.

They did not talk much after that, but Philip thought for a long time about this evening, with its apparently trivial happenings, and somehow they filled him with a vague uneasiness.

In the morning he awoke pale and unrefreshed, and when he joined the Moran household after breakfast Haggleton observed that he looked tired.

"It's nothing," said Philip; "I'm not accustomed to balls."

Haggleton went out with Philip. He, too, had slept badly. He had been awakened when Jenny came in, and for more than an hour he had thought about this boy, his son. He did not like the idea of his going out with Jenny Moran.

The old man began by talking about Margaret.

"She looks to me like a fine girl," he approved, "but if I know anything about women she's got a bit of spirit in her, and—you'd better cut out anybody else."

"You mean Jenny," said Philip, who started to explain the situation as well as he could without revealing Jenny's previous life, but Haggleton interrupted him: "I know about that. I have lived sixty years with my eyes wide open. It's not so hard to guess as you think, young man."

"Then you must approve of my doing what I can to help her?"

"Does it help her much to dance with her?" replied Haggleton dryly.

"If other people had felt their responsibility toward her as I do, she wouldn't be where she is today."

"What do you mean by that?" asked Haggleton.

"You control the New York Midland, don't you?"

"Why, I—I suppose so," answered Haggleton, surprised at this sudden turn.

"Well, the New York Midland killed her husband at one of its grade crossings. The law commands you to put gates at these crossings, but you laugh at the law, and every year you kill hundreds of innocent citizens as you killed her husband. Then you refused to pay her a cent of damages, and as she was a poor woman she couldn't press the suit. So she was left without a dollar in the world, and she had a little baby, and—well, the end of it was she went to the bad."

"I didn't know that," said Haggleton.

"There's a good deal you rich men don't know and don't want to know I tell you, Jenny Moran would be a good woman today if she'd had a fair chance. And, if you think I'm going to turn my back on her as your criminal railroad did, then you're very much mistaken."

One morning, a day or two after the millionaire's second tour with Philip among his tenements, a boy arrived from the bakery to tell Moran that he was to take charge of the night shift and must report that evening at 6. Moran sent him back with word that he could bring the assistant he had already spoken about if he were needed, and the answer came shortly afterward by the same carrier that he must not fail to do so. The helper had "completely given out." It was typhoid beyond a doubt.

Having warned Haggleton to take a good rest in the afternoon, the baker disappeared, as usual. The millionaire, with the beginning of his new career before him and anticipating busy days to come, decided to pay another visit of inspection to his tenements, but this time alone. Philip was known and welcomed wherever he went, but the owner of all this shameful property earning blood money had the strange experience of having doors slammed in his face and of being ordered out of his own houses by his own janitors, who looked upon him with darkest suspicion. Yet wherever he went he could not help seeing that conditions, bad as they were in themselves, were aggravated at least 50 per cent by the shiftlessness, the neglect, of his tenants. Haggleton was beginning to formulate his own plans of tenement reform. He would keep them to himself until the proper moment came to lay them before his son. At least they would be practical.

By 1 he was back home and at Jenny's suggestion lay down to get some sleep. By 5 Moran came in and, after another tirade against capital, bade him prepare to accompany him.

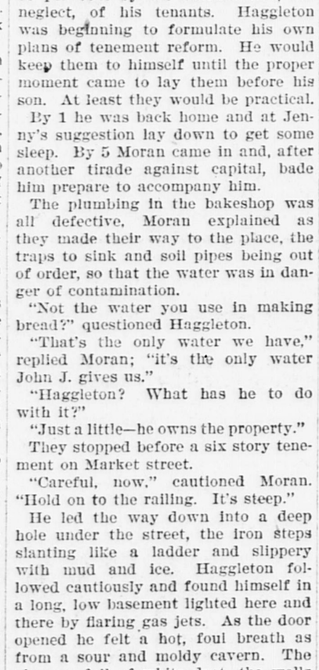
The plumbing in the bakeshop was all defective, Moran explained as they made their way to the place, the traps to sink and soil pipes being out of order, so that the water was in danger of contamination.

"Not the water you use in making bread?" questioned Haggleton.

"That's the only water we have," replied Moran; "it's the only water John J. gives us."

"Haggleton? What has he to do with it?"

"Just a little—he owns the property."



They stopped before a six story tenement on Market street.

"Careful, now," cautioned Moran. "Hold on to the railing. It's steep."

He led the way down into a deep hole under the street, the iron steps slanting like a ladder and slippery with mud and ice. Haggleton followed cautiously and found himself in a long, low basement lighted here and there by flaring gas jets. As the door opened he felt a hot, foul breath as from a sour and moldy cavern. The air was full of white dust, the walls were damp and greenish white, bare bricks showing in places where the plaster had fallen off, and the wooden floor was sifted over with a mealy mixture of flour and dirt.

It was about 6 o'clock, and already two men were preparing for the night's work, stripping off filthy clothing down to the undershirts and throwing the garments upon convenient flour barrels. The men were pallid and hollow eyed. One, in a red shirt, coughed constantly; the other chewed tobacco.

As Haggleton's eyes became accustomed to the dust and the uncertain light he discovered a grayish figure lying on a pile of bags behind a steaming vat. It was a man asleep, his head resting on a sack of flour.

"That's the sick helper," said Moran.

"That's the sick helper," said Moran. "The one who has typhoid fever?"

"We don't know what kind of fever it is."

"But he ought not to be here. He ought not to be sleeping on that sack of flour. You won't use the flour, will you?"

Moran laughed. "The flour he's sleeping on? Sure, we'll use it. We don't mind a little thing like that."

Haggleton took off his coat and prepared to work.

"I'll start you at something easy," said Moran—"down here."

They went to the ovens, where the "third hand" was taking out a batch of finished loaves, about 150 of them ranged along in yellow circles on the hot brick floor. He stood at the iron door, thrusting in a long handled, flat wooden shovel, on which by a quick movement he would slide two or three of the crackling loaves and then draw them out.

"Now," said Moran to Haggleton, "as he takes 'em out on the peel you put 'em in these boxes." He pointed to a pile of wooden trays. "When you get a box full brush 'em over with the stuff in that can. It's potato water, to give 'em a good color."

Moran illustrated this operation once and then left the old man to continue it, which he did to the best of his ability. Occasionally the "third hand" would lay down his peel and stop to cough. Then he would spit on the floor and go back to his work.

"Now run 'em up to the shop," ordered Moran when they had finished—"there, on that dumb waiter. A boy 'll take 'em off."

"You're a pretty fair helper," chuckled Moran; "ought to be worth $6 a week."

"More than that," replied Haggleton. "Where did you get the potato water I put on those loaves? I mean the water, not the potatoes."

"There, at the sink. Yes, the one with no trap to it—the typhoid fever sink. You're thinking it won't do people any good to eat that bread. Maybe not. Huh! Now you can do some kneading."

They went to a long trough where the tobacco chewer was in hand to hand conflict with a great mass of dough, three or four hundred pounds, that seemed to writhe and quiver in his arms like a live creature.

"You watch him awhile and then do the rest," said Moran.

Haggleton watched the "second hand" and presently took his turn at the trough and struggled with the dough. For twenty minutes he turned the sticky, sodden mass over and over upon itself, kneading it and crushing it down and tearing it apart until his whole body ached.

"That'll do," relented Moran finally. "What are those brown stains in the trough?" asked Haggleton.

Moran examined the stains and frowned. "That fool has been dribbling tobacco juice in the dough again. Petro," he said sharply, "look there! Haven't I told you to spit on the floor if you have to spit?"

"We'll make a baker of you yet, Jackson," grinned the foreman. "Before the loaves go into the oven we brush 'em over with eggs to get a nice brown. You can do that. Here's the can and brush, and the eggs are in that box. Break half a dozen in the can and go ahead."

Haggleton obeyed, but presently came back to Moran, holding the can at arm's length and wrinkling his nose with little sniffs. "These eggs are bad."

"Are, eh? Well, what do you expect for 30 cents a hundred?"

"I didn't think you would use bad eggs," said the old man.

"You're not here to think, Mr. Jackson. I told you what to do. Now do it."

So the night advanced, and Haggleton worked with scarcely a pause. He rolled barrels and dragged bags as fresh flour was needed; he carried coke for the fires and split wood; he helped at the sponging tubs; he sifted flour; he bent over the kneading trough; he carried boxes; he drew water at the sink; he worked the dumb waiter; he stood by at the ovens, and he never complained. At 10 o'clock he thought his strength had failed him; he was sore all over and sick and weak, but he forced himself to keep on.

At midnight he asked for a few minutes' rest, but Moran shook his head; he must do his work; another batch of loaves was ready—ready for the eggs. The eggs! His stomach at last revolted, and he had a violent fit of vomiting.

"Knocked out, eh?" said Moran. "Lie down there."

The old man lay down on some bags of flour. He groaned, and for a long time he did not move.

Presently Moran came over to him.

"It always makes a new man sick. You'll get used to it."

"I hope not," said Haggleton. "Are there many bakeshops like this in New York?"

"Dozens, and some worse."

"Not worse than this?"

"Huh!" retorted Moran. "I'd like to show you one on Allen street, dogs and chickens all about, and—hey, Petro," he called, "roll that barrel here."

Petro rolled over a barrel filled with crumbs of sour bread and moldy dough and sweepings from the floor.

"See that?" continued Moran. "We let it go as garbage, but there are bakers who use it. Yes, sir; they soak it in stuff that takes away the smell, then they dry it and put in currants and molasses and bake it into cakes. And heaven knows who eats 'em."

"That's an outrage!"

Moran leaned toward him with a gleam of hatred. "I'll tell you another outrage, Mr. Jackson—it's when a landlord takes big rent for a rotten cellar like this and won't fix the plumbing. No wonder we're sick. I worked in a cellar bakeshop on Hester street where the plumbing was so bad we got a back flow from the sewer every time it rained hard, and the whole floor was—well, I'll cut out the rest."

"Great Scott!" muttered Haggleton, "but all this must be against the law!"

Moran laughed harshly. "That's fine to talk about law. Why aren't the laws enforced against trusts and railroads? Because somebody has mighty good grafting reasons for not enforcing them. It's the same here."

"H'm!" said Haggleton. "How many bakeshops are there in New York?"

"Twenty-five hundred or so. There must be 15,000 bakers in New York, easy."

Haggleton went on quietly, "You say there's a lot of sickness among them?"

"Sickness!" burst out Moran. "Of course there's a lot of sickness! There's rheumatism and asthma and fever and consumption. That's the worst—consumption." He paused, and a grim smile spread over his thin face.

"Go on," said Haggleton.

"You know bread is spongy stuff and takes up anything near it—germs and dirt and bad water. Well, we make the bread, but they eat it—the millionaires!"

"Not this bread!"

"How do you know who eats this bread? How do you know who makes the bread you eat? A quarter of a million loaves and cakes are made every day in New York by sick bakers—that's putting it low—and somebody eats 'em, germs and all. Well?"

"The germs are killed in the baking."

"The heat in the middle of a good sized loaf is away under 200, and it takes 212 to make sure of killing germs. I read how a London doctor tried it and found thirteen different kinds of microbes in a loaf that had been baked! Yes, sir, found 'em alive and kicking!"

Haggleton's face took on such a look of purpose and resourcefulness that Moran marveled and said in jest, "I suppose you're going to show us how to run these bakeshops?"

"Yes," said Haggleton, with a snap of decision, "I think I am."

Sunset In "the Red City" of Bavaria.

The numerous entrances to the old town of Rothenburg are guarded by beautiful watchtowers, which are inhabited by impoverished old women, who rent their airy lodgings for a nominal sum. The red twinkle of their lamps high over the dusky streets of Rothenburg at night—for it is as medieval in its lighting as in many other ways—is very charming in effect. The walls of Rothenburg are a constant delight to visitors, who, by dint of much squeezing through narrow passageways and groping in darkness, are able to make a circuit of the city, getting glimpses on the way through loopholes of the green country outside. Wondrous views of the town are also to be had from many of the distant hills. At sunset the sight of its graceful towers and clutter of red roof tops is like a fair vision of romance. The city blazes for a moment in a fiery mist, then suddenly melts, mirage-like, in the gathering dusk, leaving a sense of something born of dream, the illusion of an enchanter's wand.—Rothenburg Letter to Vogue.

Thought She Had Arrived.

"I have moved into a perfect gem of an apartment on the sixth floor of one of those new houses," said the woman who paints china, "and am reveling in its liberal supply of fresh air and sunlight."

"But don't you find the stairs an overbalancing disadvantage?" asked an acquaintance.

"The thought of the cozy quarters at such moderate cost colors my climb with the roseate hue of optimism," laughed the artist, "but one of my customers, middle aged and filled with good food and the joy of living, evidently found it a harrowing experience.

"It seemed ages that I waited in the hall after the ringing of the lower bell, and upon hearing the labored breathing of my ascending visitor I ran back for the smelling salts.

"When I had administered all the means of resuscitation at hand she managed to articulate between gasps:

"'I thought St. Peter always opened the door.'"—New York Times.

A Threatening Comet.

M. Camille Flammarion, the great scientist, after many years of study, arrived at the conclusion that the world will in the twenty-fifth century come across the path of the comet Bella. On this occasion a collision will take place, and Bella being infinitely greater than the earth, a shock may be expected which, he calculates, will be 865 times greater than the shock caused by the collision between two trains, each traveling at sixty-five miles an hour.

Christmas Presents

FOR BABY

At first glance the Christmas gift for King Baby, impregnable as he is in his pink and white well fed contentment, seems the hardest problem of the holiday season. He has no wants that are obvious and patent, and it is evidently quite hopeless to ask him to follow his big brothers and sisters' example and write out a list of the desires of his heart for Santa to gratify. On a venture just try how his highness will like a toy belt. It is made of a piece of two inch satin ribbon long enough to fit about the waist comfortably and to tie in an attractive bow in the back with long ends. The portion that is supposed to go around the waist of the infant is doubled over to form a belt, from which hang pendent from satin streamers a whistle—silver if money is not a consideration—a rubber doll and, on the third end, a small play ball. The belt is then completed.

String Doll.

Easier to make than the rag doll and much more hygienic, for babies have the bad habit of putting things in their mouths and the paint on rag dolls is often poisonous, is the string doll. It is evolved from quantities of heavy white soft string cut into lengths for the body and arms. The head is stuffed out with wadding, also the body, and the shapes formed by tying about neck and waist pieces of baby ribbon of some bright color. Beads are stuck in for eyes, and a mouth is made with colored thread worked in with a needle. About the wrist is a ribbon outlining the pudgy hand.

STRING DOLL.

Baby's Bonnet Box.

The baby has his bonnet box as well as his mamma, but it is a cunning little round affair covered with flowered paper in a pretty babyish design of forgetmenots. This is one of the prettiest new ideas in connection with the infant's layette and makes a charming Christmas gift. Inside the box is fitted with a round, scented lining of silk, and the top of the lid is finished in the same way. Gathering the silk in rosette fashion and catching up the ends in the center of the lid with a rosette of baby ribbon is a dainty touch to the box.

Baby Bibs.

A baby cannot have too many bibs, and there is nothing a mother appreciates more than gift bibs for her baby.

A pretty bib is made of sheer lawn, embroidered with the transparent embroidery which consists of catstitch done on the wrong side of the material for the flowers and simple outline stitch for the stems and scrolls. Set the embroidered lawn on to a heavy linen back. Trim the bib with an edging of valenciennes lace. With this bib can be given one of the silver fasteners, which are new and useful.

Two Pretty Presents.

An acceptable present for a baby is the sets of silver safety pins that come on three rings tied together with a ribbon. Each ring contains a dozen of the pins, and all the dozens differ in size.

For the rubber blanket used on the crib there are slips the exact size made with small buttons and holes so that a fresh one may be put on with little trouble. These must bear the embroidered initials of the new arrival.

BRIEFS

The Anti-Tuberculosis Society has made arrangements to red cross every office in City Hall for the benefit of the society.

An inquest was held before Judge Avery this morning on the death of William J. Fallon, who was killed by the cars at South Quincy the latter part of October.

Rev. A. C. H. Helander, pastor of the North Easton Swedish Lutheran church, was in the city Wednesday and Thursday for the mission meeting of the Quincy church.

The Technology Naval Architects' Association to the number of 35 visited the Fore River shipyard on Thursday and inspected the battleship North Dakota.

Brockton people are much pleased at the interest aroused in Quincy over the projected Brockton canal and the Ledger has received letters of appreciation and requests for papers containing Mr. Crane's fine report of the Waterways convention at Norfolk, Va.

Probation Officer Spear reports the number of criminal cases before the district court in November to have been 187, the largest November in the history of the court. This number is an increase of 24 over the corresponding month last year.

Mayor Shea will attend the rally at Houghs Neck tonight, but it is understood that Mr. Nichols will not be present. Invitations have been sent to all the candidates for Councilmen at large and to the Ward One candidates for the City Council.

The Brockton Enterprise of Thursday copied in full the article in the Ledger of Nov. 27 on Frank Fessenden Crane's report of the Atlantic deeper waterways convention held at Norfolk, Va. Mr. Crane as Quincy's commissioner of water-front, water ways and navigation represented the city at the convention and brought back much interesting data.

The regular monthly business meeting of the Sans Souci Dramatic club was held Thursday evening at the home of Miss Jennie Grassick. After the business a social hour was enjoyed One of the features of the evening was some exceptionally fine music rendered by Miss Helen C. Troupe. Ernest Collins and other members of the club. A very dainty collation was served by Mrs. Grassick.

CALL FOR A CODE OF AIRSHIP LAWS

Professor Baldwin of Yale Tells Why One Is Needed.

OPENS NEW JUDICIAL FIELD.

Old Theory That Landlord Owns Air Up Into the Heavens Likely to Give Way Before Modern Progress—How State May Give Right to Fly.

Professor Simeon E. Baldwin of the Yale Law school and chief justice of the supreme court of errors of Connecticut told an audience in the Yale Peabody museum at New Haven, Conn., the other night that the lawyers would soon have to get their wits together and frame laws for the government of airship navigation.

He said that lawyers had been busy for the last 100 years making laws for the railroads, for the telegraph and for the telephone, and now they must consider the law for the airship.

The airship, in the judgment of the chief justice, is out of the field of experiment and into the field where it is bound to be used for transportation of passengers, of goods, of spies, of burglars, criminals flying from justice and illicit trade of every kind, for it flies as irresponsibly as a bird. The question at once asked is how far the precepts of private law can be applied to the airship. Can one worldwide law be framed for the air as for the high seas?

Question of Navigating the Air.

The chief justice asked if any one had a right to navigate the air. Then he quoted various authorities who took the position that private landowners owned the air even to the heavens, the acceptance of which authorities would mean, in his opinion, that the navigation of the air would be an infringement of private rights. These authorities, however, were ancient. He went on as follows:

"Physiologists tell us that man is so constructed that he never can develop wings to fly and that in order to navigate the air man must fight continually against the law of gravitation and that his flights through the air must always be a menace to the safety of those beneath.

"The navigation of the airship is not a natural right. The question is whether a right to navigate the air cannot be secured from the state. The state owns the soil. It can tax it; it can reclaim it for the public use from private owners by the payment of a reasonable sum. Successful navigation of the air will no doubt be useful to the public.

"It is granted that every railroad operated under a franchise from the state endangers the safety of the public, but the public interest justifies this. The question, then, is whether the state can give to airships a similar right to navigate under certain conditions. This might be done under a franchise or a license. Has a landowner any right under the circumstances?

Thing of Passage That Carries Danger.

"Perhaps the landowner has no legal right in the air except as the occupancy of the same may be a detriment to his land. This seems to be in accordance with the tendency of the times. An airship is a thing of passage. It carries to each and all the same measure of danger.

"Should a person be hit by an airship the prima facie evidence would indicate that he could bring an action against the proprietor of the ship and the master who was sailing it whether the person was hit on his own or on the land of some one else.

"In one of the Wrights' flights some time ago the airship was directed right over the head of the German emperor, and a slight accident might have changed the whole history of Europe. The emperor might have possibly encouraged an action."

In the opinion of the chief justice the government can permit the use of the air by airships under certain restrictions without involving the rights of landowners unless actual damage results.

Cause For Action.

Should an airship in passing over the property of a landowner ruin his trees or should the proprietor of a fleet of airships continually menace the safety of the landowner or damage his property then, in the opinion of Professor Baldwin, there would be cause for action. Should the government establish an aerial highway over the house of a citizen and his property be damaged by bad odors or smoke or other nuisances an injunction might be obtained.

"Another question," remarked the chief justice, "is whether the government license would protect the manager of an airship who accidentally falls and injures persons below."

Judge Baldwin advocated the calling of an official international congress to consider the international laws covering aerial navigation and to frame adequate international agreements on the subject.

Great Dutch Exposition.

Plans are under consideration for the holding of a great international exhibition at The Hague in 1913 in celebration of the opening of the Palace of Peace.

FORTY-FIVE IN WARD FOUR

Cribbage Team Also Issues a Challenge

Many attended the match games of Forty-Five at the Copeland Club Thursday night between the Copeland's first and second teams and the Tammany Club first and second teams. The teams were to play for one hour and the side winning the most games was to be the winner. The Tammany first team included James Sweeny and Bernard Griffin and Copelands included George Hebert and Edward Desmond, and the former won 22 to 9.

The second team from the Tammany Club were John O'Connell and Peter Farrell, and the second team from the Copelands were Cyril Morrissett and John Dunn; the former won 14 to 13.

The Tammany boys have defeated every team that they have met this season, and would like to meet other teams of the city in their rooms or any place. They have also a cribbage team that challenges any players of Quincy.

RECEPTION AT WOLLASTON

New Comers Greeted at Congregational Church

A most successful reception was held in the vestry of the Wollaston Congregational church on Thursday evening to greet all new comers and bring together the members of the parish.

In the receiving line were: Rev. and Mrs. E. A. Chase, Deacon and Mrs. O. A. Lincoln, Deacon and Mrs. S. B. Harrington, Deacon and Mrs. Alfred Thompson and Mrs. W. H. Brasee. The ushers were: Messrs. Herbert Marshall, Amos T. Leavitt, Leslie F. Cleveland and George Fleming.

The vestry was prettily decorated with palms, and refreshments were served by the following young ladies of Miss Poor's class, attractively gowned in white: Miss Edith Chapman, Miss Frances Jones, Miss Agnes Eastman, Miss Sally Baker, Miss Helen Farwell and Miss Mary Murray.

The introduction committee formed an important feature of the evening in making everyone feel at home and acquainting all strangers with the members of the church. The committee was composed of the following with Mrs. S. B. Wiley as chairman, Mrs. George Fleming, Mrs. Herbert Marshall, Mrs. Leslie L. Cleveland and Miss Ada Hinckley. Much credit is due Mrs. W. H. Brazee the president under whose direction the reception was held.

MOURNED BY SCHOOLMATES.

Exercises were held in the Coddington school Thursday afternoon in memory of William Arthur Deasy, who died that morning. He was one of the most popular members of the school, and both children and teachers alike were shocked to hear of his death. The flag was at half mast all day and while the funeral services were being conducted in the afternoon the children of the school were gathered together in the assembly hall where the principal, Walter H. Bentley, spoke of the boy's school life and read passages from the scriptures. The scholars recited the Lord's Prayer and the 23d Psalm. They closed the services with the hymn, "Lead kindly light."

CENTRAL LABOR UNION.

The Central Labor Union at its meeting Thursday evening voted to protest the action of D. D. Driscoll and Fred J. Kneeland at a political rally held at Hibernian hall in advocating the election of a candidate for the legislature who it was claimed was hostile to organized labor. The meeting also voted to indorse Mayor Shea for reelection.

MOSBY FLAYS FOOTBALL.

Confederate Chieftain Considers the Game Worse Than Warfare.

Colonel John S. Mosby, the famous Confederate partisan chieftain and alumnus of the University of Virginia, who denounced football the other day in a remarkable interview in which he compares the game to actual warfare to the detriment of the former, maintains that the great number of fatalities represents so many murders.

"I have read with indignation mingled with sorrow the account of the murder of young Christian, a student of the University of Virginia, in a football game in Washington with Georgetown university," said Colonel Mosby. "I use the word murder advisedly—the killing was not an accident. The very fact that a university surgeon went on with the team shows that they were going to war. They neglected, however, to provide an ambulance to carry off the wounded.

"I hope if this barbarous amusement is continued the board of visitors will require it to be conducted in accordance with the regulations of modern war.

"Some years ago I expressed to Dr. E. A. Alderman, president of the university, my objection to football because it was not a recreation for students, because many were making it a profession, because it developed the brutal instincts of our nature and because it should be no part of the curriculum of the university. A student who has broken somebody's nose at football stands higher than a master of arts. A man ought not to go to college to learn to be a circus rider or a prizefighter.

"Dr. Alderman says there is great danger to life and limb in football and that the danger must be eliminated before it can be played any more. But if the danger is eliminated nothing will be left of the game. The danger is not only the chief but the only attraction to the mob that gathers to witness it.

"The defenders of such sport say 'it develops the manhood of youth.' I deny it, unless by manhood they mean physical strength. My idea of manhood is a sense of honor and courage, and such qualities may exist in a weak body.

"The difference between the past and the present in great American universities is the distance between "Stonewall" Jackson and John L. Sullivan. Football simply develops the brute dormant in human nature and puts the player on a level with an Eskimo or a polar bear.

"Napoleon once said, 'Scratch a Russian and you find a Tartar,' implying that Russian civilization was only skin deep. If the university is a fair representative I fear that the same sarcasm equally applies in Virginia. My observation has been that athletes belong, as a rule, to that class who are invincible in peace and invisible in war."

SEES DOOM OF LORDS.

T. P. O'Connor Predicts Uprising of Masses Over Rejection of Budget.

Commenting on the action taken by the British house of lords in adopting Lord Lansdowne's amendment to the finance bill, T. P. O'Connor, M. P., one of the Irish Nationalist leaders in the house of commons, now in the United States in the interest of Irish home rule, said the other night that the rejection of the British budget by the British peers had announced their own doom.

"I am greatly pleased, and so is every one who is an enemy of the house of lords," said Mr. O'Connor. "Every Liberal, and, still more, every Irish Nationalist, has known for several generations that it was impossible to have anything like steady Liberal progress so long as the house of lords retained its power to defeat or postpone all democratic legislation. Ireland has been the special sufferer from the present power of that body, for the house of lords consists almost exclusively of the landlords who have always been the curse and the enemies of Ireland.

"As to the effect in England, I believe the rejection of the budget will lead to an uprising of the masses the strength of which the lords have failed to realize. They will realize it before many hours. I believe we are on the eve of the fiercest fight we have seen in British politics for a century that the fight will go against the lords, that they have pronounced their own doom and that before two or three years from now their power of mischief will be so broken as practically to be nonexistent.

"This means the final emancipation of the English masses from the grip of feudalism and of Ireland from government of an alien parliament."

Public Parks For Germany.

A committee has been formed to secure national parks governed after the style of Yellowstone park in all the German speaking countries. Such parks are planned in the Austrian Alps, in south Germany, in north Germany and in central Germany. These parks are to be open to the public without any charge whatever.

Salesman Traveling by Auto.

The practice of using the automobile as a conveyance for traveling salesmen is growing. A case in point is that of a touring car in which N. K. Smith, a traveling representative of a shoe company, recently completed a trip from Atlanta, Ga., to Richmond, Va., and back, covering 1,200 miles and doing business along the way.

BOSTON AMUSEMENTS

Boston Theatre.

One of the greates successes of the present season is Klaw & Erlanger's big spectacular production of "The Circus Man," the current attraction at the Boston Theatre. There are many reasons for its success. In the first place it is a dramatization of a widely read book—Holman F. Day's "Squire Phin," which has to do with the down east folk. In the next place the star is Maclyn Arbuckle an actor who has a loyal following in New England and particularly in Boston as his successes as Jim Hackler in "The County Chairman" and "Slim" Hoover in "The Round Up" (Nobody loves a fat man) attest. The play offers the best and most consistent, clean, theatrical treat imaginable. Judged from any view point it is a splendid piece of playwriting. There is an abundance fo comedy and there is something in the story that makes a direct and irresistible appeal to the seeker after entertainment. "The Circus Man" tells of the fortunes that befall "Fighting Hime" Look upon his return to the little Maine village where he was born, after twenty years of roughing it as the proprietor of a wagon circus in Texas. He has a lot of old scores to settle and he proceeds, in his dominant and forceful circus way, to do it.

American Music Hall.

After magnificent triumphs in all the leading cities of America and particularly in New York, Chicago, New Orleans, Julian Eltinge, conceded by all to be the world's greatest protrayer of feminine characterizations will return home to Boston next week and open an engagement at the American Music Hall. Julian Eltinge is the last word in the impersonating of characters of the fair sex. His beautiful costumes have at all times been the envy of the women and the admiration of the men. His methods of making up whereby he reduces a normal masculine waist into a dainty circle of twenty-four inches and encases a number six foot into a number three shoe has been the subject of more discussion perhaps than any other single act on the stage. While Mr. Eltinge will retain some of the favorite characterizations which have been seen here before he will introduce many new ones. He will also present his sensational dance called "The Goddess of Incense." Surrounding Mr. Eltinge on the bill will be a big list of stars .

Keith's Theatre.

Next week at Keith's will be one of unusual interest in Boston, from the fact that it will introduce for the first time here in vaudeville Eleanor Gordon, formerly leading lady of the Boston theatre stock company, who during the two seasons she played there won a popularity attained by few actresses in Boston. Miss Gordon is not simply in vaudeville for a week, in fact, she has been successful in securing one of the very best short comedies written in years, and she has made a tremendous success with it throughout the west. It is called "Tips on Taps," and was written by the famous author Edgar Allen Woolf. Her support includes that well known actor, Joseph Sullivan. The story of the sketch is that of a young wife who secretly plays the races, and goes to her husband's pockets in order to secure money to buy expensive gowns and thus maintain her position of wealth as an aid to his business. The complications into which her falseness leads when she tries to hide her turf operations furnish lively merriment and the finish is exceptionally strong.

CASTLE SQUARE THEATRE.

The triumphant success of "Hamlet" at the Castle Square a few weeks ago showed that the John Craig Stock Company possesses a remarkable versatility and the praise showered upon his production from all sides has emboldened Mr. Craig to give another Shakespearean play during the coming week. In order to offer a contrast, he will turn from tragedy to farce, the play chosen being the merry and lively "Taming of the Shrew," which is one continuous laugh from beginning to end. It has been usual in times past to give this play in an incomplete version, but Mr. Craig will produce it in its entirety, including the preliminary induction in which appear Christopher Sly and his companions, and following the memorable arrangement of the play that Augustin Daly and Ada Rehan gave such vogue to a dozen years ago. Mr. Craig was himself a participant in that revival, and he therefore possesses a knowledge of all the stage business and technique which will enable him to do the fullest justice to his own production of "The Taming of the Shrew."

ELMENDORF—"SICILY."

For the fourth of the series of lectures at Tremont Temple next Friday evening and next Saturday afternoon Mr. Dwight L. Elmendorf will describe his journey both through and around the attractive little island of Sicily. Landing at Messina just a few weeks after the appalling calamity of last December Mr. Elmendorf will show in contrast the scenes visited after the devastation with pictures of the same localities taken a year previous. He will, however, avoid an undue reference to the sad results of the destruction of the city but will rather give the larger part of his lecture to picturing and describing the natural lovelinss of the island and its classic history and art. Among the places to be visited will be Befalu; Solento, Halermo, Monreals, Sergesta, Girgenti, Syracuse, and Taormina. The view from this latter place is spoken of by Mr. Elmendorf as "the most beautiful in the world" and here will be shown in connection with his description of the place what he considers to be the photographic gems of his vast collection. The subject of the fifth and last lecture of the series will be "Dalmatia."

—The tendency of modern legislation dealing with children is towards leniency; but, while we recognize a commendable advance, we must be careful lest in our desire to be merciful we are really cruel, and lest we encourage children in evil by failing to make punishment dreaded.—Law Magazine.

BRIEFS

Mrs. John Malmberg of New Hampshire is in Quincy visiting friends.

Miss Catherine Cusolito of Bates avenue was taken suddenly sick Thursday. Dr. Dion was called and pronounced it scarlet fever.

The Boys' club of Atlantic held their regular weekly meeting at the Memorial Congregational church on Thursday evening.

Rehearsals for the Christmas concert at the Memorial church are being carried on under the direction of Mrs. Harry Wells and Miss Annie Harding.

The 6.45 P. M. electric car from East Milton ran off the track near the West Quincy depot Thursday on account of slippery rails, and for 20 minutes cars were delayed.

Aubery R. Keith left town today for Chicago. After a short visit to his sister in that city he will proceed to Beaumont, Texas, where he expects to pass the winter.

Miss Marion Landry of Bates avenue recently ill with pneumonia has now fully recovered, and will attend school Monday much to the delight of her school chums with whom she is a favorite.

A very pleasant surprise was tendered to Miss Lulu Barry of Rogers street Thursday evening by her many friends. All those present enjoyed themselves in dancing, games, singing. Refreshments were served by Joyce Barry & Co. Miss Barry was presented with a beautiful signet ring. The committee in charge were the Misses Agnes Pendergast, Anna McDermott and Thresa Connelly.

W. R. Lofgren of Cottage street is still confined to the house, although it was nearly four weeks ago that he met with an accident. His foot has, however, been removed from plaster, and he is daily receiving massage treatment, but it is swollen and painful. He will make a special effort to attend the dedication of his church on Sunday.

One of the most interesting classes held in connection with the Quincy Women's club is the dress-making class which is receiving splendid instruction under Mrs. Addie H. Holmes of Quincy. It is a small class boasting of but six members, but for that reason receives much individual attention from the teacher. Many different articles of wearing apparel are being attempted and by the end of the season the class hope to become most proficient in the art of cutting, fitting and finishing.

—That war and football are not essential to the cultivation and display of heroism is proven by the splendid courage of the twelve men who went to their deaths in the burning Illinois coal mine in an endeavor to save the imprisoned miners. There was only a chance of their accomplishing a rescue, but they took that chance. That they failed was no fault of theirs; but their action was none the less heroic. Over the pall of a terrible disaster ,the bravery of these twelve men sheds a ray of brilliant illumination. Manliness displayed in the effort to save men suffers none in comparison with manliness displayed in attempts to kill man.—New Bedford Standard.

THE DUTY OF THE HOUR!

ELECTION TUESDAY, DECEMBER 7

Vote No! Vote Early! Vote on your way to Business!

ASK THE FIRST TEN MOTHERS

you meet if they would vote for the saloon, and govern yourself accordingly.

WHERE DO YOU WANT THEM?

Every voter who marks a cross against the word "Yes" on the License question means of course, that in his judgment, it is best to have the open saloons. If the matter turned upon his single vote, he would have them. Now, let him answer this other question, Where? Where does he want to have the saloons planted? Next door to the house he lives in? Or next to that choice bit of property which he owns? Or just around the corner from the schoolhouse, where his children go to school? And if not, why not? The saloons are going to depreciate somebody's property; they are going to ruin somebody's children. Don't vote that way until you have first answered the question. "Where?"

"I'd make a hard fight to leave a better world for my boy than I found for myself."
—George Elliot.

Here Is The Raw Material

If you license the Saloon it will catch some of us—SURE.
The State that protects its birds ought also to protect its boys.

VOTE FOR US

(OVER)

THAT FIRST VOTE

You are a young man about to cast your first vote. Be sure to vote on the liquor question. Have an opinion. Don't dodge. Be sure to cast it in such a way that you will be proud of it years hence. It is a war; let your first shot be on the right side. VOTE NO.

Shall a man's way to reform be made easier or harder? That is the question. Suppose it is true that our citizens can drink themselves drunk if they choose. Is that any reason for putting saloons in the way of the man who wants to avoid them? If we plant saloons so that it is impossible for a workingman to get from his shop to his home without passing them, have we done a kindness to the workingman? Is it better that the workingman's family should have the money he earns, or the saloon keeper? Is it better for the community that the man who is struggling to reform should have a fair chance, or that he should fall and become a curse to his family and a charge upon the public treasury?

BRIEFS

It is nearly time for some of the High school pupils to take their annual dip in Butler's pond as there is ice this week.

Rev. L. L. Hale of South Boston delivered the sermon at the Wollaston Methodist church on Sunday morning In the evening a temperance sermon was preached.

The Ladies' Benevolent society of the Atlantic Memorial church hold their experience meeting next Thursday afternoon also a Christmas sale in the afternoon and evening.

The Woman's Guild of St. Chrysostom's church holds its monthly business meeting and "open table" Wednesday afternoon at half past two in the parish rooms.

The Men's club of St. Chrysostom's church meets Monday afternoon in the parish rooms when D. Dwyer, Esq., of Boston will speak on "Dr. Eliot's new Religion, from a Christian Standpoint."

Hostesses giving the popular circle of eight entertainments are asked to make returns promptly to Walter E. Burke who is acting as treasurer and who will make acknowledgment of all money received.

Thursday evening the annual meeting and election of officers of Pilgrim union is to be held at the Neponset M. E. church with supper at 6.30; business at 7.45 and at 8 o'clock Rev. W. W. Bowers of Baker Memorial church, Dorchester will speak.

Many others besides Wollaston people are eagerly anticipating the "Dramatics" to be given in Brasee hall Wednesday and Thursday evening in aid of the Free Kindergarten—Mrs. Herbert Y. Follett is chairman of the committee in charge of the entertainments.

The regular meeting of the Fowler chapter of the Methodist Brotherhood of the Hall Place M. E. church was held in the vestry, Monday evening, Nov. 29th. The meeting was called to order by the president, Mr. Richard H. Moyle. Rev. John Francis Lee was the speaker of the evening and gave an interesting address on the work in the South, which was very helpful and enlisted the aid and sympathy of all the members present for the more unfortunate people in the South. After the address, refreshments were served and a social hour enjoyed.

ALL WORK TOGETHER.

The citizens of Quincy are to be congratulated upon the substantial sums of money which have been contributed to the Anti-Tuberculosis Association to assist them in building a camp in this city for the treatment and cure of consumption, a disease which has gained appalling headway among us. This however is only a beginning and to make a success of this great cause we must all work, every individual. To this end the Civic-Betterment committee of the Women's club are to sell Red Cross stamps, which bear the Christmas and New Year Greetings in all the post offices in the city, and in many of the stores. It is urgent that all firms see to it that their mail matter from now until Christmas bear the Red Cross stamp, and all banks also, each person sending letters or parcels. As our beloved Dr. Hale expressed it, our success is in all working "together all together." Let every one help this grand work to success.

TESTIMONY ON IRREGULARITIES

Judge Allows It to Be Admitted In the Sugar Trust

SPITZER'S OFFER TO PARR

Man Who Uncovered Frauds In Williamsburg Docks Tells of Effort to Bribe Him, Following Finding of False Weight Appurtenances—"All Masons and Would Make Trouble For Everyone"—Appeal Ineffective

New York, Dec. 4.—The government won a substantial victory in the trial of the former employes of the American Sugar Refinery company, who are charged with sugar weighing frauds in the United States circuit court, when Judge Martin ruled in its favor in respect to the introduction in evidence of extensive records showing the differences between the weights of sugar weighed by the government weighers and by the city weighers on the Havemeyer and Elder docks in Williamsburg.

Now that this evidence can go in it will be possible to bring out in this trial through the records that have been obtained an exact demonstration of the short weights registered by the government weighers on the doctored scales as contrasted with the higher weights on the scales used by the city weighers. The sugar trust, it is already in evidence, paid the merchants from whom it bought its sugar on the basis of the weights by the city weighers.

Richard Parr, acting deputy surveyor, now in charge of weighing, who uncovered the frauds in the Williamsburg docks, was called to the stand. Parr said that while a special employe of the customs department he had been assigned on Nov. 11, 1907, to investigate weighing on the Havemeyer and Elder pier, and went there that day or the next with Special Agent Braziński, who was also assigned the work. He had been on the Williamsburg docks back in 1899 as a sampler, but not in the meantime.

The most dramatic moment yet in the trial came when Parr detailed his discovery of the steel spring which manipulated the scale. He had detected Kehoe, one of the defendants, stooping over in a peculiar position, he said, and began an investigation. Feeling down the wooden stanchion he felt a foreign substance on the scale and lighting a match discovered the steel spring.

"After I came out on the dock," continued Parr, "Spitzer met me, took me by the arm and said: 'This thing must be fixed up.' I said there was no fixing-up to be done. Spitzer said that we were all Masons and this would make trouble for everyone around. I said that I could not help that; they had made trouble themselves. He said I should report the scales out of order and I could name my price. He said he had already fixed others the same way and would sooner cut his arm off than give any one away. I told him Masonry had nothing to do with this. Later I met Spitzer on the string piece. He said I was a fool not to take the money and lose the spring. He said: 'The offer is good yet if you'll lose that iron.' I said there was no chance. I had the iron in my pocket."

Parr then proceeded straight to the story of the discovery of the frauds thesmselves. He and Branzinski got to the dock Nov. 20 while the steamship Strathyre was unloading. The two men spoke to Spitzer, the dock boss, who was in charge of the weighing gang, and then went to the door of scale house No. 1. A government weigher named Gappa, who was at work there, stopped weighing. Parr ordered him to continue. Kehoe, one of the checkers now on trial, was checking the weights at his seat right by the stanchion of the scales. This was the stanchion that contained the steel spring which varied the weights of sugar according to the pressure exerted.

The draft of sugar then on the scales Parr ordered weighed and apparently Kehoe did not have the nerve to work his spring while this weighing was being done, for the draft weighed 1008 pounds. Parr took the pink book used by Gappa to record the weights and found that the weight originally entered was 984 pounds.

Parr then ordered up a second draft for reweighing and this reweighing showed 1012 pounds as against 994 pounds recorded in the pink book. Then Parr said he decided that there was something very queer about the scales themselves and brushing Kehoe one side made an examination of the apparatus which led to the discovery of the steel spring with which the scales were doctored.

Parr then told of the cutting away of the stanchion of the scales a few days later and of the other conditions as he found them on the Williamsburg pier.

Chicago Divorce Valid In New York

New York, Dec. 4.—So far as the New York state courts have determined the divorce which Grace B. Guggenheim obtained from William Guggenheim, eight years ago in Chicago, is valid, according to a decision rendered by the appellate division of the supreme court here.

PARLIAMENT PROROGUED

Signal For Opening Great Political War In Great Britain

London, Dec. 4.—Parliament has been prorogued until Jan. 15. The reading of the king's speech was the signal for the opening of a terrific political war that will last up to the last moment before the general election in January. The election is really a referendum vote on the budget.

The king's speech, after referring to the continued friendly relations with foreign nations and the progress of self-government in the empire, and reviewing the work of the session, thanked the house of commons for the liberality and the care with which it provided for heavy additions to the national expenditure due to the requirements of imperial defense and social reform.

"I regret that the provision has proved unavailing," the speech said, referring to the lords' action.

Freed of legislative duties, commoners at once begain their own politi campaigns in their constituencies. moners at once began their own political campaigns in their constituencies.

WOULD KEEP NAVY YARDS

Secretary Meyer Recommends Building of Two Big Battleships

Washington, Dec. 4.—Warning the government that it may be compelled to buy them back at an increased cost, Secretary Meyer of the navy department, in his annual report to the president, recommends the retention, for the present, of all the navy yards owned by the government. He would have the government wait until the completion of the Panama canal before closing any of the yards on the southern coast.

Two big battleships of the all-big-gun class are recommended by the secretary, as well as a repair ship. He makes it plain in his report that he is opposed, except occasionally as a check on cost, to the construction of battleships at government navy yards.

PUBLIC SENTIMENT THE CHIEF FACTOR

Ludlow Manufacturers Will Submit to Arbitration

Ludlow, Mass., Dec. 4.—The end of the great Ludlow strike is at hand, and the strikers will in a few days be taken back to work by the company unless something unforeseen happens between now and the first of the week.

Although the position of the manufacturers is firm, and they feel that they are not in a position to lose prestige by yielding, it can be confidently stated that when the proper time comes the mill owners will be ready to submit their position to the board. This action will not be taken, however, until some advance is made by the strikers.

The manufacturers' position is that they are legally right in every action they have taken. When it comes to the moral right they feel that the sentiment of the public must be considered. Realizing this sentiment, if the leaders of the strikers make a formal demand of the state board to arbitrate their case, the manufacturers for the sake of public sentiment will also submit to arbitration.

TRAINMEN RETURN TO WORK

Railroad Managers Say That Switchmen's Strike Is About Over

St. Paul, Dec. 4.—With 1500 men imported to replace the striking switchmen who are members of the Switchmen's union of North America, and this strikers who are members of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen returning to work, managers of the Great Northern and Northern Pacific railroads assert that the strike is about over.

But nothwithstanding the desertion of the trainmen and the gradual reresumption of traffic, the strike leaders assert that the strike has only begun. Freight congestion is not appreciably relieved.

SYRIAN A WHITE MAN

Eligible to Become Citizen of United States, Says Georgia Judge

Atlanta, Dec. 4.—By the decision of Judge Newman of the United States district court Costa G. Najour, a Syrian, is declared a white man, and eligible to the privileges of citizenship in the United States.

On the ground that he is a Mongolian it is probable that the case will be appealed by the immigration bureau.

No Grade Crossings In Taunton

Taunton, Mass., Dec. 4.—The abolition of grade crossings in Taunton following a conference between J. H. Benton, representing the New Haven railroad; Attorney General Malone, representing the commonwealth, and City Solicitor Hathaway, representing the city, is an assured fact. This will mean a new railroad station and new approaches.

ENVOYS SENT TO WASHINGTON

Zelaya Seeks to Influence Our Plans Regarding Nicaragua

KNOX'S ULTIMATUM IGNORED

Man Who Is Looked Upon as Responsible For Torture and Death of Americans Will Receive Vigorous Attention of American Warships Should He Attempt to Leave the Country—Castrello Makes a Request

Washington, Dec. 4.—President Zelaya has not only refused to take official cognizance of Secretary Knox's note, which was practically an ultimatum, but he is declared to have dispatched special agents to Washington to endeavor to have the state department's ultimatum set aside, first by appeals to that department and secondly by direct appeals to members of congress.

The state department is entirely aware of the presence and identity of these emissaries. While they are being watched in a general way, the United States is maintaining over them nothing that could be construed as espionage.

In addition to this, it is reported that any attempt that Zelaya may make to escape from the country will receive the direct and vigorous attention of the American warships now lying off the coasts of Nicaragua.

Secretary Knox's note intimated in the plainest language that the state department looks upon Zelaya as the man responsible for the torture and death of the two Americans, Groce and Cannon.

Salvator Castrillo, the diplomatic agent of the provisional government of Nicaragua and representative of the revolutionists here, made formal request to Secretary Knox that he be received on equal terms with the agents of the Zelaya government. This, naturally, will be informally, as neither the Nicaraguan representatives nor Castrillo have official standing here.

While the state department has not rendered any decision in the matter it is generally believed that Castrillo's request will be granted.

CONSCIENCE HURTS HIM

Banker Who Robbed His Depositors Surrenders After Long Hiding

New York, Dec. 4.—A wanderer over the four quarters of the globe in search of happiness he failed to find, Hyman Epstein, a Williamsburg banker, walked into court and surrendered himself to the authorities, saying: "My conscience would not let me be happy. I'm ready to take my medicine."

Two years ago Epstein, who conducted a private bank in Williamsburg, disappeared after the bank had closed. He was said to have made away with more than $60,000.

"I have not a penny left," Epstein said. "I have spent all that I gained from the bank, and I am tired of hiding. My conscience hurts me, and I want to come back and try to repay to those who lost by me. I will plead guilty at my trial."

FROM $2.42 TO $27

Wide Range of Tax Rates In Massachusetts Cities and Towns

Boston, Dec. 4.—Of the tax rates of all cities and towns throughout Massachusetts, the highest is that of the town of Merrimac, in Essex county. There the rate is $27, or $24.58 more than in the town of Gosnold, in Dukes county, where the rate is only $2.42.

Deputy Tax Commissioner Fales has compiled a list of the rates as they are in the different places, which, in addition to the foregoing, shows that in 13 towns the rate ranges from $3.70 to $9.50; from $10 to $14.80 in one city and 89 towns; from $15 to $19.80 in 20 cities and 149 towns, and from $20 to $25.50 in 8 cities and 68 towns.

AGAIN CHANGES HANDS

Owner of Oldest Craft In United States Parts With Her For $1000

Rockland, Me., Dec. 4.—The two-masted schooner Polly, the oldest craft in the United States and one of the oldest in the world in active commission, famous as a Massachusetts privateer in the War of 1812, has again changed owners.

Just how many owners have preceded J. H. Weldon of Dighton, Mass., who bought the Polly for $1000 from Captain Spencer of Rockland, during her nearly 105 years of existence, is uncertain.

Child's Blow Kills Father

Bristol, R. I., Dec. 4.—Victim of an accidental blow from his daughter, Miss Minnie McKeavitt, while he was playing with her, James McKeavitt, aged 54, is dead. The point of an umbrella entered one of his eyes, causing hemorrhage of the brain.

Harvard Gets $150,000 Gift

Boston, Dec. 4.—Adolphus Busch of St. Louis has given $150,000 to aid in the construction of a new Germanic museum at Harvard, a check for that amount having been received by the secretary of the Harvard corporation.

AN OLD-TIME PRESCRIPTION

in a modern product. From time immemorial sage and sulphur have been used for the hair and scalp. Almost every one knows of the value of such a combination for darkening the hair and making it grow. In olden times the only way to get a hair tonic of this sort was to brew it in the home fireplace, a method which was troublesome and not always satisfactory. Nowadays almost every up-to-date druggist can supply his patrons with a ready to use product, skillfully compounded in perfectly equipped laboratories. Such a preparation is Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur, which is sold by all leading druggists for 50c. and $1.00 a bottle, or which is sent direct by the Wyeth Chemical Company, 74 Cortlandt St., New York City, upon receipt of price.

BRIEFS

Dramas will be presented at Wollaston next Wednesday and Thursday evenings for the benefit of the free kindergarten.

Special meetings will be held in St. Pauls Swedish M. E. church every evening next week except Monday. Rev. Frank E. Beaman of Brockton, an able pastor, will preach at several of these meetings.

Reapers circle of Christ church hold their next meeting on Friday evening at the home of their leader Miss Saville of 18 Saville avenue. It will be birthday night and a large attendance is hoped for.

At the meeting of the Men's club of Christ church Rev. George L. Parker of Salem will speak on "Personal Experiences in Russia," illustrated by stereopticon. Mr. Parker spent several years in St. Petersburg returning to this country last fall.

Rev. Edward Norton pastor of the Park and Downs Congregational church will speak on the license question in place of the regular evening service at the church. Mr. Norton remembers Quincy when there were forty-two saloons and will have something interesting to tell those attending the meeting.

THE OLD TRUMPET.

Just before leaving the city for the west where he is to spend the winter Aubrey R. Keith gave into the custody of Frank C. Packard a trumpet much cherished by the old firemen of the Washington M. French Hose company.

When this company was formed Horace Feltis was foreman. The trumpet was in constant use at fires and at meetings and although in use many years is still in good condition. When the company disbanded it was given to the care of Mr. Keith and has often been displayed at reunions of the old firemen and at meetings of the Ramblers' club.

It is in good hands and it is needless to say that Mr. Keith will find it well cared for on his return.

DOWNFALL OF CRUSADER

Checks Cashed by Clergyman Are Said to Have Been Forgeries

Providence, Dec. 4.—The extent of the alleged forgeries laid at the door of Rev. Raymond E. Walker, until June last the pastor of the Baptist church in Centredale, and at the time of his arrest interested in mission work and in the sale of Red Cross Christmas stamps here, is increasing rapidly.

Last night the police were advised that two checks said to have been cashed by the minister in addition to those first discovered are forgeries. In searching Walker's house several articles reported to have been stolen during the past few weeks were found.

Walker was arraigned before Judge Gorham and upon application of his attorney the case was continued a week. Walker's attorney asked for the continuance on the grounds that he desired to have his client examined as to his mental condition.

Before his downfall Walker was prominent in his vigorous crusade against gamblers and Sunday liquor joints in Centredale.

SUSPICION OF SWINDLE

Insurance Companies Refuse to Honor Policies on Life of Mrs. Snead

New York, Dec. 4.—The three companies in which Mrs. Ocey D. M. Snead held life insurance for upwards of $30,000 announced that they will refuse to honor their policies until it has been proven that the body of the half-starved young woman found in the bathtub of an unfurnished house in East Orange, N. J., is that of Mrs. Snead.

The policy of $24,000 on the life of her husband, Fletcher Snead, who is missing, is also unpaid, and no claim has been put in for the insurance.

A company agent said of the case: "We do not believe Snead is dead. We do not know that Mrs. Snead is dead."

HEIRESS WEDS CHAUFFEUR

Daughter of Millionaire Brewer and Her Husband on Honeymoon Trip

New York, Dec. 4.—"Yes, yes; Olga was married to Williams in Newark, Nov. 23. They are away on a short trip. Certainly she has been forgiven. It was not an elopement," was the announcement made by Mrs. James Everard, wife of the multi-millionaire brewer, that her daughter Olga had married William Williams, the former chauffeur of the family and later private secretary.

The Everards live on their estate in Greenwich, Conn., which adjoins that of William G. Rockefeller.

Curtis Calls on Taft

Washington, Dec. 4.—Edwin U. Curtis, who will succeed George H. Lyman as collector of the port of Boston, was a caller at the White House, where he was presented to the president. The call was merely the customary one of respect which new appointees are supposed to make.

Orphans Will Get Queen Lil's Estate

Honolulu, Dec. 4.—Former Queen Liliuokalani of the Hawaiian Islands has executed a deed of trust whereby a great part of her estate, which is valued at $200,000, after her death, will go toward the endowment of orphan asylums. Liliuokalani is 71 years old.

King Edward as Arbitrator

London, Dec. 4.—King Edward, through the foreign office, formally accepted the invitation to act as arbitrator of the Alsop claim dispute between the United States and Chili.

New Position For Abruzzi

Venice, Dec. 4.—The Duke of the Abruzzi has been appointed director-general of the arsenal here, and shortly will take up his abode in the royal palace in Venice

Her Base Ingratitude.

When Duchenois, the great French actress, died some one met an old man who had been her intimate friend and who was apparently crushed with sorrow. Kindly meant professions of sympathy and consolation failed to cheer him. "For," said he, "it is not so much her loss which troubles me as her base ingratitude. Can you credit it? She left me nothing in her will, and yet I dined with her at her own house three times a week regularly for thirty years!"

The Human Touch.

"But, my dear sir, your play does not even touch the chords of humanity!" remarked a theatrical lessee, referring to a comedy that he had deigned to scan.

"What! No human touch? Great Scott!" exclaimed the dramatist. "And the hero is always borrowing money from his friends!"

Vengeance.

"I wonder at your allowing Hix to marry your daughter. I thought you were mortal enemies."

"That's just the reason. Now he will have my wife for his mother-in-law."—Exchange.

TELLS WHOLE STORY OF LIFE

Hattie Le Blanc Sheds Light on Glover Murder Mystery

BUT FEW KNOW HER SECRET

Complete Confession Made In Presence of Priest and Her Lawyers—District Attorney Immediately Made Acquainted With Facts In the Case—Impetus Given to State's Investigation of a "Third Person"

Cambridge, Mass., Dec. 4.—Hattie Le Blanc, accused of the murder of Clarence F. Glover, yesterday to a French priest and to her lawyers made a complete confession of all she knows regarding the tragedy.

Her statements were so amazing that the lawyer immediately announced that District Attorney Higgins should in the ends of justice be notified of the girl's story. At the same time Lawyer Tufts announced his confidence that his client will be acquitted.

An immediate impression was given by these statements that the girl has made accusations against a third party as being concerned in the murder of the laundryman.

Neither Tufts, Higgins nor Junior Counsel Morton will discuss the turn that the murder mystery has taken.

"For the first time," said Tufts last night, "we have secured Hattie Le Blanc's complete statement. She has recovered from the fear which possessed her after her discovery, and has regained her physical strength.

"Her story is complete today. It takes in her recollections of her earliest childhood in Cape Breton, the circumstances attending her coming to Waltham, her relations with the Glover family and the incidents just previous to and after the murder.

"Now that she has fully recovered from the treatment she was forced to undergo, she has told us everything. I have not the slightest doubt of her acquittal.

"But that a third person has been implicated we wave announced nothing that can warrant that inference. All that we have to do is to clear our client. I is not our task to convict the real murderer; just to clear our client.

"The conference with District Attorney Higgins might be merely about matters of procedure. I cannot tell you what transpired in that conference. There will be others as soon as Mr. Higgins is free from the Harmon trial.

"The Waltham police are still, as far as I know, gathering evidence. Their search has included more than one person, and I think they are still at work.

"Until they cease all investigation it would not be politic for us as attorneys for the defense to turn over to them evidence, even if it implicated another."

The consultation wth Hattie Le Blanc lasted for two hours. Besides the two attorneys, Father Rabel, curate of the Church of Notre Dame de Pitie of North Cambridge, acted as interpreter, and Miss Little, Tufts' stenographer, was present.

It was the last of several consultations and completed the story of the girl's life to the present. Hardly was she escorted from the consultation room back to her cell in the house of detention when Tufts hurried over to the courthouse seeking Higgins, with whom he was closeted for three-quarters of an hour. The conference with the district attorney, at a time when he was extremely busy, is taken as certain indication that Hattie Le Blanc's story has given the first real impetus to the state's investigation of the "third person" who has been hinted at since the murder in the laundry.

According to the plans Tufts discussed he will present no defense at the police hearing in the lower court, and will wait until the case comes to trial in the superior court before disclosing his defense.

ACCOUNTANT'S PAY RAISED

But He Loses His Job Because a "New Position Is Created"

Boston, Dec. 4.—Because Jesse S. Wiley, named by the Brookline selectmen as town accountant, had his pay raised from $1200 to $2000 he now loses his job.

Yesterday the civil service commission decided that the selectmen by increasing the pay really created a new position and that it must be filled after a competitive examination.

Strike In Quarries Continues

Montpelier, Vt., Dec. 4.—Hopes for a speedy settlement of the strike of 5000 granite workers here, in Barre and in Northfield vanished when the dispute committee of the Northfield branch, the first to strike, refused to accept the Barre Granite Manufacturers' association's proposition.

Many Pellagra Victims

Montgomery, Ala. Dec. 4.—There were fifty-five deaths from pellagra in Alabama from January to Oct. 1, 1909, with thirty-eight cases yet under observation. Twenty of the thirty-eight patients were habitual users of cornmeal.

DENIED A REHEARING

Appeal of Banker Walsh Is Refused In Federal Court

Chicago, Dec. 4.—John R. Walsh, convicted of misapplying the funds of the Chicago National bank of which he was president, was denied a rehearing of his appeal to the federal circuit court of appeals here by Judges Grosscup, Seaman and Baker.

JOHN R. WALSH

The denial of the motion for a rehearing leaves Walsh without other recourse than the supreme court of the United States to stay the execution of the sentence committing him to five years in the Leavenworth federal penitentiary. The court declined to admit Walsh to bail, but permitted him to defer the beginning of the sentence pending the application to the supreme court, meanwhile placing him in the custody of the United States marshal.

ESTATE IS DOUBLE AMOUNT ASSESSED

Taft's Late Landlord Got Ahead of the City of Beverly

Beverly, Mass., Dec. 4.—The summer capital of the country is included in an estate that has been under-assessed by the board of assessors, resulting in a loss to the city of $83,000 in taxes this year.

The disclosure came as a result of the filing of the inventory of the estate of the late Robert D. Evans, landlord to President Taft, who died July 6 as a result of a fall from his horse.

Evans was assessed on real and personal property to the amount of $5,087,175, when he should have paid, according to the inventory, on $10,538,103.

The effect of the undervaluation is felt more keenly since it would have meant that the present tax rate of $15.40 would have been reduced to about $13.50 had the real wealth of Evans been known last May, when the lists were made up.

FOUR VESSELS LOST

Polar Vessel John R. Bradley Among the Missing In Great Gale

Birchy Cove, N. F., Dec. 4.—Three schooners of the Gloucester, Mass., fishing fleet, the Mabel D. Hines, the Clintonia and the Henry M. Stanley, were wrecked in the violent northeast gale which has swept Newfoundland waters in the past few days.

Schooner John R. Bradley, widely known as the vessel which carried Dr. Cook's Arctic expedition, is also reported missing from the fishing fleet, and it is feared that she is lost.

The vessels went ashore at various points along the west coast, and information received here would indicate that the crews were saved.

SMALL HERRING SCARCE

Eastport "Sardine" Output Will Be Exceedingly Short In Consequence

Eastport, Me., Dec. 4.—Owing to the extremely small quantity produced, it is considered doubtful if there will be a case of American sardines on the market Jan. 1.

The pack by the sardine canning plants on the Maine coast, which were closed by law at midnight, Nov. 30, was small this year, not more than 50 percent of the usual quantity having been canned.

This remarkable falling off was due to the scarcity of the small herring suitable for canning.

Railroad President Indicted

Louisville, Dec. 4.—Lucien J. Irwin, president of the Louisville, Henderson and St. Louis railroad, indicted jointly with his road on the charge of rebating, gave bonds of $4000 in the United States court here. Irwin is the first railroad president ever indicted for violation of the interstate commerce law.

Shrapnel Failed to Hit Balloon

New York, Dec. 4.—A big army balloon, which was sent up at the United States army proving grounds at Sandy Hook, withstood for several hours a shower of shrapnel which was fired at intervals from Fort Hancock.

City Employe Electrocuted

Quincy, Mass., Dec. 4.—Fred Jones, an employe of the lighting department of the city, was electrocuted while fixing an arc light. He leaves a widow and five children.

Only three weeks to Christmas have you started on your shopping?

With the coming of cold weather and snow in Massachusetts is the announcement that strawberries are ripe in Texas. You can get a whole quart for a dollar.

Avoid the crowds in Boston by doing as much Christmas shopping as possible with the local store keepers. They cater to your needs all the year round and deserve a share of the holiday buying.

They seem to have the right idea at Columbia university for if the new stadium is built it is proposed to open it certain days and evenings in the week for poor children and more than that the students will help entertain the children in their athletic games and plays.

Chicago and the state of Illinois are to send large delegations to the national rivers and harbors congress at Washington, Dec. 8, 9 and 10. Interest is wide spread all over the country and it looks as though there would be great commercial prosperity by the cultivation of waterways and harbor facilities.

Malden citizens are going at the work of civic improvement in a businesslike way. A landscape architect is to make a study of the city, having in view improving the topography and having a civic centre. A plan which seems feasible will be selected and all future improvements will be along those lines. It should result in years to come in a very satisfactory city.

PHILERGIANS.

Dec. 7th an open meeting of the Philergians will be held in Cochato hall at 2.30. The program of the afternoon is under the direction of the social service department of the Philergians. Dr. John A. Gordon of Quincy and Dr. William J. Watson of South Braintree will speak of tuberculosis, Judge Albert E. Avery and Dr. Henry L. Dearing will talk of the imperative need of a system of sewerage. These gentlemen have kindly given their services for the benefit of the club, and members are requested to attend promptly at 2.30 as the business will be postponed in order to take advantage of this opportunity. Miss Ellen Emerson granddaughter of Ralph Waldo Emerson and a nurse at Massachusetts General hospital will give a "Health Lecture." There will be a club tea.

Nov. 26th a party of Philergians visited Mrs. John Gardner's art palace. Plans for another visit are being arranged for all club members desirous of going. Notice of date will be given later.

Nov. 30th club members visited the new art museum under the direction of a docent. Feb. 15th 1910, April 12, Jan. 14th, and March 18th are dates chosen for other visits.

Red Cross stamps will be for sale at the Exchange on club days.

Candidate Nichols Addresses the Scandinavian Republicans

Candidate Nichols addressed the members of the Scandinavian Republican club last evening in Wilson hall, and set forth a number of questions which he stated he would like answered by Mayor Shea.

The meeting was opened by the chairman Charles Ericson who introduced as the first speaker Representative-elect Langelier, who spoke at some length concerning the campaign being waged.

Mr. Nichols then addressed the meeting and was followed by Edward J. Sandberg, William Gellotte, J. M. Nowland, Oscar Frisk and others.

Mr. Nichols repeated again his questions to Mayor Shea relative to completitive bids for paving Brook street; intimated that second-hand pavings were used; suggested that there was collision between the Old Colony street railway and the Mayor; asked why a certain head of department O. K. his own bills; referred to the Lincoln school addition, and also to the abatement of taxes.

The club voted to support the Republican ticket from top to bottom, as Mr. Sandberg put it. The meeting then adjourned.

A BRAINTREE MAN'S PART.

The telephone of today owes its existence and success to the genius of one of Braintree's well known townsmen, Thomas A. Watson.

Four men met in Washington in the early seventies, from whose efforts the telephone originated. They were, Professor Alexander Graham Bell, Gardiner G. Hubbard, (his father-in-law) Thomas Sanders, and Thomas A. Watson. The force of circumstances drew the four together and it was circumstance merely that was responsible for the invention of the telephone. Professor Bell had none of the commercial genius of an Edison; he was a college instructor and at that particular time was trying to invent a device which would help people of impaired hearing. He stumbled on the idea of the telephone. He talked it over with his father-in-law, and the two told Sanders about it.

Gardiner G. Hubbard had a good deal of the promoter in his make-up, but his capital was limited and Professor Bell had none of his own. Sanders was a man with some little property and Hubbard talked him into a realization of the possibilities of the invention. The three men, however, found themselves badly handicapped through the lack of a mechanician. Sanders and Hubbard knew nothing of mechanics and to Professor Bell the saying might be applied that his "fingers were all thumbs." He could see how a thing ought to be done, but could not do it himself so there was added Thomas A. Watson and in Watson the trio of originators found a fourth partner who was worthy of their company. Watson, indeed, was a mechanical genius and it was largely through his ingenuity that the mechanical details of the first telephone instruments were perfected, which allowed the device to have at once a commercial value.—Harry A. Bullock in Boston Transcript.

MAYOR AT HOUGHS NECK

Several Republican Candidates Also Speak

More fun than two goats was the nonpartisan rally held at Houghs Neck last night under the auspices of the Houghs Neck Associates at Pandora hall. The hall was well filled and the air was plum full of hot shot, several of the speakers sticking out straight from the shoulder. Archie Baird presided, and aside from those who spoke, were several candidates in the audience who said nothing.

Among the speakers were E. W. Branch and Charles E. Cherrington, candidates for Councilmen at large, John R. Richards, candidate for the Council from Ward Three, Joseph L. Whiton, Jr., from Ward One, John D. Smith from Ward Four and Mayor Shea.

Mayor Shea was of course the speaker all wanted to hear and he was followed closely. He took the opportunity to answer some of the charges against his administration that had been made at Republican rallies.

Mayor Shea said in part:

"My opponent seems to be laboring under a serious mis-apprehension as to the facts concerning the Hancock street and Brook road paving job. The facts concerning that work are as follows:

"Sealed proposals were advertised on August 17, 1909, in the Quincy Ledger and Quincy Telegram for paving blocks for Hancock street. The proposal stated that all bids should be accompanied by a certified check for $300.

"In accordance with the notice, bids were publicly opened in the office of the Commissioner of Public Works at City Hall at 10 o'clock A. M. Saturday, Aug. 21 1909, in the presence of Calvin G. Fletcher and Hugh Gilmartin, two of the bidders, and two other persons.

"Three sealed bids were received from the following parties:

"Hugh Gilmartin of 25 Walnut street, Atlantic; $44.40 per M. A certified check of $300 was enclosed with the bid.

"Falconer & Co., 199 Water street, Quincy, $45 per M. A certified check of $300 accompanied this bid.

"Calvin G. Fletcher, 73 Garfield street Quincy, $46 per M. Mr. Fletcher did not comply with the conditions of the proposal, as his bid was not accompanied by a certified check.

"Hugh Gilmartin, being the lowest bidder and a responsible party and having complied with all the terms of the proposal was awarded the contract.

"The contract between the city and Mr. Gilmartin was executed August 31, 1909. A bond for $1500 in favor of the city was filed at the same time.

"All these facts appear of record in the files of the Commisioner's office in City Hall."

"An appropriation was passed by the City Council for paving Brook road, October 18, 1909, and approved October 21, 1909. After this had been approved the Commissioner interviewed me and stated that if he would be obliged to delay paving Brook road until he had advertised the contract it would mean a delay of at least two weeks, and it would be impossible to get the work started before the middle of November; too late to insure its completion this season. He urged me to allow him to make an arrangement with Mr. Gilmartin for the delivery by him of sufficient paving stone for that work under his Hancock street paving contract, at the same price.

"In view of the fact that Mr. Gilmartin was the lowest bidder, the Commissioner believed that if he could be prevailed upon to enter into such an arrangement it would be for the best interests of the city. I realized that the work should be done on Brook road this fall and as the Commissioner suggested the only way that seemed possible to have the work done I consented to the arrangement, and accordingly an extension of the Hancock street contract was made with Mr. Gilmartin at the same price of $44.40 per M. and he furnished the city with an additional bond of $1500. The agreement and bond are on file in City Hall. The Brook road job has since been completed.

"In pursuing the course that I did in reference to this work I believe that I have complied with the law and the city ordinances governing such matters and acted for the city's best interest.

"Gentlemen, would you have had me act differently under the circumstances?

"Perhaps it would be well for me at this time to tell you about the contract to lay the paving on Hancock street. The city sent letters to three responsible contractors asking for estimates for laying the paving on Hancock street according to specifications on file at City Hall.

"The letters were sent to John Cashman of West Quincy Coughlin & Shields, 47 Tremont street Boston, and Simpson Bros., Corp., 116 Devonshire street, Boston. Estimates were received as follows:

Coughlin & Shield 25 cts. per sq. yard.

Simpson Bros. Corp., 25 1-2 cts. per sq yard.

"The contract was awarded to Messrs. Coughlin & Shields and is on file in City Hall.

"I have been criticized on account of the appropriations made for repairs on our streets and sidewalks. I offer no apologies for signing these orders. In my inaugural address I advocated keeping our streets and sidewalks in good condition. I believe that the money spent for good roads and good dry sidewalks is well expended.

"No city that aims to be progressive and wishes to attract to it a desirable class or residents can afford to neglect its streets and sidewalks. Every dollar that has been spent for such purpose has been well and economically expended and I challenge any man to show where one dollar of the city's money has been wasted.

"Our citizens are entitled to as good streets and sidewalks as we can afford and so long as I am Mayor I shall do all in my power to see that they have them.

"I notice that Mr. Nichols thinks the law as to metering the city has not been complied with. I advise him to acquaint himself with the facts and thereby avoid making thoughtless and groundless assertions.

"The Act of 1907 provides that all services installed after Dec. 31, 1907 shall be equipped with water meters and also 5 per cent of the services which were unmetered on Dec. 31, 1907.

"The total number of unmetered permanent services Dec. 31, 1907 was 3920.

"Number of meters set on these services since that date 407, which is about ten per cent.

The city has therefore during the two years this law has been in force installed the required per cent of meters.

The total number of services put in at houses to be occupied all the year since Dec. 31, 1907, 383.

"Number of meters set on these services 108.

There are 150 meters on hand which will be set before Jan. 1 1910, making a total number set on new services 258. Of the balance of 125 new services, many of the houses are not yet completed or occupied. Perhaps Mr. Nichols got confused from the fact that while in past years there has been a special appropriation for meters, this year there has been no specific appropriation for that purpose. $40,000 was appropriated for water construction with the understanding that a portion of it should be applied for installation of meters and meters installed have been paid for out of that appropriation.

"Attention has been called to the condition of the Lincoln schoolhouse and a certain candidate for re-election to the City Council seems to think that there are defects of construction in this addition. Mr. Nichols does not seem to know whether the councilman is correct in his statements but suggests all that was needed was to see the addition to see if it was a very good job.

"I agree most heartily with the gentleman, and in order that the public may have an opportunity of judging for themselves, the Lincoln school will be open for public inspection from 9 A. M. to 4 P. M. today.

"This addition consisted of four rooms and the administration was given $12,000 for the work. We finished the building within the appropriation the average cost per room being $3 000, which is quite a contrast to the rate of $5,000 and $6,000 per room that has been paid for the building of some previous schoolhouses. I know of no school which has been built at such a low figure and I know it will compare favorably with any school building in the city.

"While I am speaking about schoolhouses let me say a word about the Wollaston schoolhouse. This building is from thirty to thirty-five years old, and additions have been made to it from time to time. Sometime ago I called the Commissioner's attention to the building and he made such repairs in it as he felt its condition justified. The plumbing in this building is in poor condition. The Commissioner estimates it will take at least $5,000 to put in proper sanitary plumbing and put it in a proper state of repair.

"I seriously doubt the wisdom of expending this amount of money on such an old building. The people of Wollaston have been very patient and I believe it advisable to consider whether it would not be wiser for the city to erect a new building than expend a large sum of money on the old one.

"When one considers the publicity that is given to the enforcement of the liquor laws through the columns of the daily press, and the further fact that the court records are open to the inspection of any one who cares to examine them, it is amusing to hear speakers for political effect deliberately misrepresent and distort the facts as to the enforcement of the liquor laws.

"Let me give you the facts on the extent to which these laws have been enforced this year and please remember that there are still several weeks left in this year.

"The records of raids and convictions so far this year exceeds the records of last year. The record of this year equals that of the year 1907 when the laws were vigorously enforced. We have done all the enforcement this year with the regular appropriation alloted to the Police department and have not spent any money for so-called "spotter" evidence.

"So far this year there have been twenty-one liquor cases before the court, three cases for disorderly houses, the proprietors of which have been sent out of the city, and one gambling house case. Of the twenty-one liquor cases, fourteen were convicted in the lower court and two in the upper court, while two remain to be tried in the Superior court. In the cases of disorderly and gambling houses fines were imposed in the lower court and paid.

"My attention has been called to an article in a recent issue of a local paper concerning the grade crossing matter entitled "Depression vs. Chinese Wall."

"City Solicitor McAnarney and Professor Breed are still actively pushing the city's plans for a depression of the tracks of the railroad company at both the Water and Saville street crossings and it would be unfair as well as very poor taste for the citizens to undertake to anticipate the nature of the Commissioners' findings. We want the tracks depressed a reasonable and proper amount so as to afford an overhead bridge at each crossing with suitable grades.

"Let the citizens rest assured their case is in safe and competent hands. Their cause will not be neglected.

"In administering the affairs of the city I have been governed solely by what I considered to be my duty to all its citizens. I have not countenanced extravagance in any of the departments. I have honestly tried to combine efficiency with economy in the conduct of its affairs.

"I have retained no man in office where so doing would impair the public service and on the other hand without fear of successful contradiction I declare no man has been removed from office except for incompetency or the good of the service.

"I trust my fellow citizens will not forget that it is easy to make pretentious charges against any man holding a public office. It is easy to misjudge him and misconstrue his motives. The merit of any charge must always be tested by an analysis of the proof offered to support the same. Accusation is not proof.

"I am but human, I may have erred, but let he who claims that I have not been faithful to my oath of office prove his case."

MOTHERS' ASSOCIATION.

The Mothers' Association met in Bethany chapel Wednesday afternoon. Mrs. W. H. Doble the president after words of welcome, gave some helpful Christmas thoughts. After the usual business, Mrs. Charles W. Miller gave a most excellent report of the fall rally of the International Union Maternal Association, which was held in Ruggles Street Baptist church, Roxbury.

The devotional exercises were led by Mrs. A. G. Coffin, who took for her subject "Love." She spoke of the helpfulness of little acts of kindness if prompted by the right impulse.

Mrs. H. W. Tirrell, the soloist of the afternoon, sang as a devotional song. "Thou givest light in darkness." Words adapted to a song by Chadwick.

Miss Edith Randall was the speaker of the afternoon. She gave a most charming "Travel talk on Holland," which was much enjoyed by one of the largest audiences of the season.

At the close Mrs. Tirrell delighted all by singing "Songs my mother taught me" by Dvorak, and "Titania's Cradle "by Liza Lehman.

Mrs. S. E. Ames served refreshments during the social hour.

DEATH OF OLD RESIDENT.

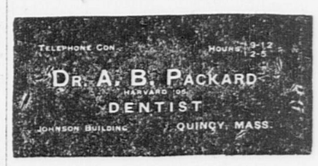
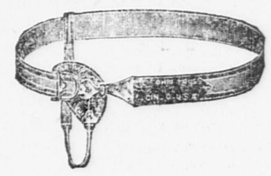
Mrs. Susan H. Clapp of Mount Vernon avenue, Braintree, passed away at her home last Sunday in her eightieth year. Mrs. Clapp was the wife of Mr. Charles W. Clapp one of Braintree's prominent citizens and had resided here for many years. Her maiden name was Susan H. Emerson and she was born in Bridgton, Maine, but came to Boston in early life and lived there until she married Mr. Clapp, Dec. 16, 1857. The wedding ceremony was performed by Rev. William R. Alger who at that time was pastor of the Bulfinch Street church, Boston.



Mr. and Mrs. Clapp were a living contradiction of the statement so often made that marriage is a failure for they lived happily together their long wedded life of fifty-two years and two years ago on Dec. 16, celebrated their golden wedding. She is survived by her husband and two sons. One of the latter, W. S. Clapp is interested in mining in the far west and the other son, Charles H. Clapp ,is the purchasing agent of the Sagamore car building company and lives at Hyannis.



The funeral services were held Tuesday afternoon at 2.30 at Mrs. Clapp's home and the officiating clergyman was the Rev. Mr. Ellsworth of Quincy, formerly of Braintree. Mrs. Clapp had a wide circle of friends who manifested their love by a most lavish tribute of beautiful floral pieces.

Mr. Clapp has made no plans for the future and will continue on at his present home for a time at least.

INSPECTION AND ELECTION

Sons of Veterans Reelect Commander Phillips

Friday night was a gala night for the members of Col. Abner B. Packard camp, Sons of Veterans, when the election of officers was held and the camp held its annual inspection.

There was a large number of the members present and a goodly delegation of the Grand Army Veterans and visitors from the Braintree, Milton and Bath camps.

The camp was inspected by Division Inspector J. T. Wellington of Norwood, who expressed himself as very well pleased at the fine showing made by the camp, and declared that it would be reported as among the best camps in the State.

The initiatory work was performed by the officers in a most satisfactory manner, the short form being exemplified and showed careful study on the part of Commander George F. Phillips and his efficient staff of officers.

The following officers were elected:

Commander—George F. Phillips.

Senior Vice Commander—Frank H. Stoddard.

Junior Vice Commander—Edward M. Graham.

Secretary—Harry G. Ford.

Treasurer— C. F. Strattard.

Camp Council—A. L. Whitman, Parker Souther and W. R. Parker.

Delegates to the Division Encampment—C. F. Strattard and Harry E. D. Gould.

Alternates to the Division Encampment—A. L. Whitman and R. G. Merritt.

After the business meeting the members and guests enjoyed an oyster supper.

—A Faulty system of taxation which is not elastic enough to meet the strain of unforeseen demands, has its social dangers. The present constitutional crisis in England would not have occurred but for the struggle to shift the strain of a revenue deficit from the ordinances of Parliament to the very Constitution itself, on which it should never exert any pressure. A parallel situation might arise in this country, were some unexpected contingency to necessitate the raising of a large federal revenue from unconstitutional taxes, by methods which should precipitate a conflict of social classes or a fierce dispute regarding state rights. An ideal constitution is elastic to a degree, but also firmly resilient enough to resist meddlings that spell disaster.—Brookline Chronicle.

MAYOR SHEA REPLIES

To Questions Asked by His Rival Last Night

Mayor Shea gives out the following interview in answer to Candidate Nichols at Wilson's hall last night:

Mr. Nichols stated at a recent meeting of his friends that he wished to propound some questions to me. I am very glad that he did so as it will afford me an opportunity to give information upon each of these matters. IaIssume that Mr. Nichols when he went to the trouble of having these questions typewritten has stated his strongest and most serious objections to my re-election.

1st, he wants to know with reference to the Brook road contract. I dealt with that matter in my speech at a Houghs Neck rally last night, and anyone interested in learning the facts concerning the Brook road paving contract will easily find the same in the report of the rally. The contract was let to Hugh Gilmartin, 25 Walnut street, Atlantic at a price of $44.40 per M. Briefly stated it is as follows:

"My opponent seems to be laboring under a serious misapprehension as to the facts concerning the Hancock street and Brook road paving job. The facts concerning that work are as follows:

Sealed proposals were advertised on August 17, 1909, in the Quincy Ledger and Quincy Telegram for paving blocks for Hancock street. The proposal stated that all bids should be accompanied by a certified check for $300. In accordance with the notice, bids were publicly opened in the office of the Commissioner of Public Works at City Hall at 10 o'clock A. M., Saturday, August 21, 1909, in the presence of Calvin G. Fletcher and Hugh Gilmartin, two of the bidders, and two other persons. Three sealed bids were received from the following parties: Hugh Gilmartin of 25 Walnut street, Atlantic, $44.40 per M. A certified check of $300 was enclosed with the bid. Falconer & Co., 199 Water street, Quincy, $45 per M. A certified check of $300 accompanied this bid. Calvin G. Fletcher 73 Garfield street, Quincy, $46 per M. Mr. Fletcher did not comply with the condition of the proposal as his bid was not accompanied by a certified check.

Hugh Gilmartin, being the lowest bidder and a responsible party and having complied with all the terms of the proposal, was awarded the contract. The contract between the city and Mr. Gilmartin was executed August 31 1909. A bond for $1,500 in favor of the city was filed at the same time. All these facts appear of record in the files of the Commissioner's office in City Hall.

An appropriation was passed by the City Council for paving Brook road, October 18, 1909, and approved October 20, 1909. After this had been approved the Commissioner interviewed me and stated that if he would be obliged to delay paving Brook road until he advertised the contract, it would mean a delay of at least two weeks, and it would be impossible to get the work started before the middle of November, too late to insure its completion this season. He urged me to allow him to extend the contract with Mr. Gilmartin for the delivery by him of sufficient paving stone for that work under his Hancock street paving contract, at the same price.

In view of the fact that Mr. Gilmartin was the lowest bidder, the Commissioner believed that if he could be prevailed upon to enter into such an arrangement it would be for the best interest of the city. I realized that the work should be done on Brook road this fall and as the Commissioner suggested the only way that seemed possible to have the work done, I consented to the arrangement and accordingly an extension of the Hancock street contract was made with Mr. Gilmartin at the same price of $44.40 per M, and he furnished the city with an additional bond of $1,500. The agreement and bond are on file in City Hall. The Brook road job has since been completed. In pursuing the course that I did in reference to this work I believe that I have complied with the law and the city ordinances governing such matters and acted for the city's best interest.

2—It is an absolute fact that no second hand paving were laid either in Hancock street or Brook road. I think I know what Mr. Nichols has reference to and can easily show him where he has been misled. It is a fact that at one time the contractor started to deliver Cape Ann blocks on the job. These blocks were weather stained but not second hand. The delivery of such blocks was stopped because we insisted on Quincy blocks being used.

4 and 5—Mr. Nichols wishes to know whether I have been selling paving blocks to the Street Railway Company, at Taunton, Fall River and other places outside of Quincy, and whether I furnished stone for the company for the Farrington street paving job without competition. It is a well known fact that for the past 20 years I have been selling paving stones. During that time I have sold to many of the cities and towns and street railroad corporations in Massachusetts, but in every instance, including the Farrington street job, bids were made in competition with other dealers. The people of Quincy have known my position on the trolley freight ever since the matter has been before the public. Mr. Nichol's insinuation that my attitude in this matter influenced the railway into giving me any contracts is too ridiculous and contemptible to be dignified by any further answer.

I might add that I received fully as many orders for paving stone before the trolley freight matter ever came up as I have since.

5—Is it a fact that heads of department are doing work and approving his own bills? Answer: No.

6—Was the contract for permanent sidewalks advertised; if not, why not?

This contract was not advertised. The Commissioner of Public Works solicited and received competitive bids from concerns in this line of business, and the contract was placed in our opinion to the best interest of the city.

7—Did the architect for the Lincoln school receive compensation for supervision and then do no supervising? Answer: No.

8.—State the amount of taxes abated the last two years and reasons for making the same and a comparison with abatement ofr the two previous years.

During the years 1906 and 1907 taxes were abated to the amount of $19,280.90.

During the two years that I have been Mayor 1908-1909 tazxes have been abated to the amount of $12,-828.83. In view of the fact that the figures were accessible to Mr. Nichols I do not understand why he asked the information. The reason of these taxes being abated was that in the opinion of the Assessors it was fair, equitable and the duty of the City to make said abatements.

HOME ENDORSEMENT

Hundreds of Quincy Citizens Can Tell You All About It.

Home endorsement the public expression of Quincy people, should be evidence beyond dispute for every Quincy reader. Surely the experience of friends and neighbors, cheerfully given by them, will carry more weight than the utterances of strangers residing in faraway places. Read the following:

W. Charlesworth, 23 Cranch street, Quincy, Mass., says: "About five years ago I began to suffer from kidney trouble. I had pains in my back which were very severe at times and cold or damp weather aggravated my suffering. I knew that my kidneys were at fault and used everything I could think of in an effort to obtain relief but to no avail. Seeing Doan's Kidney Pills highly advertised, I finally decided to give them a trial and I procured a supply at the Cox Drug Store. Before I had taken the contents of two boxes, the backache was a thing of the past and I felt better in every way. Doan's Kidney Pills have my highest endorsement."

QUESTIONS FOR MAYOR

G. B. Bates Writes an Open Letter

Hon. William T. Shea, Mayor of Quincy:

My dear sir:—

Again the voters of Quincy are approaching another City election, with an opportunity of exercising that great prerogative, that priceless privilege, the right of suffrage, to elect their city guardians for the ensuing year. In behalf of those voters I wish to have a confidential heart to heart talk with you in the open and ask you some question upon the issues of this campaign, so that there will be no misunderstanding between you and I, and the Voters; so that they can act intelligently, and wisely in the selection of their next Mayor.

The voters are becoming like the gentleman from Missouri who must be shown; who wanted to know. Whether they want Mayor Shea again, who has been Mayor for two years, or whether they want the Republican candidate, Walter F. Nichols, ex-president of the City Council who has had seven years service in our city government.

By your official acts we shall judge you. One year ago I said during the grade crossing controversy that in small things you had done exceeding well. That was during your first year (of course then you was on your good behaviour.) At that time I resigned from the party that I was affiliated with and supported and voted for you, hoping that you was the man of the hour to conscientiously take up the problem; look after and fight, for the best interests of the city. (The Grade Crossing problem in particular.)

You, having been elected as a non-partisan Mayor of our city, had the grandest opportunities of any Mayor ever elected to rise up as a leader among men of affairs. Many of the citizens who voted for you last year have become dissatified, and will not vote for you this year claiming that you have not been sincere and non-partisan, preferring to play small peanut politics rather than grasping in an earnest, fearless manner, and fighting to a conclusion the great problems of our city.

I wish at this opportune time, so that you can right yourself with the voters before election day to explain to the voters of Quincy your action upon six specific matters that came under your official notice during the past year. Your constituency have the undeniable right to demand an accounting of your stewardship of the city affairs before they again cast their ballots for a chief executive for another year.

QUESTION No. 1.

Have not you posed and masqueraded as one of our leading temperance advocates from the stage in Music Hall at the No-license mass meetings to the very hill top of our granite quarries? How dare you then sign 29 express liquor licenses, after the voters and registered by one of the largest majorities for No-License, the city has ever known.

Didn't you sign 13 last year and 29 this year? How many will it be next year, if you are elected? At this ratio it means 65 licenses. Speak up Mr. Mayor. You will have a golden opportunity to set yourself right with the voters at the No-License rally Sunday evening next.

QUESTION No. 2.

Why did you, after you were instructed by a unanimous vote of the citizens in mass meeting, by the vote of many of our leading associations, organizations, Board of Trade, and your advisory board, to advocate and fight for depression of the railroad tracks as the only satisfactory solution of the grade crossing problem? Yes, why did you immediately (hardly before the echo of the voice of the city solicitor in behalf of depression had died away) proceed to devise and procure plans of a conglomorate combination between a Jacob's ladder, a merrygoround and a toboggan slide a veritable Chinese wall, a plan that the city had protested against? And have you made the commission accept it?

QUESTION No. 3.

You removed a member of your official family, a Republican Assessor, J. W. Pratt, for political reasons. An honest, upright, conscientious, competent and qualified person, a credit to this community, having done as much as any living man in beautifying and upbuilding of our city. Yes he got the ax. Why did you not remove another member of your official family for the good of the service, who fell by the wayside, rather than keep, condone and cover official unrighteousness; nauseating the atmosphere of City Hall, discrediting your administration and everlasting shame on our city? Speak up Mr. Mayor, you have the floor .

QUESTION No. 4.

Don't you know, Mr. Mayor, it was recently said that civic righteous was fast asleep? "True enough." But don't you know that official unrighteousness is wide awake, and very much alive, preying and feeding on, practicing deceit, plundering and profitting from the taxpayers and the workers; having as it were hypnotized and paralyzed civic righteousness to such an extent that society is becoming indifferent, irreverent and helpless to the welfare of civic betterment?

The citizens of a community invariably look for example to the leaders of society and to the officials of that community. The standards recognized the world over, are adduced from the representative leaders and officials of that community. Pray tell us then, Mr. Mayor, where there exists official unrighteousness in any community, how can you ever expect to realize civic righteousness. And the remedy is, that society must have leaders and officials who will not condone or cover unrighteousness, but by precept and example stand above suspicion. When we have official righteousness then and not until then can we expect civic righteousness.

QUESTION No. 5.

Discrimination and unfair methods are used in the letting of city work, and contracts, at City Hall, I know of a responsible licensed concern, who bid on a certain contract and was the lowest bidder; but was unable (through ways that were dark and tricks that were vain) to receive the contract. I know of another concern, who has been in business in Quincy over 20 years, who has paid into the city treasury, during your two years in office, nearly $3000 for taxes, yet was not able to receive one dollar's worth of work, and there were thousands of dollars worth in that concern's line being done by the city. Is this what you call a square deal Mr. Mayor?

QUESTION No. 6.

Why has unmitigated extravagance been allowed to run riot without stint or hindrance during the past year. There have been far too many special appropriations that were unnecessary and uncalled for, at this time. You were elected as the check-valve in the spending and wasting of the taxpayer's money. You have seen fit not to check it, but further burden and oppress the taxpayers who can ill afford just at this time when the cost of living is so high and many of the taxpayers condition precarious.

Now, Mr. Mayor, too many cheap politicians hold that it is legitimate fruit of the victory to make money out of the public treasury. The city of Quincy spends many thousands of dollars in one way and another during the year without fair competitive bidding. This condition opens a wide wide opportunity for graft as it is so easy to favor one dealer against another. So simple to reward one's friends and punish foes. This temptation, some men will not resist. With a large patronage under the control of a few men who are not directly responsible to the people the danger is grave. Hundreds of men may be subsidized or coerced; political debts may be paid, and favors distributed among political heelers through the control of such patronage. This fact alone is deplorable but the loss to the taxpayers may be approximated in dollars and cents.

I will not believe that the voters can (knowingly,) supinely approve of immorality, autocracy, extravagance and hypocrisy.

Yours for official and civic righteousness,

G. B. Bates.

NATHALIE WALES CHRISTENED.

Nathalie, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Nathaniel B. Wales, was christened Sunday, at Trinity church, Boston, by her grandfather, Rev. William Russell Scarritt, who came from Georgia for the service, and Dean Hodges of Cambridge who officiated at the wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Wales a year ago last June, and the Rev. Reuben Kidner, assistant minister at Trinity. The godparents are Mrs. Henry Russell, Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Satterlee of New York, Miss Elizabeth Harris, daughter of Judge Robert Harris of Bridgewater and William Russell Scarritt, Jr., a brother of Mrs. Wales. The baby wore a gown of embroidered linen that had been in her mother's family for 300 years.

Mr. and Mrs. Wales gave a small reception after the ceremony to the relatives and intimate friends, at their home on Bay State road, Boston.

The Joke on the Jockey.

A few years ago a famous jockey was engaged to ride the favorite in an important race. On the way to the post he found himself cantering alongside a rank outsider, the mount of a stable boy who had only just commenced riding.

"You'll have to be careful with that brute, B.," he remarked. "I've ridden him before, and you'll never be able to hold him."

B. thanked the crack for the hint and said that he would "do his best."

Halfway through the race the outsider and another were in front, with the favorite close behind. Fancying that the others were in difficulties, the rider of the favorite shouted:

"Pull out, B., and let me through! I've got the race in hand."

The crack was mistaken, however. Looking back, the stable boy replied, with a grin:

"I would, but I can't hold him!"

With which the novice let his horse have his head and shot away, the easiest of winners, to the chagrin of the crack, who finished second.

Happiness and Joy.

Happiness, according to the original use of the term, is that which happens or comes to one by a hap—that is, by an outward befalling or favorable condition. It is what money yields or will buy—dress, equipage, fashion, luxuries of the table—or it is settlement in life, independence, love, applause, admiration, honor, glory, or the more conventional and public benefits of rank, political standing, victory, power—all these stir a delight in the soul, which is not of the soul or its quality, but from without; hence they are looked upon as happening to the soul and, in that sense, create happiness. Joy differs from this as being of the soul itself, originating in its quality. And this appears in the original form of the word, which instead of suggesting a hap literally denotes a leap or spring. * * * The motion is outward and not toward, as we conceive it to be in happiness. It is not the bliss of condition, but of character.—Dr. Horace Bushnell.

Concealed Weapons.

Once in a college town the rumor that students were carrying concealed weapons reached the ears of the local police. The chief at once issued stringent orders that the heinous practice should be stopped. One day a group of them passed a policeman, and one of the students in so doing put his hand to his hip pocket. Then, as if recollecting himself in time, he hastily withdrew it and looked sheepishly at the policeman.

"What have you in that pocket?" the latter asked sternly.

Instead of answering, the student and all his companions, as if panic stricken, started to run. After a chase all the students were cornered and ordered to deliver up whatever they had in their hip pockets.

Meekly they obeyed. Each one carried a corncob. The remarks of the policemen cannot possibly be recorded.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Making History.

When Kinglake was writing his history of the Crimean war he received letters from all sorts of people concerned in the war. One day a letter with a deep black border came from two people in the colonies, husband and wife, describing their grief. Their only child had been killed in the Crimea. They wanted to have him mentioned in the "History of the Crimean War." Kinglake was touched and replied by post that he would do his best if they would send him the necessary particulars. Again a letter, also black bordered, full of thanks, but with the following conclusion: "We have no particulars whatever to give you. He was killed on the spot, like many others, but anything you may kindly invent will be welcome. We leave it entirely to your imagination."—London Chronicle.

Saturate yourself with the philosophy of optimism. It softens the kicks and takes the jar off the bumps.—Detroit Free Press.

Wherein They Were Alike.

A country minister who in Scotland was notoriously defective and hesitating in his style of delivery in the pulpit was sitting having a cup of tea with one of the old spinsters connected with his congregation when he observed that the spout of the teapot was either choked or too narrow.

"Your teapot, Miss Kennedy," he remarked, "disna—disna rin weel."

"Aye, jist like yoursel', Mr. Broon," retorted the nettled lady. "It has an unco puir delivery."

CHAPTER IX.

HAGGLETON TAKES COMMAND.

MORAN jeered at Haggleton when he announced his determination to throw up the job. The millionaire, however, had selected Sunday morning to make an announcement of importance.

"You asked me that first night," he said to Moran, "if I was going to show you how to run these bakeshops, and I told you that I was. Well, I am going to do it. Listen, all of you. I am going to take you in with me."

"Not me," said Gentle.

"I am going to listen to what he has to say," was Philip's answer.

Haggleton saw that he had won a victory—he had succeeded in interesting Philip.

"If you're not in a hurry, Moran," he remarked as they finished breakfast, "I'd like to ask some questions. Does your boss make much out of his business?"

Moran shook his head. "When he's paid rent and wages there's just enough left to take care of his family—in a tenement."

"What's the rent of that basement?"

"Thirty dollars."

"Suppose I offered him the basement rent free and guaranteed as much business as he does now. Do you think he'd go into a scheme I've got?"

"Ye-es."

"Well, there's money in these bakeshops—money for all of us. What kind of a man is your boss anyway?"

"Italian—once a ragpicker."

"H'm! Can he be manager?"

"He can if he wants to," growled Moran, "but you've got to show him first."

"I'll show him right."

"Huh!" grunted Moran. "What do you know about running a bakeshop?"

Haggleton smiled. "What do you pay for flour?" he asked.

"Six or seven dollars a barrel."

"Whom do you buy it from?"

"Jobbers."

Haggleton looked at him steadily, his eyes showing half pity, half contempt. "No wonder you people are poor! You—you don't know any more about business than children in the street."

Haggleton asked more questions, going into details of the breadmaking industry, wages, methods of work, cost of equipment, etc., moving rapidly from point to point, until presently he came upon one fact of master importance—that there was a machine for kneading dough, a machine run by electricity which would do the work of six men and turn out better bread than could be made by hand.

"Ah," exclaimed the old man, "now we're getting at it! I'd like to see that machine."

"You'll have to go uptown to a big bakeshop."

"None down here?"

Moran scowled. "A machine like that costs $650."

Haggleton looked pleased. "Good! Now, how many bakeshops are there near yours, say within two or three blocks?"

"Eleven."

"That's enough. We'll make a combination with six or eight; we'll sell them flour for less than they pay the jobbers and"—

"How will you do that?" interrupted Gentle.

"We'll get it by the carload direct from the mills. Then we'll have one of those machines and do all the kneading for the combination. We save on wages and materials; we do a bigger business because we sell better bread, so we make money both ways."

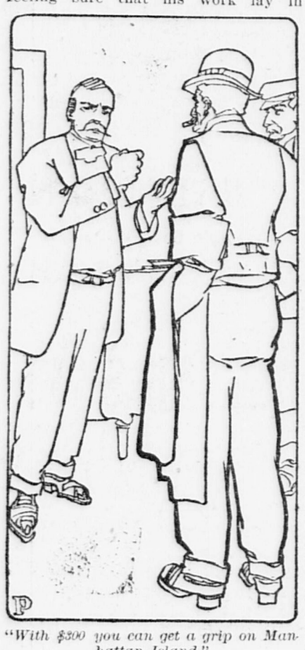
"It's a regular trust," said Gentle.

"Yes," admitted Haggleton, "it's a bakeshop trust."



"What capital have you got?" asked Philip.

"Ever hear of promoters?" asked the millionaire tersely. "Well, I am promoting this. The bakers need that machine; the manufacturer is perfectly willing to supply it on terms that guarantee him his money, even if he has to wait for it. A chattel mortgage given by the members of the trust I am about to organize will be good security unless I am much mistaken. I could use $300 to advantage right now."

"Three hundred dollars!" sniffed Moran. "What can you do with that?"

Haggleton bared his teeth like an old wolf. "With $300 you can get a grip on Manhattan Island and—never let go, if you know how."

Philip was deeply impressed. He was stimulated, yet vaguely alarmed. Haggleton was awakening in him qualities of mind and vague longings that had lain dormant thus far and that he recognized now with some uneasiness. He had sometimes wondered if he possessed business ability, but had given the matter little thought, feeling sure that his work lay in quite another field. So it was with strangely mixed motives that he exclaimed impulsively:

"With $300 you can get a grip on Manhattan Island."

"I can furnish the $300!"

Haggleton suppressed the feeling of exultation that rose within him as he recognized himself in his son. He quietly said, "That will hasten things somewhat."

In the morning Philip was to buy one of these kneading machines, paying $100 down, the balance being arranged for in successive monthly payments, secured by a chattel mortgage. He—Haggleton—would get the bakers to be jointly responsible here with them.

Then Philip must find a bakeshop with electric street connections for the machine. Did Moran know of one? Yes, in Catharine street. Good! They must get the boss there into the combination, show him all the advantages and, if necessary, give him a bonus. The kneading machine must be set up there. It wouldn't cost this man a cent, as the combination would assume all expenses.

The rest would be easy. Six other bakers must agree to buy from the combination thirty or forty barrels of flour a week, or whatever quantity they usually bought, on the express stipulation that they got it at 10 per cent off the jobber's price. And they must make themselves responsible for this amount of flour, so many carloads, by signing a joint note payable to the mill owners in thirty days.

Philip thought that the mill owners might refuse to accept such a note, but Haggleton was sure the thing could be accomplished.

"How can one machine knead the dough from half a dozen bakeshops?" reflected Philip.

"That's easy," said Haggleton; "we'll have a horse and truck."

"What—to carry the machine?"

"No, to carry the dough. Each baker will mix his own flour in his own sponging trough, and then we'll put the troughs on a truck and haul them to the place where we run the machine. When the flour is kneaded we'll haul them back."

"How long will the kneading take?" questioned Philip.

"Ten minutes for one batch of loaves," answered Moran—"say 700 pounds of dough. That's with the machine. It would take a man an hour."

"You see what we save," remarked Haggleton.

"Are these troughs on wheels?" pursued Philip.

"Sure," said Moran.

"Allowing half an hour for each batch," calculated Haggleton—"I mean for kneading and hauling both ways—that gives us twenty-four batches in twelve hours—say 4,000 loaves. That's 8,000 pounds of flour, four tons a day, or twenty-eight tons a week for the combination. There's a nice profit in that when you get it by the carload."

"It sounds good," mused Philip, "but are you sure of enough bakeshops for the combination?"

"We'll have six before the week's out—that is, if you fix it so that we're trusted for flour by the carload. You'd better get busy."

Philip turned in surprise.

"That's right," said Haggleton. "We look to you to get us flour direct from the mills. We're going to cut out the jobber's profit."

"And you're going to risk all in this scheme?"

"What are we risking?" answered the old man. "Flour has a permanent value, and so has a kneading machine."

"Suppose these bakers refuse to join your combination?"

"Refuse? Does a man refuse good money if you offer it to him? Why, within ten days all the little bakers around here will be offering premiums for a chance to come in with us."

Meanwhile Haggleton had not forgotten that other boast of his that he would make the neglected Moran home as clean and orderly as a New England farmhouse.

How Moody Got Out of It.

Many were the interesting experiences belonging to the first Northfield conference called by D. L. Moody. One especially showed Mr. Moody himself in his varying phases. It was the conversation hour at noon, and about 100 men were sitting under the tent on Round Top.

Mr. Moody, leaning sturdily against the tent pole, led the meeting. Suddenly there came from him the plump question, "Brethren, how many of you have so grown in grace that you can bear to have your faults told?"

Many hands went up. Quick as a flash, but neither sharply nor insultingly, Mr. Moody turned to a young minister and said:

"Brother, you have spoken thirteen times in twelve days here and perhaps shut out twelve other good men from speaking."

It was true. The young man had been presuming and officious. He had held up his hand, but he could not bear to be chidden, and now he stoutly defended himself, only making matters worse. Then another minister broke forth and berated Mr. Moody for his bluntness. The latter blushed, but listened until the reproof was done. Then he suggestively covered his face and spoke through his fingers, "Brethren, I admit the fault my friend charges me with; but, brethren, I did not hold up my hand!"

World's Largest Barometer.

The biggest barometer in the world is in the city of Faenza, Italy. It is a monument to Torricelli, inventor of the barometer, who was born in that city 300 years ago. The scale of this barometer is on a basis of feet where the ordinary barometer is measured in inches. The liquid column is thirty-seven feet high at normal. It was intended to use a thirty-two foot column of water, but this was abandoned because water evaporated too quickly. Then glycerin was tried, but with this liquid the normal height was only twenty-seven feet, which was not enough. Olive oil was chosen finally. The tube rests against a monumental pillar of stone. Olive oil is the lightest liquid yet used for a barometer. When a lighter one is made available a taller barometer may be constructed. Pascal made barometers of water and wine mixed. Zophar Mills of New York made a glycerin barometer, and Jaubert set up one of water in the famous Tour St. Jacques, the weather bureau center of Paris.—Detroit Free Press.

Don't Abbreviate States.

"Your letter to Napoleon village went wrong, eh?" said the postmaster. "Well, it's your own fault. You should have written out the name of the state in full."

"Ah, what for?" snarled the complainant. "I put 'Tenn.' on the envelope. That couldn't be confused with any other state name."

"How about 'Penn.?'" said the postmaster. "Aren't 'Penn.' and 'Tenn.' a lot alike? Of course they are, and if people want their letters to go straight and prompt they ought always to write states out in full, for 'Cal.' and 'Col.' get confused continually; so do 'Nev.' and 'Neb.,' 'N. Y.' and 'N. J.,' 'Miss.' and 'Mass.' and 'Minn.,' 'Pa.' and 'Va.,' 'Me.' and 'Mo.'"—Cincinnati Enquirer.

History.

History is a running account of how King Somebody-or-other either did or did not get to a certain place, which nobody ever heard of, before King Somebody-else got there, from which we are usually supposed to conclude that it would have made quite a difference whether he did or not.

Like nearly everything else, history has two sides. The history of the garden of Eden depends upon whether it is related by a man or a woman.

The history of the American Revolution reads quite different in English books from the way it reads in our own books.

History is a bore, not only because you are unacquainted with the people who figure in it, but because it repeats itself.—Life.

A Bad Mixup.

"Say," remarked one government clerk to another, "I'm up against it good and proper."

"What's the trouble?" queried g. c. No. 2.

"I got two medical certificates from two different doctors yesterday," explained the party of the first part. "One was a certificate of health for a life insurance company, and the other was a certificate of illness to be sent to my chief with a petition for two weeks' leave of absence."

"Oh, that's nothing," rejoined his fellow clerk, "I've done that myself."

"Yes," continued the other, "but I mixed the certificates in mailing. The ill health certificate went to the insurance company and the certificate of good health went to my chief. See?"—Chicago News.

A Max O'Rell Story.

Before he attained fame with his various books M. Blouet (Max O'Rell), who was for several years French master at St. Paul's school, related how he obtained his post there. After two or three earlier applicants had returned unsuccessful from their interview with Dr. Walker, who was at the time headmaster of the school, M. Blouet's turn came.

"I want," said the doctor after a few words, "a French master who can preserve discipline. My last was a perfect gentleman and a good fellow, but he could not keep the classes in order. The end of it was that after being much worried by one of the boys the poor fellow went home and shot himself."

"Sir," replied Max O'Rell, "that is where my countryman made a little mistake. I should have shot the boy."

The doctor rose, says M. Blouet, and grasped my hand.

"M. Blouet," he exclaimed, "you are my French master!"—London Captain

Tips Costlier Than Treats.

They were going out of the Waldorf when he saw her look so longingly in at the big, beautiful roomful of white tables laden with roses that he said, "Will you go in and have a cup of tea or something?"

She assented willingly.

"Your hat and overcoat, sir," said the waiter firmly. "You are not allowed to sit in here with your overcoat on."

"But," objected he, "I shall stay only a few minutes."

"No matter, sir," said the waiter and took his hat and overcoat with an air of determination and disappeared.

"That's the third time," sighed he, "that I have started to go home, met somebody and parted from my hat and coat to treat them. If it happens again the tips to the waiters for keeping my hat and coat will amount to more than the sum I have paid for the treats."—New York Press.

Taken Unawares.

Sir William Grantham was engaged as a political speaker in the days before he took his place on the bench and when he was plain Mr. Grantham. On one occasion, while he was delivering an address, a man got up in the audience and shouted out excitedly, "It's a lie!" "Thanks," said the future judge. "It's a lie!" shouted the excited one again. "You're a gentleman," said Mr. Grantham sarcastically. "It's a lie!" burst out his opponent again, carried away by his wrath, but the general laughter which arose at his answer recalled him to himself again, and he sat down discomfited.—London M. A. P.

To the Point.

A little boy hurriedly entered a drug store and asked the clerk for a bottle of liniment and a bottle of china cement.

"Why," said the clerk, "that's a funny combination. What do you want with those things?"

"Ma hit dad with a teacup and broke it!" exclaimed the boy.

Knocking Hubby.

"My husband thinks he is very economical," said the blue eyed woman. "He saves everything. One drawer of his desk is devoted to time tables, and he has some that are three years old."—Exchange.

BRAINTREE

St. Mary's Guild will meet at 2.30 P. M. Dec. 8 at the home of Mrs. Stark 198 River street.

Mr. J. H. Kirby, Sr., of School street is soon to leave for Roseland, New Jersey, to spend the winter with his daughter Mrs. W. J. Chubbuck.

At the Men's club of All Souls church next Wednesday evening the speakers will be Charles A. Andrews "corporations" and Grosvenor Calkins, "British Budget."

Miss Nellie Belyea of Mt. Vernon avenue has returned from a seven weeks vacation at St. Johns, N. B., and is back at the store of A. W. Cass. She had a much desired rest and gained ten pounds to her weight.

Dr. Joseph Twadelle of Livermore Falls, Maine, has been a guest at the home of Mr. F. Edgar Norris, Elm street.

Mrs. James Glover, Mrs. Abbie C. Howes and Mrs. M. E. Gillette all of Middle street, quietly celebrated their birthday on Tuesday and were all remembered with gifts.

The members of the Matrons' whist club were entertained Monday evening by Mrs. L. H. Tirrell of Washington street. Mrs. F. W. Brett made the highest score.

Doris Hubbard of Stedman avenue, celebrated her 12th birthday Tuesday by inviting a few of her friends to visit her between the hours of four and seven. The favored ones were Pauline McGrath, Elizabeth Mitchell, Eva Piercy, Lillian Heinlein, and Clara Oschats. The children had a fine time playing games. and all enjoyed the refreshments served by Mrs. Hubbard. Conspicuous among the good things to eat was a handsome birthday cake. Doris received several pleasant mementoes of the occasion.

Mrs. Lucinda Thayer of Union street received a letter last week from Mrs. Lucretia Thayer of Montello, saying she was glad to see the piece a few weeks ago in the "Braintree Observer" telling of her birthday party, she had not heard from her for years and was glad to hear that she was active and well. Mrs. Lucinda Thayer remembers of going to Sunday school with her when a girl at the South Congregational church and was glad to receive the kindly letter from her.

The monthly supper and sociable of the social club of the Union Congregational church was held Wednesday evening 116 attending. After supper there was an entertainment which included selections by two young lady readers from the Curry School of Expression, Boston, violin solos by Chas. E. Leavitt with Miss Martha Loud accompanist. Selections by male quartet composed of Messrs. Roger Loud, Edwin Senior, Ralph Loud and E. L. Murphy with Miss Anna Cady accompanist, also selections by a double quartet which was made up of the members of the male quartet and Mrs. Preston Joy, Misses Martha and Helen Loud, and Miss Grace Crane.

Rev. Granville Yager, who has almost reached his seventieth birthday preached for the Winslow Congregational church in Boston Sunday before last, and last Sunday for the Congregational church in New Braintree, Worcester county. Mr. Yager has not had an unoccupied Sunday either during October or November, and has been busy during a large proportion of the Sabbaths since he returned to Braintree more than a year ago. During the last two months he has travelled more than a thousand miles to meet engagements. Mr. Yager's residence is at the corner of Lowell and Park streets, where he says, he keeps his house by the side of the road as old Homer sang, to "be a friend to man."

FORTY-FIVE-ROUND FIGHT ON JULY 4

Jeffries and Johnson Sign New Articles For Big Mill

New York, Dec. 4.—Jack Johnson and Jim Jeffries, at Meyers hotel, Hoboken, signed new articles for their championship fight. With the principals, their managers, Sam Berger and George Little, and the promoters, Tex Rickard and Jack Gleason, present, the details of the big go—all except the referee—were gone over, attorneys drawing up the articles.

The date of the boat was positively settled as July 4, but just where it will be held is still unknown. It is thought that the go will be held at Coffroth's arena, at Colma, Calif.

The articles call for the men to begin training ninety days before the day of the contest and both agree to take part in no other fight until they enter the ring to battle for the championship.

Sixty days before the date of the contest the fighters are to agree upon a referee. If they fail to do so they must each name two men and from this quartet the promoters will pick one man.

Forty-five rounds was agreed upon as the distance of the fight. Straight Marquis of Queensberry rules will govern and the winner is to take 75 percent of the purse.

DEDICATORY SERVICES AT LUTHERAN CHURCH

Rev. Dr. Fritch of Brooklyn Officiates and Other Clergymen Assist.

On Sunday the Swedish Lutheran church celebrated with elaborate exercises the 20th aaniversary of the founding of the church. A large number wended their way to "the church on the rocks" during the day and at every service the body of the church was filled to overflowing. Among the speakers were some of the most prominent of New England's Lutheran ministers and several who have served the church in previous years. Rev. C. F. Johanson, who thirty-five years ago delivered the first Swedish sermon ever preached in Quincy was one of the honored guests.

The morning services were conducted by Rev. Mr. Johanson, now of Boston, who gave an able and interesting address, taking as his subject "The coming of Christ." He was assisted by Rev. A. M. Heranius who spoke for the benefit of the younger people on the "Great Festival in Heaven."

At 3 o'clock in the afternoon the largest number gathered for the dedicatory service. They were in charge of Rev. S. N. Elvin, pastor of the church and the ceremonies were conducted by Rev. Dr. Fritch Jacobson of Brooklyn, N. Y. Following the dedication service Dr. Jacobson delivered an address, his subject being, "The influence of the Christian church on the community" Miss Bertha Carlson contributed several solos and there were selections by the organist on the new pipe organ.

Rev. Dr. Johanson then spoke in a congratulatory vein on the work accomplished by the church, and following him August Viden recited a history of the church through its twenty years of struggle and service.

At 7.30 P. M. a communion service was conducted by the Rev. Dr. Jacobson, assisted by Rev. John A. Bernhardt of New York. This finished the day's ceremonies which had been most successful and also closed the four days' celebration in honor of the twenty years of existence, and of the many late improvements in the church. These include a pipe organ, $800 of which was presented by Andrew Carnegie, and the balance by the young people of the church; a handsome altar painting presented by Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Johnson of Gothland street, and several decorations of the interior of the church made possible by several of its members.

The church as it stands now on those mighty rocks on Granite street, over-looking its large field of activity, is an imposing structure without and a handsome scene within, a source of pride and glory to those who for twenty years past have worked long and hard for its perfection. It stands today, granite upon granite, one of Quincy's finest features.

FIRST CHURCH.

The Young People's Religious Union of First church held their regular meeting in the chapel Sunday evening with a good attendance of members. After the opening exercises, Mrs. N. S. Hunting sang a solo which was very much enjoyed. Herman Peters of the Harvard Divinity school was then introduced, having for his subject "Frederick Robertson." Mr. Peters first briefly sketched his early life, mentioning the military atmosphere of his home and the piety, his early characteristics and finally his college life and education. The speaker then took Robertson's character and most interestingly and clearly analyzed it. In turn he told of his bravery, at times it might be termed rashness; his faithfulness, his truth, his powers of hatred, his strength of convictions, his eloquence, his poetic nature, even though he could not write poetry, his religion, and his boundless sympathy. Mr. Peter's talk was very scholarly and interesting and much appreciated by the union.

—Hot rooms produce muddled heads. Over in New York the temperature in public schoolrooms is to be kept at 68 degrees ,two degrees below the standard, to see if the pupils will have clearer heads. It is an old comment that Americans are seriously troubled by ice water and overheated apartments.—Boston Record.

NUMEROUS QUESTIONS

Fired at Mayor Shea by G. B. Bates

Hon. William T. Shea,

....Mayor Quincy:.. .... .. .....

As long as you could not answer my six questions published last Friday, I will ask you a few questions mostly about your own home ward, Ward Four.

Is it not a fact that Mr. Shields of Caughlin & Shields, to whom you awarded the contract for laying paving on Hancock street and Brook road, is the same Mr. Shields who was the purchasing agent for the city of Boston, and from whom you received large contracts for paving, the price on which was $70 per thousand for which you paid $30 per thousand ?

Mr. Mayor, kindly explain to the voters of Ward Four, why the work on Bates avenue was not done properly, or only partly done with crushed stone and all of the $2500 appropriated was not used there ?

Why was the money appropriated for Bates avenue used to repair Grove street from Bryant avenue to the railroad track, also on Willard street from Rogers to Crescent street ?

Did William F. Loud & Son furnish the sand for Brooks road cheaper than it could be hauled from the city sand-pits, to save money for the tax payer ? If not, state the reasons.

Do you not know that your ward is composed in a great measure of people who earn the money to pay their taxes by hard labor and have a right to receive just treatment at your hands, or have you hobnobbed with the opulent so much that you forget ?

Is it not a fact that you sent your stone crusher gang to work on your contract in Dorchester under the foremanship of Mr. Pierre Kelly, who has charge of the crusher ? Did the tax payers pay for this?

Is it not a fact that this foreman, Mr. Kelly, took Saturday afternoons off during the last summer to attend ball games, leaving the men without a foreman ? Was he paid for this time ?

Is it not a fact that you had the contract for blasting out the rock when the water was being extended to the Lottie Crabtree estate at Squantum and did you use city employees to do this work ? If so, who paid them ? You or the taxpayers ?

Explain to the people of Ward Two the great efforts you have expended in bringing the Bents Creek matter before the Land and Harbor Commission as directed sometime ago by the City Council.

Why was Mr. George Williams, brother of Chief Williams, supervising construction of further part of concrete bridge on Bates avenue ? Did Chief Williams have the contract for this work ? Why was not George Williams down in the city stables at this time, where he is employed as stable foreman ? Who paid him for supervising the work ?

Why was not the paving used on gutter across the street near the Joyce estate as good as the paving used on Hancock street and Brook road ? Was the paving on this gutter charged up to the appropriation of Bates avenue at $9.34 or the same price as paid on Brook road.

Why were not the gutters on Bates avenue paved?

Why were not the gutters on Quarry street extension paved as order called for ?

Why did you hire a steam-roller in Mattapan to eat up this appropriation on Quarry street extension ?

Why did you not use the hired one in some other ward, and the one owned by the city, in your own ward, so that the people would get justice ?

Tell us, Mr. Mayor, why you have tried to condone the situation on the Lincoln school additions ? What position should you take ? The building shows defects. The builder admits it is not first class and still you persist on the platform and in the public press, that you are proud of the building. Are you using the taxpayers' money to condone offences against the people ? Don't your actions prove it? Give us your explanation, not a simple excuse.

Do you show any regard for your oath of office ?

Why have you been catering, all the past year, to influential supporters to the injustice of the average taxpayer, and doing all you possibly could to discount the men who are trying for fair play.

Reply to your constituents of Ward Four tonight, please.

Now, Mr. Mayor, in the roll of an African dodger, juggler, etc., in this campaign (under instructions no doubt of your ring master) you have exposed your administration as a sorry spectacle and a lamentable failure. The self-respecting voters tomorrow will declare their duty with no uncertain sound, whether they wish a continuance of existing conditions of Shea and shame or a change for Nichols and reform.

Yours for official and civic righteousness,

G. B. Bates.

NO-LICENSE POPULAR

Rousing Meetings in All Wards of City

A very enthusiastic union No-License meeting was held at Quincy Music hall Sunday evening. The Y. M. C. A. orchestra furnished good music and the selections of the Standish Male Quartet were encored. W. F. Cummings presided, and rousing addresses were made by John L. Miller, Joseph A. Sedgwick and George H. Carter. The latter compared Chelsea under License and No License. Edward Cook repeated his recitation at the Boy's prize speaking conest.

AT WOLLASTON.

At Wollaston on Sunday evening a grand No License rally was held in the Baptist church, presided over by Rev. Carl G. Horst of the Unitarian church.

The devotional exercises were conducted by Rev. Joseph Walther, pastor of the church and Rev. Wesley Wiggin of the Methodist church.

The singing of the large audience under the efficient direction of Amos D. Albee, was exceedingly strong and inspiring. Mrs. Chandler W. Smith at the organ was accompanied by an orchestra of nine pieces.

Rev. Carl G. Horst in his word of greeting was pleased to see the interest evinced in the movement by the large number present. The No-License question, said Mr. Horst, is fast becoming a business proposition and the citizens are beginning to see wherein it touches their pocketbook. "I am glad to see this," said Mr. Horst, "for when anything touches the pocket book of the average man he begins to sit up and take notice."

Convincing speeches were made by Edward Southworth of Ward One, John L. Miller of Ward Three, and Clarence A. Warren of Chelsea.

AT QUINCY POINT.

Rev. Rufus B. Tobey and Delcevare King were the speakers at the Quincy Point rally Sunday evening. Others to take part were the pastor Rev. A. R. Atwood, and Rev. Charles Marshall of Westford. Singing by O. V. Bicknell and Mrs. E. C. Page.

—Concrete barracks are being built at the U. S. naval magazine at West Hingham to accommodate forty men.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT

To Driver of Auto Truck of R. E. Foy & Co.

E. A. Messier of Pleasant street, driver of R. E. Foy & Co. automobile truck, was seriously injured this morning on Hancock street, near Merrymount park and is now at the City Hospital. The truck was on its way to Boston and Mr. Foy was on the seat with the driver when near Merrymount park the steering gear broke. Mr. Messier was thrown over the steering wheel, and the heavy truck passed over him and brought against curbing When picked up, Mr. Messier was unconscious, and Dr. Sheahan who was called ordered his removal to the City Hospital. It is feared that the man is injured internally and that an operation will be necessary.

CLOSE RANGE LABOR STUDY

King Gustav, Disguised as Laborer, Carries Coal For a Day

HE OBTAINS VALUABLE HINTS

Only the Beginning of His Plans to Learn True Condition of His Subjects by Mingling With Them and Participating In Their Labors—Aftermath of National Strike Which Lasted Several Months

Stockholm, Dec. 6.—King Gustav has inaugurated a new departure for sovereigns. Disguised as a stevedore he spent most of a day carrying sacks of coal from a lighter.

In an interview, after it was all over, the king said that this was only the beginning. He intended to mix with all classes of laborers, so that he might ascertain their opinions and wishes. Already, he added, he had obtained many valuable hints from the men with whom he worked.

KING GUSTAV

The determination of King Gustav to learn the condition of the workingmen by mingling with them and taking part in their labors has resulted from the recent stagnation of the business life of the country from a general strike. King Gustav intervened last August in an endeavor for a compromise, without avail.

The strike lasted months and involved thousands of men, the employers' association paying $40,000 daily to support its weaker members, while the trades unions and other workingmen's associations exhausted their entire funds to keep the strikers from starving.

Eventually arbitration was undertaken by the Swedish government to settle the dispute, and in the interim many of the workmen returned to their tasks, although the number of unemployed remained very great.

King Gustav, the queen and other members of the royal family, as well as the cabinet ministers, contributed to a national fund which was raised by subscription to provide loans to the working classes.

Homesteads have already been apportioned among the unemployed, but conditions remained such as to cause the king and his government grave anxiety. The king found difficulty in ascertaining the facts, and during the past week or two he has arranged to join various craftsmen and laborers at their work in such a guise that they cannot recognize him.

CULBERSON IS SICK

Intends to Resign Chairmanship of the Democratic Caucus

Washington, Dec. 6.—At the first conference of the Democratic members of the senate Senator Culberson will submit his resignation as chairman of the Democratic caucus. He has given notice to that effect.

This determination by the Texan has been reached because of his serious illness, which will probably prevent his attending the sessions of the senate for at least two or three weeks.

Senator Culberson succeeded Senator Blackburn as chairman of the caucus two years ago. In discussing his probable successor several senators expressed the opinion that Senator Money would be chosen.

FOUR YEARS FOR BIGAMY

Bank President Claims That His Accuser Is Wife of His Brother

Bainbridge, Ga., Dec. 6.—A. D. Oliver, ex-president of the bank of Climax, Climax, Ga., was found guilty of bigamy and sentenced by Judge Clark of the superior court to serve four years in the penitentiary.

Oliver maintains that he has a twin brother, and that wife No. 1, who testified against him, is the wife of his brother.

Trains Blocked by Freight Wreck

Portland, Me., Dec. 6.—A freight wreck occurred at Mechanic Falls Sunday, blocking the main line of the Grand Trunk and the passenger trains were not running again until this morning. A broken flnage was the cause of the mixup and eight cars loaded with grain left the track.

LEGATION SECRETARIES

President Orders Examination of All Applicants For Positions

Washington, Dec. 6.—To improve the personnel and efficiency of the diplomatic service and to encourage secretaries of legations to qualify for promition to the rank of ministers, President Taft has approved a plan suggested by Secretary Knox and published it as an executive order.

The new project provides for a board of examiners to pass upon all applicants for appointments as secretaries, and prescribes the standard to be maintained. The examining board, to consist of the assistant secretary of state and other officials, will determine the fitness of candidates designated by the president for examination.

The examinations will be held at Washington and will be both oral and written. Candidates must be between the ages of 21 and 50 years. From the successful candidates an appointive list will be prepared and from this the candidates will be chosen.

TO GIVE WIRELESS TEST

Scout Cruiser Salem Starts From Boston on Four Months' Cruise

Boston, Dec. 6.—The scout cruiser Salem left the navy yard yesterday for one of the most extensive wireless tests ever conducted. The present plans call for a trip of four months, comprising many thousands of miles, and upon the tests depend whether the other ships of the navy will be equipped with the particular kind of wireless used.

The specifications for this test require that messages be sent and received for at least 1000 miles under all conditions and sent and received for 3000 miles under favorable conditions. Nothing that the navy department can think of will be omitted to make the test supreme. The messages will be sent in fair weather and foul, in tropical storms and Arctic calm, in rain and fog, by day or by night.

CASHIER IS GONE, BANK LOSES MONEY

New Haven Institution Is Out More Than $25,000

New Haven, Dec. 6.—Announcement was made of the purchase of the controlling interest of the People's Bank and Trust company by Joseph E. Hubinger, a starch manufacturer and owner of trotting horses.

Following this announcement was the admission by the officers of the bank that Robert D. Muir, late cashier of the bank, is missing, and that his accounts are much more than $25,000 short. The surpuls of the bank has been wiped out, but it is understood that Hubinger and his friends have made good the loss.

Muir came to New Haven when the People's Bank and Trust company was started six years ago, from Port Jervis, N. Y. It is understood that he used the bank's money to speculate with. The officials of the bank have not been able to locate Muir.

TO SUE FOR WAGES

Member of Shaker Community Says Life Was Near White Slavery

Pittsfield, Mass., Dec. 6.—Otto Thummell, a member of the Shaker community at New Lebanon, has asked District Attorney Chase to make an investigation of the conditions which prevail in the "second family."

Thummell asserts that as a member of the Shaker community his life has meant little more than white slavery. He has been starved and denied of his constitutional rights.

Against the community will also be brought a suit by Thummell to recover $1500 for an alleged breach of contract. For work he has performed for the Shaker community since last March he alleges he has received but 50 cents in payment.

CENTURY-OLD TAPESTRIES

Nine Million Dollars' Worth Soon to Be Landed In United States

New York, Dec. 6.—Unitl the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill became a law, it was never guessed that so many tapestries more than 100 years old existed in the whole world.

The appraiser of this port now has information that tapestries valued at $9,000,000, and each accompanied by an affidavit that it was woven a century or more ago, are on shipboard bound for this country, or in storage abroad, awaiting shipment.

Ready For Gaynor Shakeup

New York, Dec. 6.—Preparatory to the general shakeup which Mayor-elect Gaynor is likely to give the city departments, hundreds of employes have begun to busy themselves with packing up. Signs of this process are visible in practically all the city offices.

The Weather

Almanac, Tuesday, Dec. 7.
Sun rises—7; sets—4:12.
Moon rises—1:41 a. m.
High water—7:15 a. m.; 7:45 p. m.
Forecast for New England: Much colder, with snow in north, rain in southeast and generally fair in southwest portion; variable winds, shifting to southwest and becoming brisk.

MEMORY OF DEAD IS RESPECTED

Sixty-First Congress Convenes, but Adjourns In Short Order

HOUSE WILL BE VERY BUSY

Parleys Over Prospective Legislation In Full Swing—Flood of Bills Ready to Be Launched—No Pending Controversies Over Treaties—President Makes Changes In Message and MacVeagh Discovers Errors

Washington, Dec. 6.—The first regular session of the Sixty-First congress convened at noon today. Following custom, both houses speedily adjourned out of respect to the memory of those members who have died during recess of congress. One senator and two representatives have died since Aug. 5 last, the date on which the special tariff session of this congress ended.

Senator Johnson of North Dakota died several weeks ago, and his successor already has been chosen. Fountain L. Thompson, the new senator, is a Democrat, although his predecessor was a Republican. Thompson was appointed by North Dakota's new Democratic governor to fill out Johnson's unexpired term, which ends Jan. 1, 1911.

The deceased representatives are David A. De Armond of the sixth Missouri district, who met a tragic death in a fire which destroyed his home at Butler, Mo., only a few days ago, and Francis R. Lassiter of the fourth Virginia district. Successors have not yet been elected in either district.

Vice President Sherman presided in the senate and Speaker Cannon wielder the gavel in the house.

Ordinarily Speaker Cannon and Senator Aldrich, who speaks for the majority of the senate, have a program at the beginning of a session, but this year they have none; or, if they have one, they are not talking about it. They are waiting upon the president.

By common consent, apparently, all are holding back until the presidential recommendations can be received, as they will be on Tuesday in Mr. Taft's first annual message.

Tomorrow is likely to be devoted in both houses to reading of President Taft's first annual message to congress, and after that the lawmakers should be able to get down to business immediately, as all the committee appointments and other details of organization already have been completed.

Parleys over prospective legislation are in full swing, but beyond what the president has decided upon there is little of a decisive nature. The leaders on Capitol hill are waiting for the text of the president's message before committing themselves to any definite program.

There will be a tremendous outpouring of bills this week. Many have come to town with particular panaceas for the ills of the body politic and will take the earliest opportunity to introduce these measures for the purpose of getting on record and gaining whatever credit may accrue.

A number of westerners are clamoring for local attention with resolutions for investigating the sugar trust, Secretary Ballinger, and the like. These efforts are not to be taken seriously just yet. Many of them will die a-borning unless there is a failure of early session history to repeat itself.

President Taft will continue his political and legislative conferences and while the senate and house wait for the committees to prepare work for consideration, the winter's program will take on some definite shape.

Apparently the senate has less to do in the interim before the holidays and before the house disposes of some of the appropriation bills than for a number of years. There are no pending controversies over treaties, debate on which often fills in the time prior to the holiday recess.

Strenuous work has been necessary to get the annual message into the shape the president desires, and on Saturday he decided upon several changes in the text. These were understood to be of considerable importance. The president went over the text again Sunday to ascertain whether he wished to make any further modifications.

Secretary of the Treasury MacVeagh also had a hard time with his annual book of estimates, which the law requires to be handed to congress the first day of the session. At the very last moment it was discovered that important corrections must be made. This was due to an error of large figures in the estimates of one of the departments.

Noted Hotel Man Dead

Boston, Dec. 6.—Charles A. Jones, proprietor of the American house and one of Boston's well-known hotel men, died as the result of an operation. He was born in Boston in 1846.

AN EASY AND HARMLESS WAY TO DARKEN THE HAIR.

Who does not know of the value of sage and sulphur for keeping the hair dark, soft, glossy and in good condition? As a matter of fact, sulphur is a natural element of hair, and a deficiency of it in the hair is held by many scalp specialists to be connected with loss of color and vitality of the hair. Unquestionably, there is no better remedy for hair and scalp troubles, especially premature grayness, than sage and sulphur, if properly prepared. The Wyeth Chemical Company, 74 Cortlandt St., New York City, put up an ideal preparation of this kind, called Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur. It is sold by all leading druggists for 50c. and $1.00 a bottle, or is sent direct by the manufacturers upon receipt of price.

BRIEFS

Miss Louise Burleigh of Braintree was in the cast "Eighty cent gas" presented by the Idle Club at Radcliffe college Dec. 3.

Leo P. Noonan of Quincy is on the committee of Juniors of Boston College for the annual banquet at Riverbank Court Dec. 16, also in the cast for the Christmas play of Julius Caesar.

Members and friends of the Quincy Day Nursery association are anticipating a pleasant afternoon at their meeting Tuesday at the clubhouse of the Quincy Women's club when Mrs. Harriet Minot Laughlin president of the Dover Street Day Nursery in Boston will speak. She is also president of the State Conference of Day Nurseries and a member of the National Conference and will present much of interest to the Quincy workers.

PROVISION SHOWER.

An occasion of special interest has been planned by Bethany Circle for next Wednesday afternoon from three to five at Bethany chapel, at which time every one interested in the success of the Day Nursery is invited to come with a donation of provisions, and stay for a social hour and cup of tea. Every donation will be welcome, no matter how small it may be, and larger ones will also be gratefully accepted.

All who are familiar with the purchase of supplies know that living expenses are annually increasing and this opportunity is given the friends of the nursery to help in a small way to lighten the burden of expense.

Eighteen little children sit down to dinner at a time and although the menu is very simple, yet the matron studies to have it a nutritious one. One of the most luxurious dinners consists of beef stew, bread and baked apples. Every day the matron makes four large loaves of bread which means that a bag of flour lasts but a short time, and it requires 2 bushels of potatoes a month to meet the demand. If a generous friend would donate a barrel of flour or a barrel of potatoes as a Christmas offering he would help the Association to give the children proper nourishment. Surely there is no greater charity than to help the widows and orphans. Over twenty mothers a month are able to go out to work and support the little ones now that there is a place to leave them through the day, and it is the priviledge of the matron to teach the mothers how to care for their children ,to keep them clean and strong in order to prevent the terrible disease tuberculosis, which enters so many of the crowded houses in that district. Come to the "Provision Shower" and bring something for the helpless little children. If you cannot come, or your donations are too large to bring, they may be sent with the name and address of the donor to the Quincy Day Nursery, Garfield street, and such donations will be promptly acknowledged.

During the afternoon of the "Provision Shower" at Bethany chapel the matron will be present to accept and record donations, and later the president will report on all received.

Through the kindness of the Overseer of the Poor one of the turkeys from the Johnson fund found its way to the Day Nursery and this with vegetables from the Unitarian Sunday school gave fourteen happy children a wonderful feast, such a feast as they had never sat down to in their lives; to quote the matron "There was nothing left of the bird, they polished the bones."

—The first annual convention of the New York State Waterways Association was held Dec. 1. A resolution was adopted favoring a division of federal appropriations for river and harbor improvements among states in proportion to the expenditure of each for such improvements.

GAVE WIFE $30,000

Doctor Paid It to Have Silence Preserved In a Divorce Suit

Pittsburg, Dec. 6.—The granting of an absolute divorce to Mrs. Mary H. Dickson from her husband, Dr. Joseph Z. Dickson, caused a ripple of excitement when it became known and the fact was also brought out that the physician paid his wife $30,000 to procure the divorce from him quietly without making use of any of the sensational facts which she gleaned recently in preparing to file her suit for divorce.

It is admitted that Mrs. Dickson exacted from her husband a solemn promise that, on his being released from his marriage vows with her, he would at once marry the nurse, Jessie Ray, who had parted them. On the promise of both to marry, Mrs. Dickson withdrew her criminal charges against the nurse.

Miss Ray about one year ago became a mother and Dr. Dickson has admitted publicly that he is the father of the child.

MARINES TRANSFERRED

Attempts to Float Stranded Troopship Have Resulted In Failure

Philadelphia, Dec. 6.—Despairing of quickly freeing the auxiliary cruiser Prairie from the mud flats at Pea Patch island in the Delaware river, where she has stuck fast since last Thursday, the government had the marines and stores aboard the stranded cruiser removed to the auxiliary cruiser Dixie. It is probable that the latter vessel will get under way today and proceed to Colon.

Two more vain attempts were made Sunday to free the Prairie. Lighters had removed more than 800 tons of coal and all of the 80,000 rounds of ammunition when half a dozen tugs strained and pulled in an effort to get the Prairie into deep water at high tide. The warship did not budge and when the tide began to recede the work of removing the 800 marines to the Dixie was begun.

SWEPT THROUGH A PUBLIC ROAD

Ashes of Americans Defiled by Zelaya's Troops

New Orleans, Dec. 6.—Confirmation of the cremation of the bodies of the two Americans, Groce and Cannon, by President Zelaya's forces was received here in private letters to Nicaraguan families residing in this city.

The letters say the executions took place on the banks of the San Juan river, the bodies being burned, and it is claimed some of the soldiers spat on them, saying words of contempt for the "dirty American traitors."

It is claimed someone ordered that the ashes be swept along the public road with the dust and other filth and finally into the San Juan river. This was considered the greatest indignity which could be heaped upon the Americans, and, according to the letters, it was done in the vilest manner.

MORE EVICTIONS COMING

Agent of Ludlow Associates Gives Due Warning to Strikers

Ludlow, Mass., Dec. 6.—"There will probably be more evictions some time this week. There are about 200 more that will have to move out of the company's houses."

These statements were made last night by Sidney Stevens, agent of the Ludlow associates, who is in charge of the mills.

"Approximately 100 men arrived in Ludlow Saturday night to work in the mills," he added, "and we expect more this week to fill the places of the strikers. The company is willing to take back any of the strikers who wish to come, but it must be at the reduced rate of wages."

KIMONO CAUGHT FIRE

Patient In a Boston Hopsital Receives Burns From Which She Dies

Boston, Dec. 6.—Miss Mary T. Larkin, 32 years old, a patient at St. Luke's Home for Convalescents in Roxbury, was so badly burned in that institution when her kimono caught fire at an open grate that she died.

The hospital authorities and nurses at the hospital are free from any blame in connection with the burns which caused the woman's death, as she declared before she lapsed into unconsciousness that she herself was wholly to blame for the accident.

Stricken Soon After Promotion

Boston, Dec. 6.—Within a few hours of his promotion from court bailiff to deputy marshal in the office of United States Marshal Murchie, Benjamin A. Touret, aged 60, died from syncope. Touret was stricken a few minutes after he had been presented with the papers of his promotion, and it is thought that the excitement consequent to his elevation was too much for his weak heart.

Burned to Death In Shack

Lisbon Falls, Me., Dec. 6.—Parvalo Enno, 22 years old, was burned to death when a shack in which he and five other Italians employed on the construction of water works got afire.

SAY TRUTH IS YET TO COME

Hattie Le Blanc's Attorneys Expect to Secure Her Acquittal

NEWSPAPER STORIES UNTRUE

None of Those Acquainted With Story Told by Accused Girl Have Divulged Any Part of It For Publication—Confidence of Police That They Know Glover's Slayer Not Shared by Waltham People

Waltham, Mass., Dec. 6.—Nathan A. Tufts, counsel for Hattie Le Blanc, charged with killing Clarence L. Glover at the latter's laundry two weeks ago, said that the stories printed in certain papers concerning statements alleged to have been made by the girl are without any foundation in fact.

Mr. Tufts said the only persons who know the girl's story of what took place on that fateful night are her counsel, Fr. Rabel, the interpreter, and the stenographer, and as none of the people have uttered a word for publication, anything that has appeared in print was purely due to reportorial imagination.

The girl's attorney said that the greater part of the time since the girl's arrest at the home of Mrs. Lillian Glover has been devoted to securing a complete story from the girl. This has been accomplished and Tufts was confident that when the people learned the whole story a far different aspect would be placed on the tragedy.

According to the police Hattie Le Blanc killed Glover, and there appears to be no mystery connected with the the case which cannot be easily solved. The attorneys for the girl seem to feel that despite this apparent air of confidence entertained by the police that there are surprises to come in the case, even to the police.

Much valuable evidence has been gathered by the detectives employed by the defense and this with the girl's true story seems to be of sufficient strength to give the attorneys a strong feeling in their ability to secure Miss Le Blanc's acquittal.

No murder in this state in recent years has created the interest the Glover case has aroused. The extreme youth and positive ignorance as to the ways of the world of the accused, and the many peculiar circumstances connected with the case have created a feeling in the minds of the people of this city at least that all the facts in the case have not as yet been made known.

That a girl of 16 could overpower and kill a strong, husky man in the prime of life like Clarence F. Glover is one of the mysteries the people would like to have cleared up. The finding of the girl three or four days after the murder hidden in the home of the murdered man's widow and the statement made by inmates of the house that they had no knowledge of Hattie Le Blanc's presence there, is another phase which is clouding the minds of the public and makes the case a hard one to understand.

Another peculiar feature, as yet a mystery even to the police, is how, if Miss Le Blanc is guilty, did she get possession of the firearm. The police have said that this was the only unsolved problem in the case.

They have labored hard to clear up this feature to their own satisfaction, but it is just as big a mystery to the authorities as it was at the very first.

Local newspaper opinion and that of the Waltham people is that the case is far from being solved. Men high in local affairs have expressed themselves frequently and with considerable emphasis that the "third person" theory is a logical one, despite the statements of the police to the contrary. It has been stated that the police had given up all work on the case, but this is far from the truth.

The hearing on Dec. 8 will be private. It is not even possible that the true facts will be made clear to the public at this hearing, as the government is expected to put in only sufficient evidence to have the court decide there is probable cause, and the defense very likely will not expose its hand by putting in any evidence.

BONES IN BIG BOX

Supposed Parts of Human Bodies Found In Dumping Grounds

Worcester, Mass., Dec. 6.—Youngsters at play on the Maywood street dumping grounds discovered a large wooden box which contained bones said to be sections of two bodies of adult human beings.

Although the police have a theory that they came from some physician's office, they are conducting an investigation to learn whether or not a crime lurks behind this unusual find.

Little Hope For Missing Sailors

Washington, Dec. 6.—The only hope now entertained by naval officials for the five bluejackets of the U. S. S. Marietta, who were carried out to sea in the disabled whaleboat from the gunboat on Nov. 26, is that they were carried to Nicaragua, and are unable either to return by land or to communicate with their ship on account of the revolution.

MEANS BOOM FOR SACO

Transfer of Large Tracts of Land For Packing House Purposes

Saco, Me., Dec. 6.—The land purchase mystery which caused greater excitement in this city than any real estate transaction in fifty years was partially solved when it was learned that hundreds of acres of land, bought at an expense of $70,000, were deeded to the McCorkle Abattoir company of Portland.

The deeds have been recorded in Alfred. The titles of twenty parcels in Old Orchard and six in Saco were transferred from Fred C. Bradbury, purchasing agent, to the Portland company, in which it is hinted that the Swifts are interested.

It is intimated that a great beef plant will be established here. It is claimed that slaughter houses, stock yards, meant packing houses, reduction plants and other establishments for the utilization of all waste products of slaughtered animals will be erected.

SENSATIONAL ELOPEMENT

Minister's Daughter Disappears With Married Leader of Choir

Johnstown, Pa., Dec. 6.—This town has been stirred by the elopement of Miss Mabel Slagel, daughter of the town's most prominent minister, with John H. Leppert, a young married business man and head of the church choir in which Miss Slagel was leading soprano.

The young woman is the only daughter of Rev. C. D. Slagel, pastor of the Beulah United Evangelical church of Johnstown, and Leppert was considered one of the best of church workers.

Mrs. Leppert, making a quiet investigation on her own account, recently found Miss Slagel in her husband's arms in a cottage just outside the town, whereupon she used a rawhide on the pretty daughter of the minister and took her husband home with her.

ROBBERS ESCAPE IN AUTOMOBILE

Policeman Locked In Cell While Postoffice Is Rifled

Athol, Mass., Dec. 6.—The police are without a clue today to the identity or whereabouts of the seven robbers who wrecked and looted the postoffice safe of $3000 in stamps and $550 in cash after having put the night policeman in a cell in the lockup while the safe was being "cracked."

Working on the theory that the seven men fled in an automobile, the police are busy trying to trace the route of the machine through nearby towns. The robbery was just before 2 o'clock, and at 2:30 a big machine was seen going through South Athol, and was reported in North Dana before 3 o'clock. This is the only incident approaching a clue which the police have.

BOY STARTED MINE FIRE

Left Car of Hay Standing Where Lighted Torch Ignited It

Cherry, Ills., Dec. 6.—Testimony introduced at the coroner's inquest on the St. Paul mine horror tended to show that the fire was started by Mat Francisco, an inexperienced boy, who was working in the mine in alleged violation of the child labor law.

Francisco worked under Rosenjack, the cager who disappeared the day following the accident, the boy's duty being to push the empty cars from the main shaft in the second vein over to the cage running to the third vein.

He testified he had pushed the loaded car of hay that caught fire over to the elevator shaft leading to the third vein and left it standing close to the blazing torch, which ignited it. He said his superiors gave him no instructions as to what he should do with the hay.

SUFFRAGE FOR WOMEN

Preached to Strikers In Connection With Free Band Concert

New York, Dec. 6.—In order that the shirtwaist strikers might realize that she is continually mindful of their welfare, Mrs. Oliver H. P. Belmont sent the Sixty-Ninth Regiment band down to play to them Sunday in Rutgers square.

She also sent Miss Harriet M. Mills, vice president of the New York State Woman Suffrage association, to explain to them that the only way to secure ideal labor conditions was to give the ballot to women.

Retirement Rule Modified

Carlisle, Pa., Dec. 6.—The trustees of the Carnegie college retirement fund have modified the rules of the trust so that the age of retirement for instructors shall be 65 years, or after twenty-five years' teaching in college. The twenty-five year rule would have retired many men under 50 years.

Bad Weather Aids Strikers

St. Paul, Dec. 6.—Cold and snow are now delaying freight traffic on the Northern Pacific and some parts of the Great Northern railroads more than the strike of switchmen.

Taunton has succeeded after many conferences and months of hard work in coming to an agreement with the N. Y., N. H. & H. R. R., whereby they are not only to have the grade crossing abolished but are to have a new station also. This means a new railroad station and new approaches, work on which will commence in the spring. Quincy is still hopeful when others are succeeding.

City officials of Quincy, the street railway and also teamsters using the Neponcet bridge should enter a protest against the proposition of Boston to repair the present draw so that it will last for another ten years. The Quincy end is of good width and safe whereas the most important part of the whole bridge, the draw is narrow and congested for the amount of traffic over it. It is up to Boston to do its share and do it in the right way.

Virginians spent $15,000 on the recent waterways convention at Norfolk and little Rhode Island is showing her interest along the same line and is planning for a convention to be held at Providence next year. A state contribution as well as individual ones will cover the expense and give the delegates attending an opportunity to see what Rhode Island will be capable of doing with the development of state waterways projects.

The famous Hetch-Hetchy valley, next to Yosemite the most wonderful and important feature of the Yosemite National park, is again in danger of being destroyed. Year after year attacks have been made on this park under the guise of development of natural resources. At the last regular session of Congress the most determined attack of all was made by the city of San Francisco to get possession of the Hetch-Hetchy valley as a reservoir site, thus defrauding ninety millions of people for the sake of saving San Francisco dollars. As soon as this scheme became manifest, public-spirited citizens all over the country poured a storm of protest on Congress. Before the session was over, the park invaders saw that they were defeated and permitted the bill to die without bringing it to a vote, so as to be able to try again. The bill has been re-introduced and will be urged at the coming session of Congress, which convenes in December. Let all those who believe that our great national wonderlands should be preserved unmarred as places of rest and recreation for the use of all the people, now enter their protests. Ask Congress to reject this destructive bill, and also urge that the present Park laws be so amended as to put an end to all such assault on our system of National Parks.

TO REORGANIZE UNITY CLUB.

A meeting was held in the vestry of the Wollaston Unitarian church on Friday evening to see what steps should be taken toward the reorganization of the Unity club.

It was voted to hold a series of meetings ,one each month in January, February and March. These will consist of a dinner ,to be followed by a competent and interesting out of town speaker.

Rev. Carl G. Horst and Miss Theodora Luard were appointed a committee to make arrangements. The club is non-sectarian ,and all persons interested are urged to communicate with the above committee.

MILTON.

Jeremiah E. Murphy of Jamaica Plain is building a commodious house on Huntington road.

The book plate exhibition will remain at the Public library until the new year.

John Shields and George C. Haven have been drawn to serve on the jury at Dedham.

Red Cross stamps have been put on sale by the anti-tuberculosis committee of the Milton Woman's club. It is hoped every one in the town will use them freely on all their Christmas letters and packages and thereby aid in the anti-tuberculosis work.

The annual meeting of the stockholders of the Blue Hill National bank will be held Jan. 11, at three o'clock in the banking rooms.

AUTO REGISTRATION

New Numbers Necessary Before Jan. 1

Quincy owners of automobiles will be interested in the operation of the new blanks which the law now provides that they shall fill out before obtaining their new licenses. The law goes into effect the first of January, but owners of cars and other operators can now obtain from the highway commission the new blanks, and can fill them out and file them in time so that they will be all equipped with the necessary certificate license and number plates on or before the first day of January. The commission has prepared the application blanks for both registration certificates and licenses, and is having them printed. In drafting them much care has been taken to make plain the new requirements of the law, so that owners of cars and drivers will see at a glance just what is expected of them. And the commission hopes that motorists will read the applications carefully and answer all the questions accurately, so that there will be no necessity of sending them back for additional information.

As there are over 23,000 automobiles in the state and nearly 2500 motor cycles, the re-registration alone is a task of great proportions, particularly as they are all to be re-registered on the new horse-power basis, with fees graded from $5 to $25 each. But in addition to all this all the private operator's licenses that have been issued in the past six years expire on the first of January, and those who wish to continue to drive will have to renew them.

There have been issued since 1903, when the automobile law was first put on the statute book, 34,702 licenses to private operators. How many of these are on force the highway commission has no means of telling, for the licenses have been perpetual. This year 8237 licenses have been issued, and last year nearly 6000 were issued. It is fair to presume, therefore, that at least half the licenses are being used by the persons receiving them, and as all will expire the first of January the commission has a task of large proportions in re-issuing licenses alone.

Chauffeur's licenses are not affected, as they already are on an annual basis. The commission has decided that if a person has held a license at any time previous to Jan. 1, 1910, his application for a new license will be considered a renewal and the fee will be 50 cents. New licenses will cost $2 each. The licenses issued for next year will be good for one year only.

The new license application blank has 16 qestions that must be answered under oath by the applicant. They demand information as to whether the applicant desires a chauffeur's license whether he has been granted previously an operator's license in Massachusetts, in what year and its number; date of birth of applicant, color, sex, height, weight, color of hair, color of eyes; approximate number of miles he has driven, and character of motive power and types of vehicles. The applicant also requires the applicant to state whether he habitually uses intoxicating beverages to exess, and whether he has been convicted since Jan. 1, 1908, of any offence against the laws of this or any other state, or the ordinances or by laws of any city or town relating to the use of motor vehicles on the highways, and if so the nature of each offence, the court in which the conviction took place, date and penalty imposed.

Another question is whether the applicant has any mental or physical incapacity or infirmity which would in any way interfere with the proper management and control of a motor vehicle. The applicant must also state whether he is familiar with the law of the road.

The answers must be sworn to before a justice of the peace, and the applicant must also obtain the signatures of three persons over 25 years of age who will state upon their honor that they know the applicant, believe his statements in the applications, know of no physical weakness or infirmity other than as mentioned in the application, and that they believe him careful and fully competent to operate motor vehicles.

For registration purposes the highway commission has drafted a new blank containing a number of questions that must be answered under oath. While the commission reserves the right to make a special determination of the horse-power of any machine it has adopted the Association of Licensed Automobile Manufacturers' formula for the determination of power, and has included in the registration blank a table showing the horsepower of every size engine from one to six cylinder diameter multiplied by the number of cylinders and divided by 2.5.

All cars, which under this formula show a horse-power under 20, will be assessed a registration fee of $5; those of 20 horse-power and under 30 horse-power will pay $10 those of 30 horse-power and under 40 horse-power $15; those of 40 horse-power and under 50 horse-power $20, and those over 50 horse-power $25. Motor cycles will pay $2 each and commercial vehicles $5 each. Electrics probably will pay a uniform fee of $5 and steam cars will be classified at the manufacturer's rating.

The commission has dropped the terms of "private operator" and "operator for hire," and now the former is designated simply as "operator" and the latter as "chauffeur." Both must be licensed but registration of a motor cycle carries with it the right to operate that proprietors of garages and dealers who do not operate for hire need not take out chauffeur's licenses and the commission may exempt salesmen. No operator's license can be issued to any person under 16 years of age and no chauffeur's license can be issued to any person under 18 years of age.

The information required to be given on the application blank includes a question whether the applicant has transferred the ownership of any automobile which he has registered in Massachusetts during the present calendar year. This is to enable the commission to trace cars that have been sold and perhaps have not been re-registered by the new owner. The owner of a commercial vehicle is used solely for commercial purposes.

Other questions are as to the type of the machine, name of the maker, manufacturer's number and caracter of power. The applicant has also to state the manufacturer's horse-power rating, the number of cylinders, if a gasoline engine and bore of cylinders. He must also state whether the car is provided with an adequate brake or brakes, locking device, muffler, lamps, bell, horn or other devices for signalling, the predominating color of body and of running gear, whether he employes a chauffeur, and if so, the chauffeur's name, address and license number. Information is required as to whether the car is controlled by an individual, copartnership, association or corporation and if by a corporation, in what state it is incorporated.

There are some reductions in the fees which will become operative next year, but which do not affect the re-registration of machines at present. Thus a machine registered between Oct. 1 and Dec. 31 of next and following years will be assessed half fees and a machine may be registered for use from July to September for half fees. There is also a rebate in case of change in the car registered previous to Aug. 1.

In order that persons who hold low registration numbers which they have had for a series of years, and who wish to retain them, may be accommodated, the highway commission has decided to hold the first 500 sets of number plants for renewal by their present holders. These will be held until Dec. 20, and any of the plates not taken then will be distributed in order to other applicants. The holders of the first 5000 number plates will be notified of this privilege, and to retain their numbers must respond promptly with their application blanks and checks.

AT HOME.

Dr. Clayton Raymond Marstin of Braintree and Miss Vesta May Dobson of East Braintree were married Saturday, Nov. 13 and enjoyed a delightful wedding trip to Palatka, Florida, making the trip from New York by boat. They visited many points of interest in Florida and their sail on the St. Johns river will linger in their memory. They are not saying much about their rough voyage to New York. Wednesday morning of last week they arrived in Braintree and Dec. 3d gave a very pretty at-home, at 343 Washington street.

The house was brilliant with electric lights and the decorations were carnations and ferns. The happy couple were assisted in receiving by Dr. and Mrs. Chauncy M. Marstin, parents of the groom, Mr. and Mrs. George R. Dobson parents of the bride, and Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Davy of East Braintree. Mrs. Davy is a sister of the bride.

During the reception Poole's orchestra rendered selections and caterers served refreshments. In an upper room were displayed beautiful wedding gifts—gold, silver, cut glass etc.

The large house was filled with relatives and friends. There were many people present from Quincy in which city the groom is a popular dentist and where he resided, as a boy, with his parents.

The ushers were Dr. Arthur Gould, Mr. George Taylor and Mr. J. Winsor Davy.

PORTABLE CRUSHER

Councilman Richards Tells of the Cost

Editor Daily Ledger:

I noticed in an editorial column of Saturday evening, something in relation to the "Portable Stone Crusher," and no doubt the taxpayers generally would like to know more fully the facts in relation to it from an economic standpoint.

I will say the history and inception of this idea originated in a conversation I had with Mayor Shea, and we were in accord, for once, as to the merit of the machine, and having ascertained the cost, I suggested to Mr. Russell, my fellow member from Ward Three, that he introduce the order for a portable stone crusher. I then ascertained from the Commissioner of Public Works the relative difference between crushing granite as it came from granite yards and the trap rock quarrying and crushing, and when the order came up before the Council, I, in supporting the order, called on the Commissioner to give the Council an approximate cost, which he did, stating that the granite would cost 30 cents a ton and the trap rock 90 cents a ton at the crusher ready to load on the teams.

The order passed, money was appropriated and in due season the crusher arrived. The Commissioner also stated that 90 per cent crushed granite with 10 per cent top dressing of trap rock would make an excellent road material.

We have waited patiently to see the good results to the granite men from the portable crusher. At the last meeting of the granite manufacturers, having the evening open to attend. I did so. My principal object in attending was to talk and vote in favor of a donation to the Tuberculosis fund. This having been accomplished, a suggestion was offered by one of the members, and will say in this connection that this member informs me he has been a supporter of the present administration in the past, but not in the present or the future. The suggestion offered was in reference to the portable stone crusher. I had no knowledge the matter was to be considered before the suggestion was offered on the floor that evening, and I listened to the remarks all in favor of having it do the work for which it was originnally intended: viz. relieve the congestion at the stone yards and practice economy on our road building and repairing. I stated what the Commissioner had said in relation to cost, and from an economic standpoint, it was policy to have it operating.

A committee was appointed to wait on the nominees for Mayors to learn from them their position in the matter on which committee I was appointed a member. In the meantime, having been asked by a member of the press for news of a public nature, I informed him of the donation, and afterwards about the committee appointed, also that there was feeling that the granite industry had received scant courtesy according to the arguments, and quoted the figures to show that leaving the help to the granite men out of the question entirely, it was urgent from an economic standpoint that the work should be done.

The committee waited on the Mayor in his office. Acting in his official capacity he immediately entered into condemnation on my action and discredited my figures, stating they were overdrawn and being used for political purposes. I have been taught to respect the office of Mayor of our city, and sometimes, those who occupy the office. His Honor bet me a five dollar hat that I was wrong in my assertions.

A little later the Commissioner called his honor on the phone, and I requested to know how many tons of crushed granite could be put through the stone crusher from such piles as we have at the granite works, and the figures were as follows: Amount in one eight hour day, fifty tons; three men required, two at two dollars a day and one at two dollars and fifty cents a day, making the labor cost $6.50 per day; twelve gallons of paso- $6.50 per day; twelve gallons of gasoper day, making a total of $8.18 per day or a trifle over sixteen and one quarter cents per ton. It was stated also that Robertson street in West Quincy had been built entirely of crushed granite purchased at the O. T. Rogers quarry at West Quincy. Cost, 60 cents per ton at the crusher, showing it had been considered economy to the city to use this class of material on streets in our city at a cost of over forty three and one half cents per ton more than the city can do the work for.

These facts having been established I had the Commissioner admit that the figures I had originally quoted as coming from him; viz, thirty cents for crushed granite and ninety cents for crushed trap rock was correct, but his honor seems even a poor sport, for I am still wearing the same old hat.

There is one other matter in which my veracity has been questioned, and that is in relation to the Lincoln school. I noticed that on Saturday evening it was being patched up. If it was all right, why was this required?

I called at the schoolhouse on Saturday and met Mr. Crowley whose claim that a first-class job was not required does not coincide with his letter, in which he claims that the work done was of a first-class nature. He should remember that others heard what was said in relation to quality of work, and it is a mute witness in itself to anyone interested to look it over even casually. I will say here, that all I require is a square deal for the taxpayers of our city. Politics have no charms for me. I never solicited for office, or ever asked any man to vote for me, or ever received one cent out of the city treasury directly or indirectly. I have no political ambition, and I will do my duty to my city as I see it, regardless of consequences and will be ready to step down and out gladly when the people of Ward Three desire it.

Yours truly,
John R. Richards.

FUNERAL OF FRED JONES.

The sad accident by which Fred Jones, a lineman employed on the fire department wires of the city has cast a shadow of gloom over the members of the department. While not a recognized member of the department, he had so long been employed on its fire alarm wires that he was well known to every member of the department. Quiet and unassuming he went about doing his work faithfully, winning for himself many warm friends who extend their sympathy to the family in their sad hour. Funeral services were held Sunday afternoon from Hall's undertaking rooms and were of a simple nature. They were conducted by Dr. Edwin N. Hardy of the Bethany church. Several members of the fire department were present and there were several beautiful floral tributes. The burial was at Norwell today.

—Dartmouth college is to establish new entrance tests. One unit will be given for four or five periods per week work done in preparatory schools and 14 1-2 units will be necessary for admission.

MEMORIAL BY ELKS

Dr. Hardy and Joseph P. Sullivan Speak

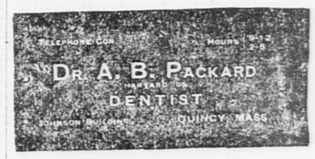
In accordance with the laws of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, Quincy lodge held its annual memorial services Sunday afternoon. The services were held at Greenleaf hall and were largely attended many ladies being present as well as members of the order. The general eulogy was by Edwin N. Hardy, Ph. D., and the eulogy of the order by Joseph P. Sullivan of Boston lodge.

Three brothers have passed away during the year, William A. McDonnell, Charles A. Mack and William J. Tilley. The lodge of sorrow was opened in due form by Exalted Ruler William J. Coleman, with William Cuff as organist. After the roll call of deceased brothers a quartett composed of Miss Helen Galvin, Miss Angela McCarthy, Dr. D. B. Reardon and D. J. Seward McCurdy sang "There is a land beyond the setting Sun."

Dr. Hardy was then introduced and spoke of the great gift every man had of shaping his own destiny. We are living in a wonderful age of our history. Is there anything in the world that can compare with the beautiful snow flakes; the telescope that brings to view the numberless stars in the heavens; the Marconi wireless telegraph; Luther Burbank the plant wizard, Wright Bros. and the new anesthetic stovene. When we read of these achievements and marvels of man we raise the question, is there anything in the world above man in his development? Wonderful as man is the most wonderful is the self directing power by which he may shape his own destiny, the peerless gift of God to man. What a glorious power that is.

The thought of the afternoon, said Dr. Hardy, is this sentiment "Sculptors of life are we, because we stand with our souls uncarved before us." We are all sculptors of life. We are all carving. The moulding of our lives. Every act and every thought is cutting its character of what you are. These societies are to bring out the ideal of what is best within us. What a matchless opportunity. They help men to realize their highest privilege. In the open Bible on the table you will find the great personality of the world. "Sculptors of life are we, because we stand with our souls uncarved before us."

Dr. Hardy's eulogy was followed by a solo "Jesus lover of my soul," by Miss Galvin.



Joseph P. Sullivan, in his eulogy, said that the order never intended this to be a day of mourning, but a day of cheerful thought, when we could recall some of the pleasant things in the lives of those who had departed. Let us reflect on the great mystery of life and that grim reaper, death who robs us of some dear friend.

Who is there among us who has not mourned the loss of some one dear to us. We doubt not that the departed have found eternal happiness with His Master in heaven. Happy is the man whose life is based on the Golden Rule, and the principles of our order—charity, justice and brotherly love. Be comforted with the thought that the loved ones are still with us. Our thought is, were we true to these friends who have left us? Did we speak the word of encouragement?

No matter how exalted or how low our station, we may speak the word that will lead to happiness. What an unexplainable thing life is. It has but one destination,—Death. We in Elkdom believe the rocks in life are more easily avoided when we travel along together as brothers. Nothing openeth the heart like a true friend. Let us so live that we may bequeath to our fellow men a clean honorable life. Let us resolve to do unto others as we would they should do unto us.

A selection by the quartette, "Not lost but gone before," was followed by the closing exercises and benediction by Dr. Hardy.

QUINGY'S NEW AMOSKEAG STEAMER.

The new steam fire engine has arrived in Quincy. It is a second size Amoskeag with a capacity of 700 gallons. The engine was built by the International Power Company of Boston and is the very latest model of the "Amoskeag" produced, having all the latest improvements and thoroughly up-to-date.

The boiler is the double butt strap, submerged flue cone top type, with seamless drawn copper tubes and contains no castings of any kind. It has a factor of safety of five in all of its joints and is built to meet the requirements of municipal state and insurance laws, and is considered the most serviceable boiler for hard fire fighting service on the market today; outside o fthe steam cylinders. No cast iron is used in the construction of the engine or boiler, bronze and forgings being used.

The pumps are the latest Amoskeag design and are made entirely of phosphor bronze. All valves in this pump are now thoroughly accessible to a positive stand-point of knowledge in their examination without taking the pump apart.

The engine has a thorough business look to it, and must inspire confidence in those who use it. Quincy is to be congratulated in having secured such a magnificent piece of fire fighting machinery.

Quincy's new steam fire engine arrived in town by freight on Saturday and that afternoon was taken to the Central fire station where she will remain until she has been tried out, to see that she complies with the contract. She will then go into commission at the Central fire station. That she will meet all requirements there is little question.

The original order for the purchase of the steamer passed the City Council March 15, the amount being $5,000. Added to this was the receipts from the sale of the old steamer. The contract price was $5,250. This price called for steel tires. It was later decided to equip the steamer with rubber tires which cost about $125, so that the steamer as she is today cost complete $5,375.

She is painted in the standard color and is a handsome piece of machinery. She was built by the Amoskeag Co., the same company that built the old steamer which did such good service for so many years. The old steamer was what is known as a third class engine while the new steamer is a second class engine.

The new steamer went into commission as soon as she arrived at the Central station, permission having been obtained from the State inspector to use her in case of fire. It is planned that she shall have her try out in the presence of the State inspector on Wednesday afternoon.

The plan now is to drive down through Hancock street to City square then back to the junction of Quincy avenue and Water street where she will be tested.

There has been talk that Councilman Joseph L. Whiton, Jr., who introduced the order in the City Council for the purchase of the new steamer should drive her down Hancock street. It is possible that he may be on the driver's seat with James O'Connell, the regular driver of the steamer on this occasion.

The steamer is equipped with three sizes of suction couplings, so that she can be used equally as well from a Boston hydrant, a town, or local hydrant.

INNIS AND JOHNSON

Win Cash Prizes at No-License Speaking

The seventh annual prize speaking contest in the cause of temperance was held Saturday night in the old temperance stronghold, Faxon hall before the largest and most orderly crowd which ever attended a prize contest. The first prize was won by Alva Innis who spoke a piece which had been written for him and did very well with it. Kenneth Johnson of East Milton, formerly of Quincy, won the second prize of $5. He is the president of the loyal Temperance Legion. The prizes of $10 and $5 gold pieces were given by Mr. and Mrs. Theophilus King.

It was in every way the most successful of any of the contests ever held in the cause of temperance and was gratifying to those who have put their time and effort toward making it an annual feature. The boys were coached by Mrs. A. Isabelle Davis and by their training and appearance it is very evident that this was the banner year. There was one feature which could it have been obliterated would have helped matters a great deal. This was the entrance of spectators at all times during the evening so that sometimes during the speaking there would be a diversion created by the inconsciously noisy entrance of some new arrival and consequently, as in the case of one boy, succeeding in getting his mind so far from his subject that he forgot his words.

The judges were Walter H. Bentley, principal of the Coddington school, Dr. C. T. Sherman, and Lester H. Clee. The prizes were awarded by Mr. Bentley and he made a very interesting address. All of those who did not receive prizes were awarded a box of candy. There were eleven boys who spoke for the prize, and three who had participated in previous years, spoke for the cause. These three were Edward Cook, Arthur Brault and Leon Brault.

Those who competed for the prize were as follows: Hollis Blake, Robert Davis, Alva Innis, Kenneth Johnson, Leslie M. McCormack, Herbert Johnson, Everett Nelson, Clifton Young, A. McFarland, William Talbot and William Cummings.

BY EMINENT DOMAIN

Will City Council Establish the Precedent?

One of the important matters to come before the City Council at its meeting tonight is the public hearing on the taking by right of eminent domain of a lot of land at Montclair bounded by Broadway, Highland avenue and Squantum street, for the erection of a school house thereon.

It is the first time in the history of the city that steps have been taken under the law authorizing cities to take land in fee by the right of eminent domain for school house purposes, and the outcome will be watched with interest.

In addition to this there will be a number of committee reports and other business.

GERMANTOWN FIRE.

The alarm from Box 15 at 5.56 Saturday night summoned the fire department to a lively blaze in the attic of the house of A. W. Finlay at Germantown. The cause of the fire is unknown and when discovered was burning briskly Mr. Finlay was on his way home when he met messengers running to the Sailors' Snug Harbor for the hose reel kept there. The neighbors manned the reel and soon had a stream of water playing on the fire from a nearby hydrant. In the meantime an alarm had been sounded from Box 15. The Houghs Neck apparatus made a quick run, as did the relief hose wagon and ladder truck from the Central station, but the fire was out when they arrived.

The volunteer department had poured gallons of water onto the blaze and drowned it out, as well as giving the house a good soaking. The loss by fire and water is estimated by Mr. Finlay to have been in the vicinity of $1,000. The Finlay's have been residents of Dorchester, but recently decided to become all-the-year residents of Germantown.

He Saved a Child and Lost His Own Worthless Life.

By EUNICE UNDERWOOD

Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.

The morning was very pleasant, but so far all the mornings had been pleasant at this delightful out of the way resort. Mrs. Bradford drew a long breath as she descended the hotel steps. Her physician had certainly been right when he recommended a change of climate. Already she began to feel the influence of the mild air and the long days spent out of doors. As she reached the sidewalk she paused with a questioning smile.

"Where to, Mildred?" she asked.

The little girl who was skipping along by her side looked up brightly.

"The plaza, of course, mamma. You can read, and I will play. This afternoon we'll go down on the beach."

The street was very quiet—an occasional dray with its load of trunks and baggage and here and there a group of pleasure seekers on their way to the plaza or the beach; overhead a few buzzards circled about, and from the direction of the plaza came a slight breeze which was laden with perfume of orange blossoms and the saltiness of the bay which glistened beyond the trees.

As they reached the corner a keen newsboy darted across the street, and his shrewd face broadened into a grin when his customer smilingly refused the change he offered.

Through the openings in the trees they could see the white sails of pleasure boats on the bay and beyond these the green shore of Promontory point. Near the extreme end of the point rose the tall white buildings of the state penitentiary. Mrs. Bradford shivered a little as she saw them. The grim buildings seemed out of place in this quiet winter resort.

It was not far to the plaza, but when they reached it they found that most of the settees were already occupied. They walked down one of the side paths and came back by the fountain. As they did so Mildred turned suddenly.

"There's a seat that's most all empty," she whispered eagerly.

It was a little off the path and half hidden by the low branches of a live oak. As they approached Mrs. Bradford noticed that its only occupant was a tall young man whose face looked strangely white and eager. He watched them curiously as they sat down, and his lips parted in a friendly smile. Then, as though conscious of impropriety, he got up and began to walk back and forth uneasily. For a time Mrs. Bradford scarcely noticed him, then something peculiar about his step caused her to raise her eyes from the book she was reading. The young man seemed to have forgotten their presence and was walking back and forth with bowed head. Every few seconds he wheeled sharply and retraced his steps.

Mrs. Bradford noticed with curious wonder that he always wheeled at exactly the same points. Then she saw that his left foot dragged behind the other as though it carried a heavy weight. At first she thought he was lame, but even while she was compassionating him he raised his head with a quick, startled movement, and for a time the lameness disappeared and the walk was extended to the end of the path.

Then his head once more sank upon his breast, the short turns were resumed, and the left foot again began its weary, dragging motion. Apparently he was conscious of his weakness, for several times she saw him recover himself impatiently and glance sharply around.

Overhead the mocking birds were calling to each other, and something in their notes seemed to arouse him from his reverie. Presently he stopped beneath the tree and glanced up with a rapt expression on his face. Mrs. Bradford saw it, and her eyes softened.

"You like the birds?" she said pleasantly.

"I—used to," he replied hesitatingly. Then, noticing the surprise in her face, he added apologetically: "I haven't seen any before for most ten years. They seem sort of strange." He stood still for a moment with the color deepening on his sallow cheeks; then he slouched forward and threw himself on the grass at the foot of the tree. Mrs. Bradford gazed at him curiously for a moment and then returned to her book.

Out in the path Mildred was playing with her ball. At length it struck a limb and bounded toward the young man. He picked it up eagerly and half rose to his feet; but, seeing the frightened look on her face, he tossed it back and resumed his slouching position on the grass.

After awhile the ball again rolled to his feet. This time he did not offer to return it. As Mildred approached he looked up, with a smile.

"The cover's coming off your ball," he said pleasantly. "If you'll let me I'll fix it. I know how."

"But mamma said I'd have to take it to a shoemaker," she answered doubtfully. "Leather's awful hard to sew."

"Not if you have things to work with," he said quietly. "See here." Taking a small package from his pocket, he opened it and showed her several curious needles and some coarse, shining thread.

"They gave them to me when I left the—the place where I learned my trade," he said in a low voice. "I don't suppose I shall ever use them. My folks will not let me do that. But I shall always keep them near me. Some time I may need advice, and this little package will be able to tell me a great many things—a great many sad things which you will never understand, little one," he added gently.

Mildred gazed at him wonderingly, but as she saw the skilled fingers draw the leather over the ball and fasten it securely in place her look of wonder changed to one of pleasure.

"I'm ever so much obliged," she said gratefully. "I'd hate awfully to lose the ball. Grandpa gave it to me." She watched him a few moments in silence, then added with a sudden burst of confidence, "Grandpa lives at our house, and we're going home soon 's it gets warm."

The young man sewed on for a few moments in silence. At last the ball was finished, and he carefully replaced the needle in his pocket.

"I'm going home, too," he said gravely as he handed her the ball. "I'm waiting for the train now."

"And have you got a mamma?" she asked, with sudden interest.

"Yes, and she has been waiting for me a long, long time. Poor little mother!" the last too low for her to hear. As the little girl was moving away he called her with a sudden gesture.

"I wish you would take this," he said earnestly as he gave her a tiny box of exquisite workmanship. "I made it from a piece of ivory which was found on a battlefield and intended to give it to my sister. You make me think of her."

"But won't she want it?" Mildred objected.

"She is dead," was the grave answer.

The little girl's face grew sympathetic.

"I'm sorry," she said gently, "and I'd like to have the box ever so much. But I must ask mamma."

Mildred ran off to her mother. The young man occasionally looked that way and saw that the child was telling her mother about him. He knew that the mother was regarding him with suspicion. For some time a dialogue that he could not hear was going on between mother and child. Mildred was evidently arguing for her new friend, and her mother was quietly opposing her. But the mother stood firm, and at last the child returned with a disappointed air.

"Mamma says I mustn't take gifts from strangers," she said regretfully, "but I'm ever so much obliged, just the same."

The sun spots moved slowly across the grass and disappeared one by one in the thicker shadows of the trees. The young man watched them listlessly. At length a clock began to strike in the distance, and he counted the strokes carefully. When it ceased he once more got up and began to walk back and forth. But now his head was erect and his left foot had lost its dragging motion and on his face was a tender, expectant smile.

Mildred had grown tired of her ball and was watching the water as it fell splashing into the broad basin of the fountain. As the young man approached she looked up timidly.

"Are you going now?" she asked.

"Not for another half hour," he replied. "I would rather wait here than down at the depot." For some moments he stood gazing at her. Evidently her face brought up some memory of the past, for he sighed as he turned away.

A little later Mrs. Bradford was aroused by excited voices. Several figures rushed past her. For a moment she gazed around wonderingly; then she rose and followed. Near the fountain was a group of excited people. In the open space beyond she recognized Mildred playing with her ball. What was the matter?

But even as she wondered came the wild rush of a pair of frightened horses into the open space. What followed happened so quickly that she could not realize it until it was over. Mildred was placed, sobbing, in her arms, and a hushed group closed about the silent figure on the ground.

"It was the bravest thing I ever saw," said one man in a low voice.

"But a sad thing for the poor chap and his people, if he had any," said another compassionately.

"What was it? What struck him?" asked one who came up and joined the crowd.

"The child was playing near the fountain. A runaway team came down the road, making for the place where the child was, all unconscious of the danger. He," pointing to the figure on the ground, "jumped in, threw her from under, and the whole thing passed over him."

"Well, he went to his last home doing a heroic act," said another. "He gave his life for a little child."

Two guards from the penitentiary came across the plaza and joined the group. A moment later one of them gave a few quick directions to a hackman who was standing near.

"It is No. 306," Mrs. Bradford heard him say. "Poor fellow! And he has only been out a few hours! I must telegraph to his folks."

Mrs. Bradford waited until she saw them place the motionless figure in the hack, then walked slowly back to the settee.

Under the live oak she saw something glisten. Picking it up, she found it was the little ivory box.

"Here, Mildred," she said in a low voice, "you may keep it."

A BOSTON GIRL'S BUDGET.

Junketing Men Have a Jolly Time—Miss Boston Has Pulled Her Great White Bedspread—Slayers of Robins Seek Summer Clime—Slow Suffragist are Boston's Male Bipeds—A Hundred Rehearsals a Night Now Going on in Culture's Citadel.

The Christmas toy display in Boston shops show marked effects of the Rooseveltian campaign in Africa. Young America may now hunt the animals of the dark continent in competition with Teddy to his heart's content.

Cigars, bouquets and all the necessary media for unalloyed pleasure and jollification accompanied the distinguished company of statesmen, merchants and leading citizens of the Hub who without their wives departed for Chicago on the Chamber of Commerce special train Wednesday, for the purpose of bringing about better business relations between the windy city and the New England industrial centres. Governor Draper and Governor Pothier of Rhode Island were, of course, the central figures of interest as the party departed, while Walter Lowney, as chief of transportation, was the "candy kid" in more senses than one. What a good time a lot of men can have on such a junket!

The American Chelsea is no longer dead or asleep. A most convincing sign of the resurrection of this ill-fated section of Greater Boston is the opening this week of two big public schools, with accommodations for about 2400 pupils. The schools, moreover, are a credit to the city to be and to the Board of Control. Scholars, parents and school and city authorities are to be congratulated on the establishment of these model buildings, in which regular school sessions will prevail from now on. The lack of school facilities has been by no means the smallest discomfiture of the unfortunate community, and with this measure of relief a sigh of thankfulness and encouragement goes up from all hands.

The robins have gone long since and now the annual exodus of the Italians, the arch enemies of the song birds, has begun. Like the feathered songsters whom they love to slay these sons of a sunny clime prefer to escape the rigors of the New England winter, though the great number are remaining in this country later than usual, because of employment given to many who hitherto have been idle at this season. Over a thousand of the well-to-do sons and daughters of Italy started back to the home country this week, and many more will follow before the Christmas holidays. The coming of spring and the robins, however, will bring them all back to work in the market gardens and on the railroads and at the other occupations which are sure to be waiting for their services.

The first shaking forth of Miss Boston's great white quilt is always an interesting event. Those residents whose business takes them into the vicinity of the educational institutions invariably find entertainment and no little enlightenment in the surprise and curiosity with which the tiny component white crystals are hailed and examined by the students from southern climes where snow is unknown. The little veil of white specks fluttering down in Copley Square one day last week aroused so much excitement among a group of students who had come from the far south to study at the School of Expression that the observer wondered what would happen if a good rousing old nor'wester should suddenly deposite a foot or two of the real plumes of old Boreas over the city and suburbs. The incident reminds the Boston girl of one heavy snow storm some years ago when a visitor from Jamaica stood at the window for over four hours, almost without moving, except to address exclamations of wonderment to those about her, as she watched what was to her the most marvellous thing she had ever seen.

Are Boston men slow? Not always, when it is a matter of coming across with the candy; but in respects which suffragists regard as essential they are conservative as compared with the men of New York, London, Chicago and a number of other cities. The recent formation of a "Voters' League for Woman Suffrage," a New York State league consisting of many of the best known men of the State, recalls the long discussed but never realized organization of a similar nature in this city. Many leading men of the Hub have expressed themselves as favoring equal suffrage, but no man or group of men has yet been found who could devote the time and energy required to perfect an organization like that in New York, like the English Men's League for Woman Suffrage, of which Israel Zangwill is a leading spirit, or the equal suffrage league of Chicago which is composed of men. One of the most interested observers of this event in New York was Mrs. Philip Snowden, the famous English suffragist and "most brilliant woman orator in England," who was active in urging the organization of British voters, and who is touring the leading cities of America at present. Mrs. Snowden is to address an audience of Boston suffragists and their friends and enemies at Tremont Temple, Dec. 14. So great is the interest centering around this fair-haired young woman of twenty-eight—whose private life is as romantic as is her sudden bursting into international fame through her public work—that Mrs. Julia Ward Howe is to make what probably will be her only public appearance this winter at the meeting at Tremont Temple. Perhaps this meeting will arouse sufficient courage among the masculine sympathizers in the Hub to bring about the much desired men's league. Ethel Angier.

NOVEMBER WAS WARM.

L. A. Wells the observer at Blue hill makes this report for November:

Unusually warm weather prevailed during November, the mean temperature of 43.2 degrees being 4.0 degrees above the normal and the highest for the month since 1902. The warmest day was the 12th when 74 degrees were recorded and this temperature is remarkable for being the highest reached in November since 1876. The minimum of the month was 20 degrees on the 19th. On 16 days the temperature rose above 50 degrees and on 11 days it fell below freezing.

The first three weeks of the month were extremely dry, but the heavy precipitation of the 24th and 25th raised the monthly total to 3.83 inches which is .04 inch less than the average amount.

There was about the usual amount of relative humidity and an excess of cloudiness and the total amount of sunshine was 9 per cent. less than the normal.

There was somewhat more wind than usual and the maximum velocity was 65 miles per hour from the northeast on the 24th. The prevailing wind direction was west. A brilliant aurora was observed on the evening of the 5th.

Jewett Pianos

Gentlemen: I am glad to say that the Jewett pianos which we are using in the Boston Opera School are proving very satisfactory.

We planned to provide the School from the outset with the best possible equipment and, in the matter of pianos, we fixed a high standard of artistic requirements. It is, therefore, gratifying to have the wisdom of our choice of the Jewett Pianos thoroughly established by the excellent qualities of tone and action which these instruments reveal it actual use in the School.

Respectfully yours

HENRY RUSSELL

Their musical superiority makes the Jewett pianos the favorite instruments among well informed people in New England. So great is their popularity that each year probably more Jewett pianos are sold in this territory than of any other make of equal grade.

The iron beds had been replaced by sleeping couches, neatly covered; the cooking stove was hidden behind a homemade screen, Joe's handiwork, and all around the room ran shelves with muslin curtains, behind which were kept the many things that formerly had littered the floor and been piled in corners, in hopeless confusion. Under one of the couches a tin bathtub was snugly put away. It was the pride of all but Moran, who looked upon it with disdain.

Brightened though her life now was in many external ways, Jenny passed her days in profound unhappiness. She loved Philip—oh, how she loved him! Yet how could a man love a girl from the Haymarket? Still, she was pretty, very pretty at her best, and, after all, Philip was a man! The taint of her past was seared in her soul. She thought that she knew men and their besetting weakness! She was pretty! she knew. But, alas, what availed her beauty if it made no appeal to Philip? Ah, that was the point! Perhaps it did appeal to him. Several times she had felt his eyes on her in a way that—well, she could not be sure; he was finer than most men.

Then there was the evening when, believing her absent, he had entered her bedroom. How he had started back in confused apology, although there was really no offense. Every one knew that there was no privacy in a tenement, so why make such a fuss over a glimpse of bare arms and shoulders?

These reflections had gradually led her to conceive a definite plan—she must talk to Philip alone, she must find some way of getting him to the flat in the afternoon when the others were away. She could never ask him herself—that would spoil everything. Joe must help her in getting him there.

This plan was busily working in her brain one morning shortly after the launching of the bakery trust as she and Joe were setting things to rights in the room and discussing Mr. Jackson's achievements.

Joe suddenly startled Jenny with a momentous announcement:

"Say, Jen, beginning today, I draw ten bones a week if I cut out pool rooms."

"How?"

"In the bakery scheme."

"The bakery scheme," repeated Jenny thoughtfully. "That's what Phil is talking about all the time now."

"Phil listens to what Mr. Jackson has to say, all right. He takes a lot of interest in him."

"Yes, he's here most of the time." Jenny looked at the diver's picture on the wall, her eyes widening a little.

"You remember what I told you, Joe?"

"About Phil? Sure. Little Jenny wants him all to herself. And if she can't have him for herself then the trained nurse lady that took away our dear little star boarders to the hospital had better look out for herself.

"I will tell you one thing," he observed. "If I was Miss Margaret you'd not see me driving below Twenty-third street. No, ma'am. I'd make brother cough up. He's got nothing but money, or his wife has."

"How do you know that she has a rich brother?"

"Why, you know it too."

"I do not!"

"Why, Jenny, weren't you nurse for his kid?"

"Good God!"

Jenny stared at him with startled eyes, then shifted her gaze beyond him. She began to walk up and down restlessly, gesticulating, muttering to herself.

"What's the matter?"

"Oh, nothing, nothing! You say Miss Margaret is the sister of Howard Lawrence, up in Sixty-third street?"

"Yes."

Suddenly Jenny stopped. She had reached a decision. The time had come to put her stratagem into execution.

"Well, what about Lawrence?" asked Joe.

"Oh, nothing. I thought it strange that—that his sister should be here—among us. That's all."

"Is it?" thought Joe. "Not by a long shot. You can't fool me."

"What time is it?"

"Half past 10."

"Listen, Joe," pleaded Jenny. "You said that you would help me. Now you must. I want to be alone with Philip. I have an idea."

"I will help you."

"I want you to write Phil a note," explained Jenny feverishly. "Tell him that you are in great trouble and must see him at once here. And tell him to come alone—do you understand, alone?"

Poor Jenny's thoughts flew back to her bitterly won knowledge of the old life she had left for Philip's sake. She was beautiful; she knew it! He should know it too. Her beauty and this strange discovery which she had suddenly made concerning Margaret Lawrence's relationship—she held two cards now. She would play them!

Joe read her thoughts fairly accurately. Whatever it was that she knew about Howard Lawrence was to be used as an argument to win Philip's love, or at least to weaken Margaret's hold upon his affection.

"But say, Jenny," said Joe, "what is there in it for me? I am not asking you to give me money—I'm only asking for the loan of a dollar until I begin to draw my salary from Mr. Jackson." She gave him the money.

"Make the note strong," she said. "He must come."

Joe reassured Jenny and hurried away.

Haggleton entered briskly and found Jenny gazing fondly at the picture of his son.

"He's a fine young fellow, that Philip Ames, isn't he?"

"Phil? Indeed he is. But if anybody tells you that he is easy to understand"—

"Gentle seems to understand him."

"Gentle thinks he does. Say, Mr. Jackson, you have Gentle worried, all right."

"I? How?"

"Oh, with all this bakeshop business. Before you came it was nothing but the wrongs of the poor. Now it's nothing but money making schemes."

"You think Philip is interested?" he asked casually.

"Interested? You know he is interested. Why, yesterday, Gentle was trying to talk tenement house reform to Phil, but he hardly listened. He was figuring out the profits of that electrical machine for kneading bread."

"Good!"

Haggleton was immensely pleased.

"I never saw Phil that way before," continued Jenny slowly.

"You like him, don't you?"

"Everybody likes him. I love him." Jenny continued:

"Yes, he is changed. And this sort of encourages me."

"How so?"

Jenny stumbled on.

"You have made me see," the young woman was saying, "that there are two Philips—the one Gentle knows and the one you know."

She gazed at the picture.

"Yes," she added, with a contented smile, "that's it—two Philips. You have waked up the one that Gentle does not know. Why shouldn't I"—

"Two Philips? What a strange fancy!"

Haggleton spoke merely to make her go on.

"I tell you there are two Philips," she insisted. "One Philip loves this trained nurse. What's the matter with the other Philip loving me?"

She smiled up confidingly.

"Here is a new complication," thought Haggleton—"still another battle to be fought over Philip!"

"Do you really think that you can win him away from this girl?" he asked.

The answer staggered him.

"Do you really think that you can win him away from Gentle?"

What did this young woman know? Not that he was Philip's father, of course. But the rest of it she had gauged pretty accurately by intuition, no doubt.

Jenny began to pay her compliments to her hated rival.

"She makes me tired with her airs, and she ain't strong for you, Mr. Jackson," she added viciously. "When I met her I saw that she didn't care for me, and she doesn't know anything about me. You do, though I never told you."

"I have guessed a little, Jenny. I respect you all the more for your grit in returning here."

"Do you? I am glad of that. Well, this Miss Margaret ain't so much of a much herself. It was her brother that put me on the downslide."

"Her brother?"

"Yes, the brother of the girl Philip is going to marry—this stuckup nurse! I've a good mind to tell Philip."

"Her brother is not her fault."

"No, I suppose he's mine. But I am going to tell him."

"Do you think that would be fair?"

"All's fair in love."

Haggleton looked at the firmly closed mouth and doubted his ability to persuade her.

"You know I like you very much?" he asked.

She nodded.

"And I admire you, Jenny, for your pluck and your honesty. You are a good woman notwithstanding what is behind you—a fine woman. Are you going to do a mean thing and disappoint me?"

"Is it mean?" she asked.

"You know it is. You will lower yourself in your own eyes and in the eyes of all of us. It would be unworthy of you."

Jenny sat silent.

"I won't tell," she finally said. "I will play fair. I do it only for your sake."

"You do it because you are the fine woman I knew you were."

He bent forward and kissed her lightly on the cheek. She furtively wiped her eyes.

"But I am going to fight for my other Philip to the end," she declared

"I admire you, Jenny, for your pluck and your honesty."

defiantly, "just as you are going to fight for yours."

"That's understood. Now, Jenny, something else. When this bakeshop scheme comes off you'll get eight a week. We're going to brighten up your life and your father's."

"There is only one thing that can brighten up my life, and father—well, he has no hope for the future."

"Ah, yes, he failed in business?"

"He had an oil business in Iowa. But the trust couldn't let us go by. John J.'s wagons undersold us at our own door. Now father is a helper in a cellar bakeshop."

"That is the law of business, Jenny—the survival of the fittest."

"Yes, I suppose so. But it's hard to prove that to those who don't fit."

A Quaint London Custom.

It is curious how few persons have noticed the ancient and quaint custom which is observed every evening during the term in the walks of the Middle Temple of sounding the call that warns members of the inn that it is time to dress for dinner in the hall at 6. The custom is as old as the Middle Temple itself, where it alone exists. At about 5.30 p. m. the warder on duty emerges from a side door of the hall with an old fashioned cow horn, richly ornamented with silver, and, commencing in Fountaincourt, blows a sustained blast on it, which he repeats in New court, Essex court, Brick court, Pump court, Elm court and at the entrance to Crown office row. The whole operation lasts about ten minutes, and when it is over the warder, who is a kind of beadle in plain livery, returns the horn to the butler's pantry. Nobody seems to take any notice of the horn blowing except small boys and ticket porters, who occasionally chaff the warder while he is engaged in his musical efforts.—Westminster Gazette.

She Was the Boiler.

Topnoody made up his mind that he was not going to be ruled any longer by his wife, so when he went home at noon he called out imperiously:

"Mrs. Topnoody, Mrs. Topnoody!"

Mrs. Topnoody came out of the kitchen, a dish rag tied round her head and a rolling pin in her hand.

"Well, sir," she said, "what'll you have?"

Topnoody staggered, but braced up.

"Jane, I want you to understand, madam," and he tapped his breast dramatically, "I am the engineer of this establishment."

"Oh, you are, are you? Well, William, I want you to understand that I," and she looked dangerous—"I am the boiler that will blow up and throw the engineer over into the next county. Do you hear the steam escaping, William?"

William heard it, and he meekly inquired if there was any assistance he could render in the housework.—Pearson's Weekly.

A Matter of Taste.

"Mister, you're wasting time sketching that old ruined bridge."

"Indeed?"

"Yes; there's a fine new steel bridge just a mile farther on."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Our opinion of ourselves, like our shadow, makes us either too big or too little.—Bronte.

A Tart Retort.

"Can a politician be a good Christian?" was once asked of the late Senator Ingalls of Kansas, when he replied, "With God all things are possible."

Christmas Presents

FOR FATHER

"Why aren't there more Christmas gifts that are appropriate for men?" and "Are there any novel presents so the stereotyped collar box, hat brush or stickpin will not have to be given this Christmas?" are questions often heard at this season of the year, particularly by women who do fancy work. And for once the answer may be that there is at least one attractive gift that an ingenious woman who is clever with carpenter's tools can make. This present is a novel pipe rack. To make the rack procure four boards from a carpenter—two eighteen inches long by six inches wide and two eighteen inches long by five inches wide. In one of the latter pieces get a carpenter to bore four holes three-eighths of an inch in diameter and running lengthwise in the board. The two end holes are four inches from the ends of the board, and all of the holes are two and a half inches apart. The two larger boards are joined together by means of braces, which screw on the backs with very small screws. Five inches from the top of the longer side is fastened the board with the holes in it, so that it makes a shelf on the first piece. Then, five inches below this, is fastened the other board in the same manner as the first—by means of screws from the back. The rack is finished as far as the carpentering goes. The upper shelf is for the pipes, the holes being made for them to rest in, while the lower shelf is for tobacco boxes, matches, etc.

The next thing is to stain it the popular mission color. Then get screw eyes and put them on the back, and through these put picture wire to hang it by. The hardest thing is to print above the first shelf, "A Man's Best Friend." Paint the letters with gold paint, which sets off the dark color of the wood and gives the rack a finished, decorative appearance.

Gift For the Golfer.

For the use of the up to date father the golf score and change purse combined makes a desirable present. This is fashioned of dark brown suede kid, the back being stiffened by means of a piece of cardboard. Either buttons and buttonholes or the snappers that are used for gloves can be utilized for the clasps. A loop at the top is useful to pass over the belt, while the miniature golf stick is a toy fastened on by silk cord.

GOLF SCORE AND CHANGE PURSE.

A Tobacco Pouch.

When wife or daughter makes a tobacco pouch for the pater he's always delighted. A pretty pouch in rich brown or dark green, lined with a maroon silk, would be attractive when the edges are pinked and a drawstring of heavy silk with long tassels run in near the top. It's not the kid, the lining or the cord that makes these bags so unusual, for without the monogram or crest done in gilt thread or in bright colored silks the pouches, aside from being handmade, would be quite the same as those bought in the shops. But with an attractive emblem or two or three initials prettily embroidered in one corner the pouches are presents any man, no matter how surfeited with gifts, would be glad to receive at Christmas.

Not New but Well Liked Present.

Knitted or crocheted ties, though not novelties, will be desirable gifts, for they are serviceable and, being made by hand, are valuable accessories to any wardrobe. In plain green, dark cardinal or made of a combination of two tone effects or of two strongly contrasting colors, such as black and red or orange and blue, they are striking contrasts as neckwear.

The Ever Useful Shaving Case.

An attractive gift for a man is a shaving case. This is composed of white tissue paper cut to the proper size, while the outside case of blue linen, with the seams outlined in white silk, is in the shape of a football. The top is fastened with inch wide satin ribbon of any color.

A Christmas Present.

It is not often that one can find a suitable gift for an elderly man whose eyes are weak. A reading glass of the new kind, with a handle and a leather case, would be acceptable. The person in doubt should experiment with this as a Christmas gift this year.

GOWNS OF THE SEASON

Satin Surfaced Cloths For Day, Veiled Effects For Evening.

This season semi-tailored costumes are distinctively popular for afternoon wear and for informal evening use. These gowns are fashioned from the satin surfaced cloths now so popular. The rich, subdued luster and admirable draping qualities of these goods are wonderfully adaptable to the purpose. First of these is chiffon broadcloth, which gives warmth without weight. Heretofore its high luster has been an objection, but that has been toned down in the latest weaves, and now it has a subdued tone that is charming.

It should never be forgotten that the cheaper grades of broadcloth are to be avoided. If one cannot afford the best quality it is preferable to choose some other material, such as venetian, wool satin, prunella or satin oriental. This latter material has a diagonal wale and is very rich and may be developed satisfactorily. Zibeline and camel's hair are two materials which have been used but little for some time, but they are favorites for afternoon dresses this season. They are both so changed in appearance that they are scarcely recognizable, now having a smooth and silky surface.

Neither of these weaves requires elaborate trimming. A velvet collar with heavy frogs or large buttons would be sufficient unless one should prefer fur. I saw recently a strikingly effective costume of camel's hair in a rich seal brown, with a collar of marten. Another handsome gown observed on the same occasion was of black zibeline, with a six inch foot band and shawl collar of lynx.

Materials for evening gowns are so numerous as to be positively confusing. This season there is a real furore over veiled effects. Although simple enough in appearance, these are most difficult to manage successfully. Odd shades of satin are used as a foundation, which generally is cut princess shape and is always very smooth fitting. It has very little fullness at the bottom and may be either plain or trimmed with flouncings of chiffon and bandings of lace or embroidery which is barely revealed through the veiling. Metallic nets and laces make effective yokes, with embroideries for tunic yokes. The yoke remains a feature of the bodice on both evening and day gowns.

When spread out the new veils resemble a fine trellis work with vines and flowers clambering over it, and they are so opaque from the exterior that recognition of their wearers is not an easy matter. They come in black, white, dark green, brown and blue. Some bear chenille dots of various sizes, but with the close fitting turban now worn so extensively plain net would seem to be most appropriate. Automobile veils continue to expand. Some of the latest ones swathe the head, envelop the shoulders and then droop down to the waist line.

The hand bag, now practically a necessary accompaniment of the street costume, comes in a wonderfully fine woven mesh in gold, silver or gun metal. In buying it is wise to avoid the cheap affairs that never by any stretch of the imagination can be made to take the place of the well made ones. With these are now carried smaller bags of the same sort, which are used as change purses. These purses always have the chain handles, and on the chain are swung the little vanity cases of gold or silver which the modern woman affects. These small affairs contain the requirements for hastily refurbishing one's appearance after exposure to wind and dust while on a shopping expedition and thus are very practical as well as ornamental.

Just at the present moment glace gloves are more in favor than those of suede. Flesh colored ones are being worn with black and white evening frocks. In all other cases the gloves match the costume either in color or in one of its tones.

EMILY SLOANE.

The Lady From Argentina.

Senora de Portela, wife of the minister from Argentina, is one of the attractive Latin personalities of Washington. She and her husband have just returned from their summer home at Magnolia, on the north shore of Massachusetts, and have taken the house recently occupied by Vice President Fairbanks. She is one of the most distinguished looking women in official society and is always superbly gowned. She possesses jewels and fine toilets in endless quantity, and in social gatherings she may be counted on as being correctly garbed. Both she and her husband are close observers and have the faculty of having about them clever people. They enjoy the close friendship of Secretary Knox and his family. Senora Portela has resided in all the great capitals of Europe and spent the best part of her early girlhood in Paris, and she has learned the philosophy of dress from A to Z.

BRIEFS

Mr. and Mrs. F. G. Colby of Fort Dodge, Iowa, announce the marriage, Nov. 29, of their daughter Florence to H. Everett Hayden of Hancock court, Quincy.

A very pleasant surprise was tendered to Richard Knight at his home on Quarry street Friday evening. Songs, dancing and games were enjoyed, then refreshments were served. Mr. Knight was presented with a beautiful sweater with his club's monogram on it.

A largely attended Democratic rally was held at West Quincy Saturday night under the auspices of the John Boyle O'Reilly club. Addresses was made by Councilman McDevitt Russell and Smith, Harry Boyd, Dr. John H. Ash, Reduor P. Coombs and others.

The resignation of Rev. Alfred Ray Atwood, as pastor of the Washington Street Congregational church, was read at the morning service on Sunday by Rev. Charles P. Marshall of Westport, who filled the pulpit. Rev. Mr. Atwood resigns to accept the pastorate of the First Presbyterian church in Patterson, N. Y., which he will assume Dec. 31.

Mayor Shea is very confident that he will be elected tomorrow. In an interview this morning he said that he would carry Wards One, Two, Three, Four and Six and would give Mr. Nichols a hard rub in Ward Five. As for figures as to the amount of plurality he said that he had none to give out.

In New Banking Home

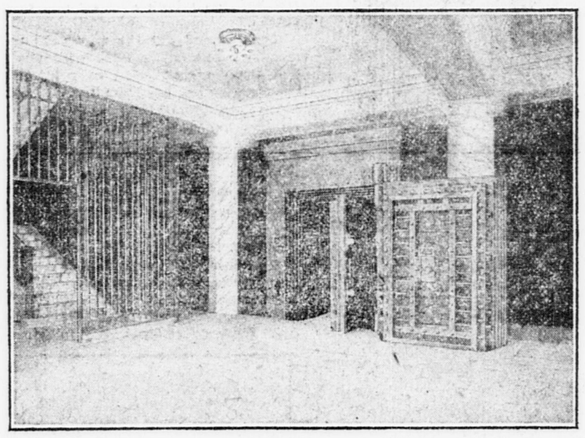
Many Quincy people were guests last week of the Old Colony Trust Company of Boston, and inspected their new banking house which is one of the most magnificent in the world. Business was transacted at these new quarters for the first time today.

Recently the Daily Ledger presented an exterior front view, and today gives an interior view of the first floor, and also of the vault in the basement.



The building has a central entrance on Court street 12 feet wide. From the floor to the roof, where there is a great vaulted arch, nothing intervenes. The effect of this is admirable. It not only affords plenty of light and air, but lends the appearance of stateliness to the entire interior.

On the left of the large public space in the center of the street floor are the bond and trust departments and on the right the banking and loan departments.

In the rear of the main floor upon a raised platform will be the principal officers, and opening from this platform are the private offices of these officials, together with committee rooms and accommodations for stenographers. The public space on the main floor is tiled in marble and the rich appearing counters rest upon vert antique marble bases. The lighting fixtures are of tasteful character in keeping with the general scheme of ornamentation.

In the basement is the safe deposit department, with the great steel vault, where millions upon millions may be stored with absolute safety. The outside dimensions of this vault are 52 feet long, 29 feet wide and 10 feet 10 inches in height. It rests on a solid rock foundation, and is made of exactly the same quality of steel from which battleships are made. The walls are of harveyized steel armor plate, surrounded by the highest grade granolithic concrete, reinforced by a new method of double heavy steel grillage. An outer shell of armor plate still further protects the inner structure.

There are two entrances to the vault one at either side. The outer doors at either entrance are 16 inches thick and the inner doors 6 inches in thickness, both of solid steel. These doors have been so nicely hung on compound ball-bearings that although the outer doors weigh about 18 tons a child can open and close them with little effort.

Of course every modern device insuring safety against theft and fire has been adopted and applied to this immense vault.

In many ways the interior of the new home of the Old Colony Trust company has been fitted with conveniences and little thoughtful provisions suggested by the long experience of the company.

On the site of the new home formerly stood the Adams building and previous to that the building of the Boston Advertiser, where Adams, Franklin Hancock, Otis, Quincy, Webster and other statesmen gathered. The Old Colony Company have an Adams room where the law library is located, also a Franklin room and a Webster room with appropriate pictures.

Connected with the institution are the following Quincy gentlemen: Herbert J. Polk, Walter H. Nichols, Robert B. Locke, Harrison A. Loud, and Carl F. Prescott, all of whom are as proud of the new home as President Gordon Abbott.

A PUBLIC APOLOGY

Requested of the Houghs Neck Associates

To the Houghs Neck Associates:

Gentlemen:—There is one part of the proceedings of your so-called non-political rally of Friday evening, in which some of our councilmen and particulary I, would like to know your position as a body, to clear the atmosphere to begin with. My position on the so-called Cavanagh lot was not friendly. Feeling then, as I do now, that it was originally a political promise, probably having been made previous to the last election, that for endorsement and support the goods would be delivered.

I will, however, admit it was an astute move from a political standpoint, for there are generally two classes of men in control of civic affairs. Some can be handled like baled hay, and delivered where required. Others look for the best interests of all concerned and can be counted to stand on principle when those conditions are granted. I with some others, had consistently been shy of the so called Cavanagh lot, so much so, that I was asked if I had looked over all the lots proposed. I was honest in replying that I had not. I was invited down, and in company with a committee of your association, did view the lots suggested and from the same honest conviction admitted that other things being equal, and certain conditions complied with, which was considered right to both Cavanagh and the taxpayers of our city, I was willing to vote for the purchase of the lot.

Now, gentlemen, that is in effect what I stated at the Shea rally last Friday evening, and which every honest man in that committee knows is what I actually did do, and in the face of the fact that one of your members, so blinded by his political zeal, was ungentlemanly enough to impugn my integrity and veracity in the matter, and the next gentlemen appeared grudgingly to admit that I was correct.

I demand of you, as an association, to reply, and state your position in this matter, so that when any member of the City Council is called by your body, or a committee of the same, to look over the ground on any question in the line of justice, that he may feel that he is called by an association of citizens, with honor or integrity enough to be considered, and that under political strain or otherwise they may feel assured of decent treatment and to be correctly quoted.

The attack of this member was entirely uncalled for. The person whose veracity was opposed to mine had ample support there and as I stated then I repeat, that "fair play is a jewel." I was alone in my side of the fight. Good sporting instincts alone would concede fair play against the bunch. My witness was the Lincoln additions in Ward Three. Two of your committee were here and viewed my witness yesterday, and conceded I am not a liar.

Your position as a body is requested and required in the public press, and a public apology from the member of your association, or the notice of his expulsion from your association not later than the evening papers of Monday, December 6, 1909.

John R. Richards.

EXPRESS LICENSES

Mayor Shea Replies to Candidate Nichols

To the Voters of Quincy:

Various charges have been made during the present campaign, in reply I have presented facts in each case. Mr. Nichols over his own signature makes the charge that I have signed thirty-one express licenses to transport liquor. The facts, as secured from the City Clerk's office today, are that nineteen such licenses are in force at the present time; twenty-two such licenses have been granted by the City Council during the present year, three of which have either been revoked or lapsed. In the eleventh hour of the campaign many such charges are likely to appear, I rest my case in the hands of the Voters.

CANDIDATE SHEA.

HEAVY VOTE TODAY AT CITY ELECTION

Indications That the Plurality of Mayor Shea Will Be Reduced

The Usual Large Majority for No-License Is Assured---Hot Contest for Councilmen-at-large

Quincy, with 13 other cities of Massachusetts is holding its Municipal election today, and the candidates for Mayor are:

WALTER F. NICHOLS, Republican.

EDGAR NORTON Socialist.

WILLIAM T. SHEA, Democrat.

Mayor Shea, who is a candidate for reelection, also has a Citizens' nomination. A very large vote is being cast and the indications are that the result will be closer than last year. The odds are decidedly in favor of the reelection of Mayor Shea, but a few believe that Mr. Nichols has a chance.

The most interesting contest is for Councilmen at large, where two Republicans who were defeated at the caucuses are running independently. This gives Ward One two Republican candidates Messrs. Branch and Gilson; and Ward Six two Republicans, Messrs. Cherrington and Hadlock. The Democrats have no candidates for Councilmen at large but the Socialists have two nominees.

For School Committee at large there is also a contest.

Church bells were rung this morning to arouse the No-License voters, and an efforts is being made to secure the usual large majority.

Most of the wards have contests for Councilmen from ward.

VOTE LAST YEAR.

In 1908 Mayor Shea received a plurality of 1116 in the city. He carried every precinct in Wards One, Two Three and Four, but lost in Wards Five and Six. There was no third candidate. The vote was as follows:

| | Shea | Stone | Blanks |
|---|---|---|---|
| Ward One Pre. 1, | 264 | 197 | 5 |
| Ward One, Pre. 2. | 378 | 210 | 6 |
| Ward Two, Pre. 1, | 177 | 126 | 2 |
| Ward Two, Pre 2 | 314 | 134 | 4 |
| Ward Three, Pre. 1 | 344 | 149 | 4 |
| Ward Three, Pre. 2 | 199 | 197 | 7 |
| Ward Four, Pre. 1 | 389 | 36 | 6 |
| Ward Four, Pre. 2, | 308 | 142 | 3 |
| Ward Five | 382 | 435 | 6 |
| Ward Six Pre. 1, | 166 | 177 | 0 |
| Ward Six, Pre. 2, | 155 | 157 | 4 |
| | 3,076 | 1,960 | 47 |

WARD ONE.

All eyes are turned on the Centre ward today as there is much speculation as to what the outcome will be. Normally Republican it was carried by Mayor Shea last year and he claims that he will carry it this year by even a greater plurality than a year ago. Several automobiles and carriages have been in use since early morning with the result that a big vote is being polled. Precinct two was leading a little in the total vote cast up to noon and was apparently steadily gaining. In the first precinct during the first hour 96 voted and in Precinct two 101. At 8 o'clock the vote was: Precinct one, 183; Precinct two, 208. At 9 o'clock, Precinct one, 236; Precinct two 271. At 10 o'clock, Precinct one, 273; Precinct two, 314. At 11 o'clock, Precinct one, 298; Precinct two, 359. At 12 o'clock, Precinct one, 324; Precinct two, 395. At 1 o'clock, Precinct one, 366; Precinct two, 428.

It is figured out that a large percent of the Ward One vote had been cast by 1 o'clock and no great rush is anticipated during the afternoon hours. As soon as the polls are closed at 4 o'clock the head of the ticket will be counted and the vote for Mayor will be announced within a few minutes.

The progress of the voting in this ward is shown by an hourly comparison with the vote at the State election in Precinct 1 as follows:

| Hour | State | City |
|---|---|---|
| 7 A. M. | 81 | 96 |
| 8 A. M. | 158 | 183 |
| 9 A. M. | 232 | 236 |
| 10 A. M. | 247 | 273 |
| 11 A. M. | 289 | 298 |
| 12 M. | 309 | 324 |
| 1 P. M. | 335 | 366 |
| 2 P. M. | 363 | 403 |

WARD TWO.

The vote in Ward Two, precinct 1, is running about the same as in previous years. At 8 o'clock there were 160 votes registered. The ballot box was put out of commission at about 7 o'clock when it was found that it was tearing the votes, and an ordinary box substituted. James Alonzo Hayden, one of Ward Two's oldest voters, cast the first vote as he had done for years past. Frank P. Cox is taking the place of William F. Cain as warden, otherwise the officers are on duty as assigned.

The heaviest vote in years is being polled at the booth in Ward Two, precinct 2. At 8 o'clock 237 had registered, and they were still voting fast, so that there is no doubt but what there will be one of the heaviest votes cast that was ever polled in this precinct.

WARD THREE.

In South Quincy, precinct one started the day's voting heavily, and at 9 o'clock a third of the vote had been cast and the election officers feel assured that they will have their results in early. At 9 o'clock 215 votes had been cast. Following this hour there was a lull however until the rush of the noon voters.

Precinct two in the same ward is also holding up its end and pulling out a good number, so that 160 had registered at 9 o'clock.

WARD FOUR.

The voting in both precincts of West Quincy shows a hot fight being waged there, and at 10 o'clock the number who had voted in precinct one was 245, and in precinct two, 250. The contest in this ward between Smith and McDevitt for the council, is being hotly waged by both parties and promises interesting development before the day is over. This morning Mayor Shea had a very heated argument with McDevitt in St. Mary's hall. There is little doubt but that the fight in Ward Four is the hottest of any ward in the city. The figures at 10 o'clock are ahead of last year's which were considered particularly heavy. In precinct one there was an increase of 6 over last year, and, although in precinct two there was 17 less than the previous year at 10 o'clock, there is a feeling that the final total will tally above last year.

WARD FIVE.

Wollaston, the home ward of Candidate Nichols, is getting out a good vote an even 600 having deposited their ballots at 11 o'clock. Of this number, precinct one had cast 354 and precinct two 246. This is slightly in excess of the vote at the State election, when 535 votes were cast at 11 o'clock. After many trials the ballot boxes used in this ward have become accustomed to their work and are recording the ballots cast correctly.

The general impression about the polls is that the ward will do a great deal better for Mr. Nichols than it did a year ago for Mr. Stone. Just how much of a plurality Nichols will get no one ventured to say.

Both precincts are located in the basement of the Hose house, and as was stated at the State election, it is anything but a desirable place in which to pass a day. Fortunately it is cold weather or it would be much more disagreeable.

WARD SIX.

There is but little of an exciting nature in Atlantic, and there were but few people about the polls this morning outside the election officers and checkers. There were carriages in each precinct but the horses were not being overworked. In precinct one 94 voted during the first hour, 65 the second 43 the third and 17 the fourth, bringing the total at 10 o'clock up to 219. This is considerably ahead of the vote the same hour at the recent State election.

The ballot box in this precinct is not working right as it has the jumping fever. Up to 10 o'clock it had made thirty jumps. In the second precinct the vote at 10 o'clock was practically the same as the State election, namely 163 votes. There is no local contest other than the ward has two candidates for Councilmen at large, and it goes without saying that the ward will give both men a good vote.

SYSTEM OF SIGNALLING

Warned Sugar Trust's Employes of Visits of Government Agents

New York, Dec. 7.—Electric flashlight signals were used on the Williamsburg piers of the Havemeyer and Elder Sugar Refining company to warn employes of the approach of government agents, according to two witnesses who testified in the trial in the United States circuit court of the six sugar company employes charged with conspiracy.

The men who declared on the stand that they had noticed an elaborate system of signalling in use in the scale houses are Frederick B. Saunders and John Rochefort, both of whom were employed as laborers.

Immediately after the flashing of the light in the scale houses the scales would be balanced, asserted Saunders, and a few minutes later a government agent would appear.

The introduction of this testimony was a surprise to the defense and it produced a sensation in the courtroom.

ATTACKED BY LEOPARD

Three Men Narrowly Escape Death In a Fierce Battle

Newton, Mass., Dec. 7.—Three men employed in the "zoo" at Norumbega park had a narrow escape when a leopard, which they were trying to lead into a cage, became infuriated and attacked them. Dashing into the open door of the cage, inside of which were the three men, the leopard gave them a fierce battle, until she was shot dead by Carl Alberte, the manager of the park.

The men were Samuel Stephenson, James Burns and Frederick Harrington, all experienced employes of the "zoo." Although their clothing was torn and each received bruises and scratches from the leopard, none was seriously injured. That they escaped death was a surprise to other employes of the park.

DECISION BETWEEN RATE MEASURES

Taft Is Facing an Interstate Commerce Problem

Washington, Dec. 7.—President Taft faces something of the same situation over proposed amendments to the interstate commerce act that confronted Mr. Roosevelt when the original railroad rate bill was being prepared.

The president has just had an interview with Representative Townsend of Michigan, who has been an adviser of the president on railroad legislation at the president's request, and is preparing a bill covering all the railroad propositions embodied in Taft's Des Moines speech. These related to the power of the interstate commerce commission to initiate rates, the routing of merchandise, the establishment of a railroad court, and other features.

Representative Mann of Chicago, chairman of the railroad committee of the house, known as the committee on interstate and foreign commerce, will also father a railroad bill prepared presumably along administration lines. Townsend is a radical. Mann never has been.

The question arises which bill will the president favor. In like circumstances, Roosevelt ignored Townsend, the author of a radical railroad bill, and recognized Hepburn, Mann's predecessor as chairman of the committee, having been forced to do this by the knowledge that the bill would not pass if placed under radical auspices. One of the first tests of the president's quality, therefore, bids fair to be his attitude in this matter.

RHODE ISLAND BABY HOMES

Legislation For Their Regulation Is Planned by Assemblymen

Providence, Dec. 7.—As a result of the death of twenty-two babies recently at the Myrtle baby home in East Providence there will be legislation introduced at the forthcoming session of the general assembly to regulate the conduct of Rhode Island nurseries and baby homes, according to the statements of several assemblymen.

At Monday's session of the inquest into the deaths at the baby home the officials denied that paregoric in large quantities was used.

May Lose Fight License

Redwood City, Cal., Dec. 7.—A petition to revoke the fight permit of James W. Coffroth, the promoter who conducts an arena just outside San Francisco, came up before the board of supervisors of San Mateo county, but the hearing went over until the next meeting of the board on Dec. 20.

Instantly Killed by Train

Worcester, Mass., Dec. 7.—William Anderson, 18 years old, while on his way home from the Noron Grinding company's plant in Greendale, where he was employed, was struck by a train and instantly killed.

The Weather

INSURGENCY IS RAMPANT

Leaders In Congress Must Lay Plans Very Carefully

REPUBLICANS DEMORALIZED

Old Aldrich-Cannon Organization Still In Control, but Beset With Troubles—Minority Without a Leader In the Senate—Speaker Expects Trouble In House, but Not Serious Enough to Cause Him to Resign

Washington, Dec. 7.—Congress has come in in a lackadaisical mood, in a condition of mild disorganization. Party lines never rested so loosely, and the country will strain its eyes to discover the line of demarcation between Republican and Democrat. The parties are divided also among themselves; perhaps not enough for legislative purposes, although the house is rampant with insurgency, but enough to make the leaders plan carefully before deciding to take up any specific line of legislation.

The senate Democrats are without a leader. Senator Culberson of Texas has resigned the leadership of the minority and Senator Bailey is unable to be present.

The task of selecting a leader is a delicate one for the minority. Culberson disliked the duties of leadership and lays them down gladly. Bailey is his natural successor, and was in practical charge of the floor during the tariff session, but the Democrats will hardly dare elect him, in view of the larger importance of the selection to the party throughout the country. Senator Money could easily be chosen, but his health will not permit him to serve.

In the house the situation that confronts the minority is not a great improvement over that in the senate. Champ Clark of Missouri, the designated minority leader, is talking big about what he proposes to do, but he realizes, as do all his lieutenants, that as the situation exists at this time it is not possible for him to command the united support of his party in the house. A score or more of the Democratic members refuse to recognize Clark as their "boss;" on any real test they will follow the leadership of the Cannon organization in preference to that of Clark.

The session opens with the Republicans somewhat demoralized. The old Aldrich-Cannon organization is still in control in both senate and house, but it is beset with troubles on every hand. There is talk about the senate that the number of insurgent Republican senators may be increased from seven to twelve or fourteen before this session is far advanced.

Certain senators who traveled along with the Aldrich organization during the consideration of the tariff bill appear to have come to the conclusion that if they are to stay in public life they must part company with the old organization. Time only can show how many senators have undergone a change of mind since the special tariff session came to an end.

In the house Speaker Cannon confides to his close friends that he expects trouble throughout the session. He does not intend to resign; he confidently believes he will be able to more than hold his own with the insurgents, but he will not be surprised if the insurgents are strong enough seriously to embarrass the work of the session. Insurgents have abandoned all hope of persuading Cannon to resign the speakership and will devote their energies largely to an effort to obtain further changes in the rules. Whether they can attain any success in this movement will depend upon the attitude of the Democrats.

Public men, in commenting privately on the general disorganized condition of the parties in the legislative bodies, are saying that the conditions here simply reflect political conditions throughout the country. As they view the situation each of the old parties has reached a critical stage of its career. They will not be surprised if a realignment of parties follows this session of congress. At any rate, they say, the situation as a whole was never more interesting.

THE NICARAGUAN CRISIS

First Matter to Be Called to the Attention of Congress

Washington, Dec. 7.—Hardly had congress been opened when the Nicaraguan crisis forced itself forward and demanded consideration.

Representative Sulzer offered in the house a resolution demanding the trial of President Zelaya for the murder of American citizens, the establishment in Nicaragua of a responsible government and the placing of the military forces of the United States at the disposal of the president to carry the resolution into effect.

In the senate the early adjournment alone kept Senator Rayner from demanding the trial of Zelaya for the killing of the two Americans, Cannon and Groce.

At the navy department the movement of warships and marines against Nicaragua was continued.

Senator Bacon of Georgia is the most likely choice. Like Money, he is an old-time Democrat.

SUED FOR $1,000,000

Money Lenders Said to Be on the Trail of Prince Miguel

Budapest, Dec. 7.—According to a local newspaper a syndicate of creditors is suing Prince Miguel of Braganza, who married Miss Anita Stewart of New York Sept. 15 last, for $1,000,000.

PRINCE MIGUEL OF BRAGANZA

Some years ago, the paper says, Miguel was in financial difficulties, and the syndicate advanced him a large sum, payable when he should make a rich marriage.

The claim is set up that, following negotiations which resulted in his marriage to Miss Stewart, the prince promised to recoup the syndicate with one-fifth of the dowry, which was $5,000,000. Now Miguel declines to pay anything beyond the amount borrowed.

200 EVICTIONS ARE POSTPONED

Agent of Ludlow Associates Agrees to a Conference

Springfield, Mass., Dec. 7.—Intending to thwart the Ludlow associates in their announced intention of evicting 200 more strikers from their homes in Ludlow, in order to make room for the large number of strikebreakers who are now coming to the mills to work, a committee from the strikers petitioned Mayor Sanderson to interfere and bring about at least a delay in the removals.

Mayor Sanderson left at once for Ludlow, where he went into conference with Agent Stevens. His visit was hardly successful, but he did succeed in obtaining Stevens' consent to postpone the evictions until after a conference.

At the same time the company's proposition for arbitration will be given to the strikers by the special committee of the Central Labor union. It is that the strikers return to the old scale of wages until the strike trouble has been adjusted, and if the board of arbitration sees fit to grant the request for an increase, to pay them whatever difference there is between the two scales during the arbitration period.

BUT ONE CHANCE LEFT

Morse's Appeal For Writ of Certiorari From Supreme Court Is Refused

Washington, Dec. 7.—The supreme court of the United States denied the petition of Charles W. Morse, convicted of violating the federal banking law, for a writ of certiorari. The result of the decision is to leave in effect against Morse the sentence of fifteen years' imprisonment.

The banker now has but one chance left for escaping from the law's penalty. His counsel last month applied for permission from the federal circuit court to seek a rehearing in the trial court on the ground that certain members of the jury were subject to alcoholism, and that they were subjected to undue influence on the part of their attendants. This was granted by Judge Holt, who heard the case.

F RENCH AVIATOR KILLED

Motor Explodes While Aeroplane Is 1600 Feet From the Ground

Nice, France, Dec. 7.—M. Fernandez, the French aviator, was instantly killed, following the explosion of the motor when his aeroplane was being maneuvred at an estimated height of 1600 feet. The machine crumpled, and with its pilot dropped to earth.

M. Fernandez had accomplished several interesting features. The height attained by him at the moment of the accident might have constituted a world's record had it been officially observed and recorded.

Eight Deaths In Tong War

San Francisco, Dec. 7.—Two more Chinese were killed in the Tong war between the Yee family and the On Yick Tong. An On Yick was killed at Sacramento and a Yee near San Rafael. Eight have been killed in the war thus far.

Pierce Trial Goes On

Austin, Dec. 7.—Judge Calhoun overruled all exceptions offered by H. C. Pierce in the proceedings against him charging false swearing, and ordered the trial to proceed.

She Followed Instructions.

In a certain city, which shall be nameless, a literary man had asked his wife as she was starting downtown to buy a couple of shirts for him. She asked him what kind, and he answered, "Size 15."

"Yes, but"—

"Two dollars."

"But I want to know"—

"Oh, the color? Well, I've plenty of white shirts. Get me something that won't show soot. Now, don't bother me any more, please. I'm at work."

She did not bother him any more. She went away and in the afternoon returned with her purchases.

"Here are your shirts, John," she said, laying them down before him.

"Why, they are coal black, Lucinda!" he exclaimed.

"Yes, that's the only kind that won't show soot. They are just what you told me to buy. Now, don't bother me by talking about them. I have got to go and look after the children."

Being "game," John took his medicine without protest.—Youth's Companion.

A Just Rebuke.

"I am," he said, "deformed. Pads hide it. Still, deformed I am, and I want to know why writers always make deformed persons villains? Take Quasimodo in Victor Hugo's 'Notre Dame.' Why, Quasimodo was little better than a wild gorilla, swinging from the great bell and hurling the priest down from the high tower. Take the housemaid's clubfoot father in Ibsen's 'Ghosts.' There was a nasty old man for you—a nasty, perverse, evil minded old rooster, eh? Take Dick Crookback in the immortal William's play. Take Nosey the Dwarf in Hauff's classic fairy tale. Take the villains in all fairy tales, for that matter. They are a one eyed, lame, hunchbacked, clubfooted lot.

"It makes us deformed folks red hot, this literary imputation of villainy. It causes people to think we really are villains. Where's the child, after a course of fairy tales, that can be persuaded a hunchback's soul doesn't match his body?" — Cincinnati Enquirer.

Danger In Eye Poultices.

Do not poultice an eye in any circumstances whatever. Binding a wet application over an eye for several hours must damage that eye, the assertions of those professing to have personal experience in this to the contrary notwithstanding. The failure to aggravate an existing trouble by binding a moist application over an inflamed eye, which application is supposed to remain for an entire night, can only be explained by the supposition that a guardian angel has watched over that misguided case and has displaced the poultice before it had got in its fine work. All oculists condemn the poultice absolutely, in every shape and in every form. Tea leaves, bread and milk, raw oysters, scraped beef, scraped raw turnip or raw potato and the medley of other similar remedies popularly recommended are one and all capable of producing irremediable damage to the integrity of the tissues of the visual organ.—Family Doctor.

Eccentric Count Bertrand.

Count Bertrand, who lived in Paris, was a very eccentric man, and to one of his eccentricities he ascribed his long life. Once a year he would betake himself to bed and stay there for three months. On these occasions he would see no one but his servant, who brought him his meals, and even him he forbade to speak. Just before the Germans began the siege of Paris the count went to bed, and the servant, true to his injunctions, said nothing of the events going on around him. One day the bread proved so bad the count demanded an explanation, whereby, of course, he learned that Paris was encompassed by the enemy. Springing out of bed, the count paced the floor, repeating, "What should a Bertrand do under such circumstances?" Suddenly he stopped, exclaiming, "We should go to bed!" and to bed he went and stayed there until the siege was over.

Willie Objects.

Among the representatives in congress is one whose lack of personal comeliness is the basis of personal banter from his facetiously inclined colleagues.

"Why, Willie," said one of them to the four-year-old son of the congressman, "how much you resemble your father!"

"Yes, sir," responded Willie, with an air of resignation. "Everybody says that, but I don't think I deserve it."—Lippincott's Magazine.

Getting a Start.

"Did you secure tickets for the play, hubby?" inquired the New York wife. "I hear they are in demand."

"They are, but I managed to get seats for two months from tonight. And, by the way"—

"Well?"

"You might begin to get ready now."—Kansas City Journal.

The Annual Rooter.

"Do you know the difference between an optimist and a pessimist?"

"Yes, indeed," answered young Mrs. Torkins. "All I have to do to see the difference is to observe Charley at the beginning and at the end of a baseball season."—Washington Star.

The Unhonored Prophet.

A visitor to Carlyle's birthplace back in the seventies said to a native:

"Smart man, that Thomas Carlyle."

The native grunted.

"Him smart? Why, I went to skule wi' him."

The soul is the perceiver and revealer of truth.—Emerson.

Your Nerves Your nerves must be fed with pure, rich blood, or there will be trouble. Poorly fed nerves are weak nerves; and weak nerves mean nervousness, neuralgia, headaches, debility. Weak nerves need good food, fresh air, and Ayer's non-alcoholic Sarsaparilla.

Ask your doctor if alcoholic stimulants are not often very disastrous when given to nervous people. He will tell you why. J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass.

BRIEFS

Miss Margaret Barnes of Franklin was the guest on Sunday of friends in Wollaston.

John Smart of Beach street, a prominent actor, has returned from one of his theatrical tours.

Miss Louise Nash of Abington, who formerly lived on Arlington street is the guest of friends in Wollaston.

The Little Lights Mission met in the vestry of the Wollaston Congregational church Monday evening for an "Airship journey."

Mrs. George H. Penfield of Beale street has returned from East Haddam, Conn., where she was called by the death of her sister.

Three handsome new trolley freight cars arrived at East Weymouth this morning and it is reported that they are to be used in Quincy.

This evening a neighborhood prayer meeting will be held by the Wollaston Baptist church at the home of Mrs. Grass, Montclair station, which will be in charge of Rev. Joseph Walther.

After many delays work was commenced this week repairing the draw on the Neponset bridge. Patrons of the street railway will be glad when the repairs are completed so that they will not have to walk.

At the fair of the First Universalist church on Wednesday evening the Murray club furnish the entertainment giving the short drama "Murder will out," assisted by C. M. Houghton, reader; C. D. Brown, cornetist; Miss Edith Hyland, soloist; and Miss Margaret Raleigh in character songs.

A surprise party was tendered Miss Helen Croucher of Wollaston at her home on Beach street Saturday evening. She was presented a fountain pen. Many games were played, Miss Dorothy Lavery and John McCarthy contributed some fine selections on the piano, and Miss Edith Atkins rendered several pleasing vocal solos. Refreshments were served. Among those present were: Miss Robina Atkins, Miss Edith Atkins, Miss Helen Atkins, Miss Gertrude Allen, Miss Helen Ketchum, Miss Marie Lavery, Miss Dorothy Lavery, Miss Natalie Scott, Miss Bertha Given, Miss Lillan Perkins, John Conway, John McCarthy, Harrison Perkins, Earl Church, Millard Sumner, Harry Wilson, Fred Fuller, Warren Bates and William Raymond.

ALL WORK TOGETHER.

The citizens of Quincy are to be congratulated upon the substantial sums of money which have been contributed to the Anti-Tuberculosis Association to assist them in building a camp in this city for the treatment and cure of consumption, a disease which has gained appalling headway among us. This however is only a beginning and to make a success of this great cause we must all work, every individual. To this end the Civic-Betterment committee of the Women's club are to sell Red Cross stamps, which bear the Christmas and New Year Greetings in all the post offices in the city, and in many of the stores. It is urgent that all firms see to it that their mail matter from now until Christmas bear the Red Cross stamp, and all banks also, each person sending letters or parcels. As our beloved Dr. Hale expressed it, our success is in all working "together all together." Let every one help this grand work to success.

STORY FAVORS MISS LE BLANC

Witness Says Another Woman Was In Glover's Laundry

SAW HER WHEN SHE FLED

Also Saw Glover Work His Way to Doctor's House—Thought Actions of Both Were Caused by Intoxication—Norton's Story Confirmed—Strain Beginning to Tell on Wife of Murdered Man

Waltham, Mass., Dec. 7.—A Waltham young woman, who states positively that she saw a woman who was not Hattie Le Blanc walk out of the alley from the laundry the night Clarence F. Glover was murdered, has been found by the detectives working for Hattie Le Blanc's relatives.

The woman, who knew the Glover family well, and also Hattie Le Blanc, is sure of her facts. She told the detectives that on the night Glover was shot she was walking along Crescent street a few minutes after 9 o'clock.

When at the head of Gifford alley, which leads from Crescent street to the laundry, she heard two shots. A few feet past the head of the alley she stopped to gratify her curiosity. As she was standing, listening, she says she saw a woman come furtively up the alley, and hurry along Crescent street towards Main street.

This woman, she says she is positive, was not Hattie Le Blanc. While she still stood wondering at the strange actions of the disappearing woman, she saw Glover stagger uncertainly up the alley, reach the stone wall and then, hand over hand, work his way along to the corner of Dr. Cousens' house.

At the time the witness thought that the strange actions of both man and woman were caused by intoxication.

This young woman also saw Carl Norton, the young man who reported to the police that he saw a woman leaving the laundry by way of the alley. She confirmed Norton's story, by telling the detectives that she saw another man with Norton. The other man, Norton told the police, was a stranger to him who had simply stopped to ask him for a light.

The detectives who are working for the interests of Hattie Le Blanc hope that by this woman's evidence they can prove the existence of a third party in the laundry at the time that Glover was shot.

The name of this young woman is known to the detectives. She is at present employed in the escape department of the Waltham Watch company. She had told several of her girl shopmates the story of her experience on the night that Glover was shot, and it was from one of the latter that the detectives learned the identity of the woman and the importance of her story.

A close friend of the family states that Mrs. Lillian Glover, wife of the murdered man, whose fortitude since the tragedy has been the subject of comment, seems to be slowly breaking down under the strain.

Her condition is said to be so serious that it is now a question whether or not she will be able to appear as a witness at the hearing of Hattie Le Blanc tomorrow in the district court.

NEW MINISTER TO CHINA

William J. Calhoun, a Chicago Lawyer, Accepts the Appointment

Washington, Dec. 7.—Announcement was made at the state department of the appointment of William J. Calhoun of Chicago as minister to China. Calhoun has accepted the appointment and the Chinese government has indicated its pleasure in receiving him.

Calhoun's most conspicuous service to the United States was in connection with the culmination of troubles in Venezuela. He acted as commissioner in the adjustment of difficulties with President Castro. This service established a reputation for Calhoun with the state department as a diplomat of tact and patience.

Calhoun was born in Pittsburg and is just past 61 years old. He is now a member of the firm of Calhoun, Lyford & Shean of Chicago.

OLD INSPECTOR DISMISSED

Men Who Accept Tips In Customs Service Will Be Fired

New York, Dec. 7.—"Not a man shall remain in this service who accepts a tip from a passenger," said Collector Loeb, and in the next sentence he dismissed Charles Nimmo, a customs inspector, who has been in the service since 1886.

"I am determined to break up that practice, and I want the public to know that not a cent need be paid to any employe of this port for any service the government pays its agents to perform," added the collector.

Roosevelt Returns In June

Washington, Dec. 7.—Word has been received here from former President Roosevelt to the effect that he and his son, Kermit, are in the best of health and spirits, and that they expec' to return to the United States some time next June.

SAVED COMRADES' LIVES

Death-Defying Stunt of Brave Sailor During Severe Hurricane

Halifax, Dec. 7.—Swimming 500 yards through the breakers hurled on the shore of Turks island by the recent disastrous West India hurricane, Robert Bonenfant, a sailor, carried ashore a rope from the wrecked British schooner Alexandra, over which Captain Pothier and four others of the crew reached safety, according to the story told by Pothier, who reached here with his crew on the steamer Boston from Jamaica.

The Alexandra was wrecked at Cockburn harbor, Turks island, in the height of the recent hurricane. The vessel was swept onto a reef 500 yards from shore where the huge combers and the jagged coral made quick work of the schooner.

There seemed little likelihood that any of the crew could reach shore alive through the terrible breakers when the schooner broke up, but Bonenfant tied a rope about his waist and dived overboard. Dozens of times he disappeared in the huge seas. He was overwhelmed, but by superhuman efforts reached the beach. After recovering his breath he fastened the line to a tree and over it his comrades reached shore safely.

WOULD HURT PROSECUTION

Plea Upon Which Sugar Probe Is Headed Off In Washington

Washington, Dec. 7.—Senator Borah of Idaho has agreed not to press his resolution for an investigation by congress of the sugar trust, on representations by President Taft and Attorney General Wickersham that an investigation would seriously interfere with the prosecutions now going on in New York. Speaker Cannon is trying to head off investigation in the house on the same plea.

The Borah resolution will be held in reserve, however, and investigation may be demanded later, if it is believed that the department of justice has been too lenient in dealing with sugar trust officials "higher up."

CONTEMPT CASE UP TO SUPREME COURT

Still a Chance For Gompers, Mitchell and Morrison

Washington, Dec. 7.—The supreme court of the United States granted the petition for a writ of certiorari in the contempt cases of Samuel Gompers, Frank Morrison and John Mitchell, officers of the American Federation of Labor. The effect of the decision will be to bring the entire record in the Bucks Stove and Range case against these men to the supreme court for review.

The contempt case against these men grew out of a proceeding in the local courts of the District of Columbia to prohibit the Federation from boycotting the Bucks Stove and Range company of St. Louis. Pending the decision of that case an its merits the supreme court of the district issued a temporary injunction against the publication of the name of the stove company in the "We don't patronize" list of the Federation. This decision was freely commented upon in the Federation's organ and the contempt proceeding was based upon this comment.

After extended hearings the three men were sentenced to imprisonment by Justice Wright and upon appeal the district court of appeals affirmed the decision. The supreme court will review the entire case as thus made out.

BAR LOWERED BY GALE

Shifting of Sand Makes Entrance to Newburyport Harbor Safer

Newburyport, Mass., Dec. 7.—Four more feet of water has been added to the depth on Newburyport bar.

Following the severe storm several barges arrived for the first time in many days, and the tugs went out to get them. At the bar they made their measurements, as is customary after a storm, and were delighted to find the increase in depth, as the storm had caused the sand to shift.

Newburyport bar has been a great source of danger to vessels in the past decade on account of the shoal water.

FOURTEEN CITIES VOTING

Contests In Bay State Mainly Center on License Question

Boston, Dec. 7.—Fourteen of the thirty-three cities of Massachusetts are holding elections today. In most of them the saloon question is the paramount issue.

The temperance people are so much encouraged over the way the liquor question has been handled by the voters in most of the cities for the past two or three years that they are preparing to make an even better showing this time. They will try to capture Taunton, Haverhill and Fitchburg.

Calhoun Again on Trial

San Francisco, Dec. 7.—The second trial of Patrick Calhoun, president of the United railroads of this city, on the charge of offering former Supervisor Furey a bribe of $4000, began with the examination of talesmen.

FALSE REPORTS MADE YEARLY

Charge Against the Phenix Fire Insurance Company

SURPLUS GREATLY IMPAIRED

President Accused of Irregularities, Including "Wash Sales," Maintaining Speculative Accounts, and Overdrawing Salary—Large Loans Said to Have Been Made to Members of State Insurance Department

New York, Dec. 7.—The Phenix Insurance company of Brooklyn is under investigation for irregularities which it is believed have impaired its surplus at least $1,000,000 and have resulted in conditions which Superintendent Hotchkiss of the state insurance department laid before the district attorney for possible criminal action.

It is charged that the president has overdrawn his salary; that he has unloaded doubtful securities on the company, and that he has used the company's assets as collateral to secure his own personal speculative accounts. Nor do the directors escape their share of censure.

In a formal statement issued last night, Hotchkiss says he does not believe the capital of the company is impaired and that thus far there is no evidence that its securities are not intact, but he admits that the present investigation is still uncompleted.

George P. Sheldon, a member of many clubs, and, as chairman of the laws and legal committee of the national board of fire underwriters, one of the best known insurance men in the country, has been president of the Phenix since 1887. It is charged that under his administration the annual reports of the company made to the insurance department during at least the last ten years, and probably longer, are false in more than one particular.

Under the present law, the insurance department is required to examine all life insurance companies at least once in every three years, but until the present investigation, Hotchkiss says the Phenix has not been examined for nearly twenty-two years, or since Sheldon became president.

The isurance department finds that questionable securities originally sold to the company by Sheldon have year after year passed through "wash sales," by which they have been concealed in the annual report.

Speculative accounts have been maintained by Sheldon, according to Hotchkiss, in at least one brokerage house, and the assets of the Phenix have been put up as collateral to cover his operations.

During the past seventeen years, it is charged that members of the state insurance department, whose duty it was to supervise the company, have accepted collateral loans from it, made to them by Sheldon in amounts varying from $40,000 to $100,000.

"These facts," says Hotchkiss in his statement, "when read in connection with the other fact that this company, prior to the present examination, has not been examined by the insurance department of which these men were, during the times mentioned, responsible officers, make further comment unnecessary.

"In my judgment, the size of the examining forces should be so increased that all insurance corporations, other than life insurance companies, may be examined at least once in every five years."

$1000 TO KILL HUSBAND

Offer Which Mrs. Wilhelm Is Said to Have Made to William Levy

Newark, N. J., Dec. 7.—All technical stays were brushed aside at the trial of Mrs. Mary J. Wilhelm for the murder of her husband, Frank Wilhelm, a wealthy contractor, and the prosecution mover forward briskly with the presentation of its case.

William Levy, a plumber, testified that on two different occasions Mrs. Wilhelm offered him $1000 to kill her husband. Levy's wife swore she overheard Mrs. Wilhelm make one such offer to her husband, and that Mrs. Wilhelm also told her she put powdered glass into her husband's tea, but he discovered it before he drank it.

No Trainmen's Strike

Chicago, Dec. 7.—William G. Lee, president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, sent a telegram to President Taft, assuring the chief executive that reports concerning a general railroad strike are without foundation.

Cold For Los Angeles

Los Angeles, Cal., Dec. 7.—Yesterday was the coldest day in Los Angeles in thirty-two years. The temperature fell to 41 degrees. In many places orchardists fought frost with smudge fires.

Dreams.

"A remarkable and lucky thing happened to me once when I was dead broke," imparted the aspiring poet. "It was near to the Christmas holidays, and I, needing money badly, sent a poem to a certain magazine. On the third night after I dreamed that my poem had been accepted for $50. Of course when I woke up I was much disappointed. But the very next day, lo, there came the fifty dollar check for verses!"

"Ah, you were in luck."

"Wait. Two days subsequent back came my poem, accompanied by an explanatory epistle from the editor. In this he said that owing to a dream his treasurer had dreamed the third night previous (same night as mine) the treasurer, under the impression that his dream was a reality, forwarded my check on his own hook."

"Remarkable indeed! Did you return the check?"

"Oh, no! I sent back the poem, together with a note stating that under no circumstances could I dream of returning the fifty."—Lippincott's.

Sea Fleas.

The deep sea naturalist when preparing the skeletons of small birds and fishes for mounting calls the sea fleas to his aid. These active little crustaceans swarm on the bottom of the sea in both tropical and temperate waters and are possessed of voracious appetites. So the naturalist, after removing the skin and loose flesh from the specimen, ties it in a coarse net and lowers it into the sea until it hangs just clear of the bottom. It is immediately discovered by the sea fleas, and countless myriads of the little creatures come swarming to the work of denuding the bones. In a short time the skeleton is clean and ready to be packed or mounted. Care must be taken to haul it up at just the right moment, as if left too long to the sea fleas they will attack and devour the small bones as soon as they have finished the soft parts. A little watchfulness on the part of the naturalist will prevent this, however, and the tiny scavengers of the deep will save him a lot of unpleasant work.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Early Trotting Races.

The earliest trotting or pacing race of which any record has been found was started from a New York road house called the De Lancey Arms. This wayside tavern stood in the Bowery lane, near what is now the corner of Fourth avenue and Eighteenth street. It seems to have been an all around sporting resort in colonial days, for in 1763 it was the scene of a bull baiting, and in the previous year it was the meeting place for four horses that raced up the road about half a mile to Watt's gate, near the present corner of Fourth avenue and Twenty-ninth street. The Jamaica turnpike was the first famous speeding ground in the vicinity of New York. Until the New York Trotting club's track came into existence, in 1826, it was the accepted course for the decision of match races, and as early as 1818 it was the scene of the first match against time of which there is any record.—Exchange.

"Jump Short Pie."

In a catalogue of out of the way dishes a feast of the Rev. R. H. Barham may be included. The author of "Ingoldsby Legends," his son relates, on visiting one of his parishioners was asked to dine and have some "jump short pie." He did so and made a hearty meal. "It's very nice—tastes like lamb. Why the odd name?" he asked. "Well, sir," said his host, "it is lamb. You see, the young lambs in the mesh try to get over the drains. A good many of 'em jump short, tumble in and get drowned. Then we hooks 'em out and puts 'em into a pie. Have another help, sir?" Barham declined. —London Tatler.

April Snow.

A snow flurry in April is still looked upon as a blessing in some parts of New England, where plates, cups and all sorts of dishes are placed to catch the flakes. Every drop of the melted snow is carefully collected and bottled and labeled "April snow," for use as an eyewater. It was once considered an infallible cure for granulated eyelids and sties.—New York Tribune.

Seamanship.

"I see that new ocean liner can steam her 26 knots an hour," said Smithers from his paper.

His wife looked up from her knitting with a bright smile.

"I suppose they steam the knots so that the poor sailors can untie them more easily," she observed tranquilly. —St. Louis Republic.

Not That Kind.

Weary Walker—Lady, could yer help a poor feller a little? I've got a hackin' cough an' a headache. Mrs. Kindling—Well, I've got a little wood outside you could hack, and it might cure your headache. Weary Walker—Much obliged, mum; but, yer see, my headache ain't of the splittin' kind.—London Scraps.

Not Hidden.

"There is one loss that a man never advertises," says the Philosopher of Folly, "that of his reputation. But he can always be sure that kind friends will attend to that for him."—Cleveland Leader.

HISTORIC QUINCY

City of President Has Much Of Interest

Old historic Quincy settled in 1625 has much of interest to visitors. When Braintree was incorporated in 1640, the territory now known as Quincy, was a part. In 1792 Quincy became an independent town, and in 1888 was incorporated as a city.

Quincy was named in honor of Col John Quincy, descendant in the third generation from Edmund, 2d, who settled in Quincy, in 1634; grand-father of Abigail (Smith) Adams, the wife and mother of a President of the United States.

The city includes Wollaston, Atlantic, Quincy Point, South Quincy, West Quincy, Montclair, Norfolk Downs, Wollaston Park, Squantum, Houghs Neck, Adams Shore, Germantown and Quincy Neck, comprising in all over 16 square miles, of which 2,530 acres are in public parks.

Birthplaces of Presidents.

Birthplace of John Adams, the first Vice President and second President of the United States, Franklin street, Quincy Adams house built in 1681 and restored in 1897 by Adams Chapter, Daughters of the Revolution. Open to public. Admission charged.

Birthplace of John Quincy Adams the sixth President of the United States, junction of Franklin street, Presidents road and Independence avenue. Built 1716, restored 1896 by the Quincy Historical Society. Open to public afternoons from 2 to 5. Admission charged.

Abigail Adams Cairn.

Penns Hill, erecteld June 17, 1896, by Adams Chapter, Daughters of the Revolution, to the memory of Abigail Adams, who with her son, John Quincy, from the spot watched the smoke of battle at Bunker Hill. Cairn composed of many historic stones, the corner stone being part of the old sleeper of first railroad in United States which ran from Quincy quarries to tide water, Neponset river.

Burial Place of Presidents.

First Congregational Church (Unitarian) at Quincy centre. In auditorium each side of high pulpit, are mural monuments, to the memory of John Adams, the second president, and John Quincy Adams, the sixth president of the United States, and their wives. The funeral of John Quincy Adams was held in this church. Beneath the entrance is the Adams tomb reached by stairways from the vestibule. Near the tomb is the box in which was brought from Washington the body of John Quincy Adams, also the old town hearse. Admission may be secured on application to W. E Dewhurst, sexton, 3 Maple street. A fee is asked for attendance, etc.

Hancock Cemetery.

Hancock cemetery across the street from First church contains many old stones. Among the old graves are those of Henry Adams founder of the Adams family who died Oct. 5, 1646; Rev. William Thompson, 1st pastor over the Braintree church who died Dec. 10, 1666; Rev. Henry Flint who died Oct. 11, 1668; Rev. John Hancock father of the Patriot who died May 7 1744, and many other notable people.

John Hancock Birthplace.

Adams street, junction of Dimmick and Hancock streets. A bronze tablet has been placed by the City of Quincy on Adams Academy to mark the place where the house stood in which the patriot John Hancock, the bold signer of the Declaration of Independence was born.

Presidents Adams Mansion.

Adams street, corner Newport avenue, Quincy. Residence of President John Adams and contains many family relics. Occupied by descendants Not open to public.

Presidents Lane.

Now Goffe street, leading from Adams street, near Mansion. Opened by John Adams to drive his cows to pasture.

Dorothy Q. House.

Hancock street, corner Butler road, Quincy, Old Quincy homestead in which Dorothy Q was born. Owned by the Massachusetts Society of Colonial Dames. Has quaint old paper on parlor put on for wedding of John Hancock and Dorothy Quincy; also secret chamber and other interesting features. Open free to the public on Saturdays, from 11 A. M., until 4 P. M Other days admission charged.

Myles Standish Cairn.

Squantum heights, erected in 1895 by the Daughters of the Revolution of Massachusetts, in memory of Captain Myles Standish and his men of Plymouth Colony, who landed here Sept 30, 1621, guided by the Indian Tisquantum.

Myles Standish Spring.

On the beach to the left and back of Squantum Inn. Spring of fresh cold water, where Standish and his party breakfasted and thence started to explore the country around Boston Bay

Squaw Rock.

Pile of rock, on which is a perfect head of a squaw, frequently mentioned in early Squantum history. Near by is also Sachem's Knoll.

GREAT DISPLAY OF CHOICE CORN

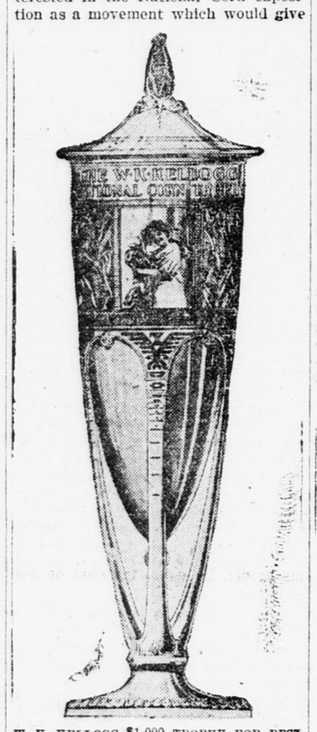
Three Miles of Prize Winning Ears Entered In the Third National Corn Exposition at the Nebraskan Capital.

Especially Instructive Exhibits From Several States --- Value and Scope of the American Breeders' Association.



By WALTON WILLIAMS.

HOW brains are making millions on the American farms, how meeting the seasons with common sense as well as brute force has resulted in giving the world more and better food, will be graphically shown at the third National Corn exposition in Omaha Dec. 6-18.

The United States government and twenty-five states have exhibits installed showing how the simplest form of science has produced types of plants for new as well as old lands, for arid as well as well watered regions, for altitudes as low as Louisiana swamps and as high as Wyoming and Montana tablelands 6,000 feet above the sea.

The government exhibit shows what the department of agriculture is doing for the people who till the land, what has been discovered by the bureau of animal industry, by the office of the plant breeder and those experts employed to eradicate injurious insects and diseases of plants and animals which annually destroy a billion dollars' worth of life and deprive the nation of that much new wealth.

Twenty-five of the states became interested in the National Corn exposition as a movement which would give them an opportunity to demonstrate to some 200,000 farmers how science is solving the problem of getting from the soil the greatest possible profits. Thus the states have installed their exhibits, and the farmers of the country who have been applying some of the methods first unfolded by the agricultural colleges have surrounded these exhibits with grains and grasses produced in all parts of the United States during the season of 1909.

Three miles of prize winning corn have been entered, the ears lying side by side on the exhibition shelves. In samples of one peck each more than a thousand bushels of thrashed grains—wheat, oats, rye, barley, seeds of clover, millet, timothy and alfalfa—await the scoring of the judges which will divide $50,000 in prizes and award a score of gold and silver trophies to those producing the best of each variety.

Chance to Buy Choice Corn.

When the exposition draws to a close all this prize winning grain, containing as it does the choicest blood streams of heredity in plant life, will be sold at auction. The influence of this choice seed on next year's crop and on production during years to come will give the nation thousands upon thousands of dollars of new wealth. The state exhibits are especially interesting, some of them showing the results of fifteen years' work by plant breeders in order to secure an improved variety of grain.

Wisconsin, for instance, has been working with barley. The experiment stations have secured fourteen varieties adapted to either feeding or brewing. Every variety has a pedigree running back as far as those of most farm animals. How these improved varieties were secured, the parent stock and the grain produced during 1909 are all shown, together with charts demonstrating the increased production.

The conservative estimates say Iowa increased the value of the corn crop $12,000,000 annually by instructing the farmers how to test their seed. In the exhibit at Omaha the state shows not only the five general soil types within the borders, but demonstrates how each must be handled to obtain either a profit or a loss. The soil chemist shows the farmers what fertilizers to use on these soils. Remarkable new varieties of hard winter wheat secured by breeding and adapted to central Iowa are also shown, while the engineering department has an exhibit dealing with the economic production of power on the farm.

Arkansas has a field of growing rice in its exhibit, and it is to be irrigated daily just as it would be in the vast fields of the south. Oklahoma shows 200 varieties of cotton and has a cotton gin to run every day separating the seed from the lint. Tennessee has a miniature phosphate quarry, a pulverizer and the machinery for applying this fertilizer to the fields when it is shown the soil needs phosphorus in its composition. Alfalfa has solved the problem of soil fertility and maintenance, and Kansas shows the effect of rotating this wonderful leguminous plant with corn.

Serum For Hog Cholera.

By persistent effort Missouri has secured the long looked for hog cholera serum. By its use one crop of hogs in four is saved from the ravages of the disease. In its exhibits Missouri shows how this serum is applied and the results of its application.

Indiana changes the chemical composition of corn at will, increasing or decreasing the oil, starch or protein content. Texas shows how cattle may be finished for the market without the use of corn, North Dakota how the new coming population may make a large profit the first year, South Dakota the results of experiments with various rations for cattle, Montana the dry farming systems, Colorado the results of breeding to secure a sugar beet with a greater sugar content, Wyoming the acclimating of plants from the lower altitudes, Illinois the results of a sweeping soil investigation and experiments with crop rotation, Delaware how a family can make more than a living on one of the small farms of little Delaware, and Minnesota the results of spending $40,000 in breeding wheat.

Prominent Men to Speak.

Besides seeing the exhibits, the visitors will have an opportunity to hear many authorities and thinkers, a program having been arranged for each day. Among the speakers are James J. Hill, builder of the northwest; Willet M. Hays, assistant secretary of agriculture; Gifford Pinchot, chief forester of the department of the interior, and John H. Worst, president of the North Dakota Agricultural college.

BEST EAR OF CORN IN THE WORLD, EXHIBITED AT THE NATIONAL CORN EXPOSITION.

Several foreign countries have exhibits at the exposition.

Value of the Breeders' Association.

A gathering that will be valuable to the National Corn exposition will be that of the American Breeders' association, which will also hold its sessions in Omaha. Its members are laboring to so handle the energy of heredity that the production of the earth in both animal and vegetable kingdoms may be greatly increased.

Not to plants alone will the meeting be devoted, but all those who are working to harness the forces of heredity—create new plants, maintain strains of highest excellence in live stock—will discuss progress and plans for the future.

One committee composed of from five to ten earnest students and practical workers will submit a report on swine breeding, while members of another committee will report on the present status of apple breeding in America. These are by no means extreme subjects. The association is almost universal in its scope. Another committee will report on breeding of fur bearing animals.

Willet H. Hays, assistant secretary of agriculture, is the secretary of the American Breeders' association and one of its founders. For years he has devoted much of his time and thought to the work of the association and has just now realized in it a great organization of workers who are building up American farm products by scientific breeding. Their meetings serve as a great clearing house for ideas where the workers in each division may give to those in other divisions the benefit of their work year by year. Thus one man has not only his own experience, but that of almost 2,000 others becomes his if he is in intimate communication with the American Breeders' association.

Oh, for the Boon of Perfect Health

So sighs the anæmic, sickly maiden, the victim of a dozen ills, that rack her body and destroy her beauty. The factory girl, the toiler, the waiting maid, the pampered daughter of a captain of industry, are alike in that they all suffer from disorders that rob them of their energy, their spirits, their animation, and make of them poor, despondent sufferers. What's to be done? Is there no remedy? Sure. And it is within the reach of all.

SURPRISE PARTY.

Relatives and friends to the number of thirty assembled at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Carl J. Johnson of Glendale road, and tendered them a surprise party Monday evening. And it was a surprise indeed, for when Mr. Johnson opened the door, a grand rush was made to get into the house. Rice and confetti flew in showers and the rooms were covered from one end to the other. A merry time was passed. Refreshments were served, not forgetting the cigars. All wished the happy couple many years of happiness in their new home.

EPWORTH LEAGUE OFFICERS.

The regular monthly business meeting and annual election of officers of Epworth League of the Hall Place M. E. church was held in the vestry of the church, Monday evening. The meeting was called to order by the president, Miss Francis. The minutes of the previous meetings, both regular and special, were read by the secretary, Miss Hannant and were approved. The treasurer's report for the past year was given and accepted. The first vice president, Miss Ada Williams, gave a general scope of the work of the spiritual department, The second vice-president, Miss Catharine Hodgkinson, has been very successful in raising funds for missionary work. The Mercy and Help work of the league under Miss May Williams, has been very helpful and highly appreciated.

A number of good, wholesome and helpful socials and entertainments have been given under the leadership of Miss Maud Hodgkinson, the fourth vice-president.

An invitation was extended to this league from the Mattapan league to attend the anniversary service. Plans were made for a handkerchief bazaar to be held some time before Christmas.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

President—Joseph Francis.
1st Vice President—Miss Ada Williams.
2d Vice President—Miss Katie Hodgkinson.
3d. Vice President—Miss May Williams.
4th Vice President—Miss Maud E. Hodgkinson.

HALL PLACE CHURCH.

Rev. C. H. Raupach, pastor of the Hall Place M. E. church took for his Sunday morning subject, "An ancient desire that should never grow old," the text being taken from the 67th Psalm, "God be merciful to us and bless us and cause His face to shine upon us, that thy way may be known upon earth thy saving health among all nations." At the close of the sermon, Master Leslie McCormick gave a recitation on the subject of No-License.

An increase in attendance was noted in both the Sunday school and Junior League services.

The Epworth League devotional service and the Sunday evening praise and Gospel services were omitted in favor of the No-License rally.

The Ladies' Aid will meet with Mrs. Goucher, Wednesday evening.

UNIVERSALIST CHURCH.

At the Universalist church on Sunday the congregation listened to a practical sermon on "Gratitude," by the pastor, Rev. C. L. Paddock.

WOLLASTON BAPTIST.

At the Sunday morning service the preaching was by the pastor. Text taken from Ex. 12-5: "Your lamb shall be without blemish." Emphasizing the fact that the lamb was typical of Christ. God demands and deserves the best that is in us. In conclusion Mr. Walther reminded his hearers that a man reaped what he sowed and that some day a book of remembrance would be opened and we would be judged according to our deeds.

The Sunday school in all its branches was largely attended. Five men were enrolled as members of the Walther Bible class.

The Junior Endeavor society is growing rapidly under the direction of Mrs. Kendall F. Harriman.

The Christian Endeavor was well attended. A collection was taken for the Y. M. C. A. fund.

Sunday evening at 7.30 there was a union No-License rally in which all the Wollaston churches participated. Rev. Carl G. Horst presided. The speakers were Clarence A. Warren of Chelsea, Edward Southworth and John L. Miller of Quincy.

WOLLASTON UNITARIAN.

At the morning service Sunday our pastor urged the members and friends of the church to attend the Wollaston No-License rally in the Baptist church in the evening and thus express by their presence their great interest in the success of No-License at the election on Tuesday. Let everybody pray and work for a big No-License vote. "If ye know these things, blessed are ye if ye do them."

Rev. and Mrs. Carl G. Horst are at home to receive callers Monday evenings.

A large number of the Young People's Religious Union are planning to attend the sessions of the Boston Federation of Y. P. R. U. at the First church of Boston, on Saturday at 3 and 7 P. M.

At the Young People's Religious Union meeting next Sunday evening an address on "Settlement work" will be given by Miss Persis Thompson. Louis Weston will conduct the devotional service.

An exhibit of all the new and recent publications of the American Unitarian Association may be seen at 4 Berlin street and a cordial invitation to examine them is extended to all booklovers.

The first of a series of vespers will be held the first Sunday in January.

Copies of President Charles W. Eliot's lecture on "The Religion of the Future" for free distribution may be found upon the table in the vestry.

Rehearsals for the Christmas entertainment by members of our Sunday school are progressing finely.

THE FAITHFUL.

At St. Chrysostom's church, Sunday morning, Rev. A. Edwin Clattenburg took for his text: Romans XV. 4—"Whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope." He said in part: "Mere possession of the Scriptures, or the mere reading of the same, will never satisfy God, or save your soul. Doubtless every person in the State has a copy of the Holy Word of God. It cannot be said that every person in the State uses it as it should be used.

"Books today for the most part are written to tickle our fancy, to fill up a dull hour of our time. The Book of Books was written for our learning, that we because of the patience and comfort spoken of therein might have hope in our own case. It is for you to say whether or not you will be among the remnant of the people that will furnish the spiritual seed for the next generation. The remnant will consist of the faithful. The faithful will be those who read, marked, and inwardly digested, so that they could work out in their lives, the teaching found in the Holy Word of God."

Dr. Manchester assisted the rector to administer holy communion.

At the evening service the third address on the life of Christ was given, the subject being "The silent years of Jesus."

AT ST. MARYS.

Services at St. Mary's church were held on Sunday at 6.45, 8, 9.15 and 10.30 A. M.

Masses were said by the Rev. Fr. Grady and Fr. Duffy, who gave short instructions. In the afternoon at 2 o'clock Sunday school was held and at 3 o'clock benediction of the most blessed sacrament.

Tuesday night at 8 o'clock will be the meeting of the Ladies Sadality, and the enrollment of new members, and after the meeting will be the regular Novena prayers.

Wednesday will be a holy day of obligation in honor of the feast of the Immaculate conception and in the morning masses will be said at 5, 7, and 8 o'clock. At night will be the closing of the Navena, followed by a sermon and benediction of the most blessed sacrament.

An opportunity is presented to Quincy people to acquaint themselves with the merits of the Capell Self-heating Gas Irons. It is being demonstrated at No. 6 Washington street by J. W. Carle who has the iron on sale in Quincy and vicinity. Its economical advantages (costing but two cents per day) convenient and ornate appearance, simplicity and durability of construction, combined with the manufactuer's guarantee as to reliability will appeal to those who might be interested in a self heating iron.

Election Extra of Daily Ledger at 6 o'clock tonight.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVORERS

Attend a Union Social at Wollaston

About 250 Christian Endeavorers from Quincy and neighboring towns, members of the East Norfolk Union, enjoyed the hospitality of the local society on Monday evening at a social at the Wollaston Baptist church.

The evening opened with a hand-shaking contest, each trying to wear out a paper bag upon his right hand in this way. Games followed and refreshments were served by the following young ladies, in charge of Miss Eleanor Dunn: Miss Winifred Church, Miss Winifred Baker Miss Grace Schermerhorn Miss Marion Corey, Miss Clara Porter, Miss Anna Gould and Miss Louise Nash.

At the business meeting in charge of the president of the union, Victor E. Landstrom, the reports of the secretary and treasurer were read and the roll call taken.

The evening's program was in charge of H. J. Christopher, president of the local society, who after a most humorous and hearty speech of welcome told of the real meaning of Christian Endeavor and made a plea for better living.

In the entertainment which followed Miss Edna G. Ormsby gave several readings, among them "The Queen of Sheba's prayer" "Miss Abbie's ride" and "Soft soap." Vocal solos were pleasingly rendered by Charles M. Kempton, and Miss May Critchley contributed several piano selections.

In the contest for the attendance banner the award went to the First Presbyterian society with 56 out of 59 members attending. Second choice went to the Park and Downs society. The evening closed with a benediction by the Rev. Joseph Walther, pastor of the church.

NEW CHURCH OF ADVENTISTS

Will Probably Be Completed This Month

The Swedish Seventh Day Adventists have nearly completed their new church at 129 School street. The walls are now being plastered, and doors and windows will be put in this week. This edifice will cost about $3,500 and is attractive in architecture. The auditorium is on the street floor, and below there is a basement wholly above ground which will be used by the Sabbath School and for class rooms. There is also a tenement for the janitor in the basement. The building will be lighted with gas, and heated by furnaces which are already in use. Rev. J. H. Anderson is the pastor. It is expected that the church will be completed before Jan. 1.

CALL ACCEPTED.

Rev. D. M. Wilson, formerly of Quincy, was held in high esteem at Northfield, where he has just resigned his pastorate to accept a call extended to him by the ancient First Parish in Kennebunk, Me. This last week a farewell reception, largely attended by people of all denominations, was given Mr. and Mrs. Wilson.

The Masonic lodge of Northfield, of which Mr. Wilson is a member, presented him with a fine sterling silver loving cup, and the Fortnightly a literary society of ladies, bestowed a beautiful gold brooch, mounted with opals, to Mrs. Wilson. The installation of Mr. Wilson at Kennebunk will take place on the afternoon of Dec. 16.

TEST OF STEAMER.

Chief Engineer Peter J. Williams desires to extend an invitation to all members of the City Council to meet at the corner of Quincy avenue and Water street, Wednesday afternoon at 2 o'clock at which time the new steamer will be tried out.

Death on the Guillotine.

Sardou, in order to be present at the execution of Tropman in January, 1875, spent the night before with La Roquette, the prison director. In his description he says: "At daybreak the guests went out upon the cold, bleak execution place, where the guillotine had already been erected. The bedraggled crowd, which had spent the night in drinking places, sang ribald songs and from time to time shouted for Deibler, the executioner, who meanwhile was explaining the mechanism. The basket in which the head was to drop was brought, and while looking at it I was horrified to see the lid arise and a human form emerge. 'Don't worry,' said Deibler, with a smile; 'that is only my wife, who wanted to see the execution, and I chose the simplest way to secure a good place for her.'" Clemenceau saw Emile Henry decapitated on May 22, 1894, in his capacity as a journalist, and, describing how the culprit was dragged to the machine, strapped upon the plank and there tortured by awaiting the pleasure of Deibler till the knife finally ended it all, said that the "horror of it" made him sick.

Why Blinds Were Drawn.

The Edinburgh landlady of the seventies who astounded James Payn by her stern determination to have the blinds drawn closely down on the Sabbath was but carrying on the traditions of her great-grandparents. The Scot of the early eighteenth century had a reason for drawing his blinds on Sunday. Mr. Thompson in his "Weaver's Craft" gives it. "Sometimes the minister himself," he wrote, "when he got a colleague to preach for him would make the rounds, accompanied by an elder, to spy with his own eyes the sins of the absentees. Here one man is found romping with his bairns, another as the minister peeped through the window was detected kissing his wife, two men were found drinking ale, and one was found with his coat off, as if he were going to work, and still another was seen eating a hearty dinner. All were pulled up before the session of the kirk and repentance forced upon each."—London Standard.

Bread and Cheese.

A couple advanced in years got married lately.

The husband had a room in the house securely locked, the inside of which his wife had never seen, and, being curious of its contents, she begged again and again to see the room.

At last he consented, and, lo and behold, the room was full of whole cheeses!

He explained matters by telling her that for every sweetheart he had in his young days he bought a cheese.

His wife began to cry.

"Don't cry, dear," he said. "I've had no sweethearts since I met you."

"It's not that," she replied, still sobbing. "I only wish I had been as thoughtful as you and bought a loaf of bread for every man that kissed me. We could have had bread and cheese enough to last us all our days."—London Tit-Bits.

Trouble For Creditors.

Even the simplest law transactions seem to be beyond the comprehension of some people. An old farmer went into a grocer's shop a short time ago, ordered a sovereign's worth of goods and when they were ready for delivery laid down a five shilling piece in payment thereof.

The shopkeeper called out, "Here, this isn't right!" as the customer started to leave.

"Oh, yes, that's all right," replied the man. "I've got permission from the judge to pay 5 shillings in the pound."

A heated discussion revealed that the man had lately settled an insolvency upon this basis and expected to continue that method indefinitely. When he was shown his mistake he was very indignant and evidently considered himself a much abused man.—London Globe.

She Wasn't Superstitious.

"Mary, Mary," cried Mrs. Johnson to her maid, "what shall I do? I've just had a most dreadful accident and don't know what's going to happen. I've broken my new hand glass, and you know how unlucky it is to break a looking glass. It means seven years' unhappiness."

"Lor,' mum," replied Mary, "don't you set no heed on that. Look at me. I'm not fretting, and I've just broken the large pier glass in the drawing room."—London Fun.

Leftover Material.

Barbara, aged four, had always been allowed to make small cakes out of the scraps of dough left from the morning's baking, so one morning after being sent to gather the eggs she came running in with a very tiny one and exclaimed: "Oh, mamma, see this little egg! It must be that's all the dough the hen had left!"—Delineator.

Ups and Downs.

"The world is full of ups and downs," quoted the wise guy. "That's right," agreed the simple mug. "We are either trying to live up to a good reputation or trying to live a bad one down."—Philadelphia Record.

A Piano Club.

COWED BY MOSQUITOES.

A Clergyman's Experience on a British Columbia Trip.

In 1860 the Rev. John Sheepshanks, later on the bishop of Norwich, was traveling through British Columbia. His book, "A Bishop In the Rough," relates his experiences on the Douglas trail, where the greatest discomfort was caused by the swarms of ferocious mosquitoes. He met with Indians covered with paint, carrying branches of trees in their hands, which they were sweeping around them as they walked. They were evacuating their country, being temporarily driven out by these pests. If by chance a traveler arrived at a clearing or an open space where there appeared to be an immunity from them, ere long they would appear.

"Quite early in the morning after meeting those Indians I issued from my tent and found an open space on the river's side where I could get my bath. But no sooner had I emerged from the water than I found swarms of mosquitoes assailing me, and, do what I would, slaughter them by dozens, I suffered severely.

"It was on that same day, dining at a wayside house, that I took part in a scene which I can never forget. There were twenty-five men going up to the mines. Food was on the table. There was a ceaseless hum in the apartment, for it was literally brown with thousands of mosquitoes.

"It was swelteringly hot, yet every man had made himself as impervious as he could. Each man wore his coat buttoned up, strings were fastened round his cuffs, and trousers also if he had not on top boots. They had gauntlets on their hands, their hats were on, and veils hanging down covered face and neck. A man would stick his fork into a piece of meat and pop in under the veil as quickly as possible. When drinking their coffee the men would hold the cup underneath the veil, first clearing out the bodies of the mosquitoes which possibly had been feeding upon the hairy miner close at hand.

"Not a word was uttered during that brief meal, for we were beaten down and cowed by the insects. The first words spoken were by a miner in pushing away his chair from the table, 'Oh, this God forsaken country!'"

ABSENTMINDED.

The Dinner to Which Wills, the Artist, Invited a Friend.

Mr. Wills, the artist, was renowned for his absentmindedness, and the following story, says Henrietta Cockran in her book, "Celebrities and I," was told of him by a friend: "Wills invited me to dinner one afternoon when I met him in the Strand. I accepted, reminding him that as he was absentminded he had better make a note of the evening. As he had no paper in his pocket, he wrote the date on his shirt cuff.

"When the appointed evening arrived I went to his studio. The door was opened by Wills, and I could see that he had forgotten all about the appointment.

"'Ah, old fellow,' he exclaimed, 'do not be too hard on me. The cuff went to the wash and the date with it. But there is a fowl in the pot boiling here,' continued Mr. Wills. 'Just come in and wait a few minutes.'

"I had my misgivings, but walked inside and sat upon the only chair not crowded with paint brushes and palettes.

"After waiting for about twenty minutes, feeling deucedly hungry, I groaned. This had its effect.

"He exclaimed in a dreamy voice, 'The fowl must be boiled by this time,' and, coming forward, he lifted the lid of the pot and peered inside. 'It is very odd,' he remarked, 'but I cannot see the fowl. Extraordinary! No one has been here, so the bird cannot have been stolen.'

"Well, the long and short of it is that a week or two later I called again at the studio, noticed a peculiar odor and discovered the fowl wrapped up in a piece of paper.

"'Ah!' said Wills. 'Now I know how it all happened. When the fowl was brought in there came a smart visitor—Lady G.—about sitting for her portrait. I must have thrown the fowl behind a canvas and forgotten about it.'"

Kissing the Book.

In England and all the English speaking countries the kissing of the book before the oath comes from the practice of touching a "halidame," or sacred object, as the old Roman touched the altar or Harold the casket of relics. The form "So help me God" is inherited from ancient Teutonic-Scandinavian law, under which the old northmen, touching the blood daubed ring on the altar, swore, "So help me Frey and Niordh and the Almighty God"—that is, Thor. The first and last of these are the two old English gods, whose names we keep up in Friday and Thursday.—New York American.

Why Women's Minds Are Cleaner.

"Of course women should vote," he said. "Women deserve the suffrage as much as men—more, because their minds are purer and cleaner."

"Cleaner?" cried the sweet young thing he had taken in to dinner. "Of course they are, ever and ever so much cleaner! But how do you know that?"

"Because they change them so much oftener," said he solemnly.—Exchange.

In Doubt.

Mrs. Meadow (at Paris hotel)—Ooo! There's a fly in this soup!

Mr. Meadow (who has traveled a little)—Hush, Miranda; don't speak so loud! No use exposin' our ignorance. This bill of fare is all in French, and mebby we ordered fly soup.—London Tit-Bits.

MR. ATWOOD'S LETTER

Resigns to Go to New York Pastorate

In resigning his pastorate at the Quincy Point church on Sunday Rev. Alfred Ray Atwood wrote the following letter which was read at both services:

To the Washington Street Congregational Church and Society, Quincy Mass.

My Dear Friends:—You called me, over four years ago to be your minister. For the courtesy you have shown to me; for the cooperation you have given to me; for the kindnesses you have manifested to myself and family, especially to my father, brightening his last days by your appreciative statements of his and his son's efforts, I thank you. Daily as I have borne your needs to God's altar, I have said,

"The lines are fallen unto me in pleasant places;
Yea I have a goodly heritage."

The time has now come when I believe I am carrying out the will of God by asking you to release me from this pastorate, Dec. 31, 1909.

Pastoral bonds are not easily severed. Love lingers where affection is. My best heritage is the esteem of your hearts. Your friendship has helped me. "I love Thy kingdom, Lord; The House of Thine abode," and the people who frequent His house and who belong to His kingdom.

It is expedient that I go away, but you will ever have my prayers and my love. Your loyalty, labor and love have made my pastorate joyful.

Rev. Alfred Ray Atwood.

Quincy, Dec. 4 1909.

NEW ENGLAND SECRETARY.

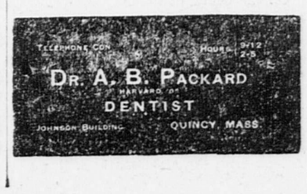
Rev. William E. Gardner recently pastor of Christ church, Quincy, has resigned the rectorship of St. James' Episcopal church North Cambridge, to become secretary for the missionary council of New England for the Episcopal church, with headquarters in Boston. His resignation will take effect on Feb. 1, 1910.

Mr. Gardner has been in the priesthood about a dozen years. He is author of "The History of Christianity," published several years ago.



In 1903 after serving four and one half years as rector of the church of the Holy Name, Swampscott, Rev. Mr. Gardner became rector of Christ church, Quincy where he remained until July, 1908. Since Aug. 1, 1908, he has been rector of St. James' church, North Cambridge.

GRAY HAIRS BANISHED.

The old idea of using sage for darkening the hair is again coming in vogue. Our grandmothers used to have dark, glossy hair at the age of seventy-five, while our mothers have white hair before they are fifty. Our grandmothers used to make a "sage tea" and apply it to their hair. The tea made their hair soft and glossy and gradually restored the natural color. One objection to using such a preparation was the trouble of making it, especially as it had to be made every two or three days on account of it souring quickly. This objection has been overcome and by asking almost any first-class druggist for Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur the public can get a superior preparation of sage, with the admixture of sulphur, another valuable remedy for hair and scalp troubles. Daily use of this preparation will not only quickly restore the color of the hair but will also stop the hair from falling out and make it grow. It is sold by all druggists for 50c. and $1.00 a bottle, or is sent direct by the Wyeth Chemical Company, 74 Cortlandt St., New York City, upon receipt of price.

While Waiting

A Chance Meeting and What Happened Between Trains.

By SARA G. IGLEHEART

Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.

"Two days' limit," said Willis Bates as he looked doubtfully at the ticket. "Can I make it in that time?"

"Yes," and the agent pushed some change through the window and waited expectantly for the next man in the line, "we make close connections. Ten minutes stop at Columbia and twenty at Charlotte for dinner. Jacksonville's Nine-ten." And Bates felt himself pushed unceremoniously aside by a portly man, who was eager to exchange a banknote for the ticket which was being stamped.

"That's your train on the outside track," the agent called warningly. "Better hurry."

As this advice was accentuated by a sharp "All aboard!" and a rush of a few belated passengers toward the outside track, Bates snatched up his hand bag and sprang forward.

"Whew, that was certainly a close connection!" he said grimly as he swung himself on the rear car of the moving train. "If I keep on at this rate I'll get through in time for the sale, and that will mean a thousand dollars in my pocket. Lucky I thought of it."

The parlor car was full, so Bates went on until he found a seat with a loquacious, insistent hotel runner. Just across was a bright looking woman in a plain traveling suit, and he glanced at her with sudden, half recognizing inquiry.

But a traveler is always running across faces that look familiar, and his attention was soon engrossed in warding off the advances of the hotel runner.

The train rushed on with the vehement, noisy impetuosity peculiar to southern trains, as though striving to give an impression of terrific speed, and the fine South Carolina dust sifted in through the windows and spread thickly over the dingy plush seats, calling forth handkerchiefs and impatient exclamations from the passengers and swirling now and then into angry clouds at the feeble onslaught of the train boy's broom.

Once he noticed the woman of the opposite seat looking at him inquiringly, as though she, too, was trying to recall something familiar. But when he turned to her she was gazing from the window.

At Columbia he spent the ten minutes in a forced defense of politics and at Charlotte was glad to leave his companion and join the rush toward the railroad restaurant. As a general thing he avoided such places. There were apt to be poor food and service, and not infrequently one was served so late that he could only snatch a few mouthfuls before it was time to hurry for the train.

But here he was agreeably disappointed, and when he went to the desk near the door to leave his 75 cents it was with a feeling of satisfaction at not having been imposed upon. Outside he looked at his watch. It still lacked five minutes of train time, so he walked leisurely down the platform.

As he turned to come back he found himself face to face with the woman who sat opposite him in the car. For a moment they gazed squarely into each other's eyes, then both started forward.

"Aren't you Charlie Holbrook?" the woman asked eagerly. "I thought I knew you on the train."

"Yes, and you are, or was, Alice Durfee," Bates said, no less eagerly. "My, but I'm glad to meet you! Let me see, it's eighteen years since I left the old village, and I haven't seen a soul from there since. How are they all—your mother, and Henry Taber, and my cousin, Bob Bates? Bob's the only kin I have, but he and I never did get on well together. Oh, I beg your pardon"—hurriedly—"I forgot."

"My mother died ten years ago," she answered steadily. "After that I came south and have only been back once since. Henry Taber had the postoffice the last I knew, and Bob"—

There was a significant movement across the platform, and Bates glanced at his watch.

"It's time to get on board!" he exclaimed. "We'll finish our talk in the car."

But the woman drew back.

"This isn't my train," she said. "I wait here two hours."

"Really!" with sudden dismay in his voice. "Why, I was counting on a good long talk. Is Bob—your husband—along?"

She looked surprised.

"I don't know what you mean," she answered. "I have never married. I came south ten years ago in search of work and have been teaching school ever since. You'll miss your train."

It was already gliding down the platform, but he neither noticed it nor her warning. In his eyes was an expression of incredulous inquiry.

"Isn't Bob Bates"—

She motioned toward the train.

"You'll miss it!" she cried again; then her hand dropped to her side. "There; it is too late! Was it very important?" anxiously.

"Yes—no—that is, I guess so," he answered indifferently. "A thousand dollars, I believe."

A man with the emblematic S. R. on his cap came down the platform, and Bates called him with a gesture.

"How long before the next train north?" he demanded.

"An hour and forty minutes."

"Good!" turning to her, with beaming satisfaction. "And you have to wait two hours. That will give us plenty of time to talk. Now," with a strange eagerness in his voice, "do you mean to tell me that you did not marry Bob Bates the fall I left?"

"Certainly I did not," wonderingly. "I never married anybody, much less Bob Bates. I never liked that man."

"Strange, and he told me"—

"What?" she demanded sharply.

"Why, that you were promised to him and that—well, what he told me was the cause of my leaving and of my not communicating with any one in the old village during all these years. And to think"— Here a truck load of trunks was pushed rapidly toward them, and they were forced aside. Bates caught the eye of a waiting hackman and nodded. A moment later the carriage stood beside the platform, with the driver holding open the door for them to enter.

"A station platform is no place to talk," said Bates genially. "Suppose we take a drive through some of the quiet streets of the city. We have plenty of time." Then he looked at her with a new thought in his eyes.

"I didn't see you in the"— he began, then added hastily, "You haven't had dinner, I suppose."

"No," hesitating and flushing a little, "I"—

"Oh, I understand," quickly. "You are like me and can't put up with the makeshifts of a railroad restaurant. Now, I'll tell you what," unblushingly, "I'm about as hungry as a man can be. There's a nice hotel in back somewhere. We'll go to that and have dinner, and then we'll drive about the city and talk until train time."

There was hesitation, almost refusal, on her face; but, feigning not to notice it, he urged her into the carriage and then sprang in himself and motioned for the driver to close the door.

An hour passed and then a half hour, and soon after a train rumbled into the station and then rumbled away. Twenty minutes more and another train arrived and departed. As it disappeared the carriage again whirled up beside the station.

"Has my train gone?" the woman asked anxiously as she reached the platform.

Bates took out his watch and looked at it meditatively.

"I'm afraid it has," he answered, "and my train, too, with its possible thousand dollars. We've been gone a little over two hours. Driver," severely, "you ought not to have taken us so far."

There was grave concern in his voice, but in his eyes was a sly twinkle, which she did not notice. The driver twirled his hat apologetically in one hand, but into the other a generous tip had been slipped, so he was silent.

"It is really too bad," Bates continued sympathetically. "There is only one more train out today, and that goes toward Richmond. But I'll tell you what," as though struck by a sudden solution of the problem, "suppose we take that. You know what you have promised me at the end of three months. Now, what is the use of waiting that long? You have no people, and I have none, and if you go back to that school you have been telling me about it will be to unappreciative employers and at wages that will scarce pay your expenses. I have a good house waiting for somebody to look after it and more money in the bank than I know what to do with. Now, my idea is for us to go to a minister. You know where a minister lives, don't you?" to the driver.

"Yis, sorr," grinning.

"And then come back and take the train for Richmond. It is a very nice city, and you are bound to like it. How does the scheme strike you?"

Evidently it struck her unfavorably or as something too astounding to admit even of a reply.

"Good!" he said beamingly. "Silence means consent. Now we will drive back to the hotel and write a couple of letters. You tell the school committee that unforeseen circumstances prevented your returning, and I will write that the same kind of circumstances have kept me from attending the sale. Come."

She parted her lips as though to protest and even tried to draw back, but her heart was with this man who had been so much to her youth and who had returned, and in the end she entered the carriage with him and the door was again closed by the driver.

It is said that the groom is usually the one to show trepidation at a wedding, but in this case it was the bride. In a twinkling the whole course of her life had been turned. She was being transformed from a schoolteacher to a wife. But in her breast was that satisfaction at being permitted to give up that struggle with the world which is natural to men and usually distasteful to women. Instead a vision glimmered before her eyes—a vision of home, husband and children—and, despite such gasps as one will take at being swung over a precipice, she was happy.

An hour later this driver was standing on the platform of the station watching the train rumble away toward Richmond. Not until it had disappeared did he climb back to his box and drive toward home. Bridget, his wife, was preparing supper when he came in from the stable.

"Och, Pat," she called in sudden apprehension, "how come yez so soon? It is bad luck ye've been havin' the day?"

"Troth, no, Biddy," catching her in his arms and swinging her about the room and then slipping a crisp new ten dollar bill in her hand. "That's for the new clothes the childers made."

FIELD OF WOMAN

American Beauty Favored by King Edward—To Teach Teutons the Art of Making Flapjacks. Uncle Sam's Loyal Daughters.

MRS. DANDRIDGE SPOTSWOOD, a New York society woman, is an acknowledged American beauty. While she is well known in the fashionable set of her city, she has recently become more generally known by her success in being received by the royal folk of England. She was the guest in London of Lady Paget at the latter's house, Coombe Warren, Kingston-on-the-Thames, and it was there she was presented to King Edward during the past summer. She was at the English Derby, and her remarkable beauty was the subject of favorable comment. After the great race she was presented by the king with a costly jeweled frog. Mrs. Spotswood returned to New York city after her London visit. In addition to her comeliness, Mrs. Spotswood is noted for her vivacious wit. She is one of the notably gowned women at all important social functions. Before her marriage she was Miss Katherine von Wolff.

American Flapjacks In Germany.

Mrs. Norma Knupfel-Lutge, in spite of her Teutonic name, is an American born woman and proud of it and all its ways and women. She is known in this country as a manager of musical enterprises. She was the manager for Daniel Frohman of Kubelik when the latter made his first tour in America. She is to have charge of American home ideas which will be exhibited at the Berlin exposition next year. Characteristic American kitchens will be seen in her department in the act of turning out American flapjacks, corned beef hash, pumpkin pies and other good things familiar to the American housekeeper. She will also exhibit the toggery worn by American women and show how it is made. Another feature of the department under her direction will be a batch of American beauties, sometimes called Gibson girls, although there are other types of American beauty. She will have all the space necessary to make her concession one of the most interesting features of the big German show.

True Americans Abroad.

Lady Paget, who before her marriage was Miss Stevens, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Paran Stevens, is one of the American women who remain proud of their country. Not long ago at a dinner in London at which Lady Paget was present some one remarked that, in spite of her long residence in England, she had never forgotten her American accent. Lady Paget overheard the remark and replied, "No, and I thank God that I never will." Other noted American women who have attained titles, but who still speak as Americans, are the dowager Duchess of Manchester and Mrs. Cornwallis West. Their popularity with the king is largely due to the fact that they have not tried to ape the English mannerisms of speech. The person, man or woman, who honors his or her country by remaining true to its customs and mannerisms always commands respect abroad. Put that on your card when you go abroad.

MARCIA WILLIS CAMPBELL.

Aptness of American Girls.

Mrs. Emily Post, the novelist, who has a beautiful home at Tuxedo Park, N. Y., says that the American girl who marries the foreigner in politics soon learns as much of such matters as the foreign woman does and is remarkably adaptable and interesting. She thinks this goes to show what women of this country might do if they would convince the men that their interest is not a fad or a passing fancy, but an earnest, well thought out desire to be of use to home and husband and therefore to state and country.

Mrs. Clara A. Lucas of Chicago has offered 4,000 acres of Colorado land to be used as a farm for criminals who may be sent out of Illinois to work.

IN FASHION'S REALM.

(From New York Times.)

This season, as for several previous seasons, there is the usual variety of modes and mixtures of periods, in the costumes and gowns worn from morning to evening, and dinner in public and private, at the theatre, the opera, and the various other affairs that make up the round of social life.

Even the old time separate blouse has been resurrected to the extent that it is considerably more worn than for a year or so, although it is by no means, as smart, even for the street, with the coat and skirt combination as the one-piece slip and coat. These blouses, however, should largely match the skirt in coloring ,or in part of it at least. But even now, with ample pocket books and endless models to choose from there are still fashionable women who like the lingerie blouse, rich in real lace, perhaps, or the plain linen waist, to wear with the tailored coat and skirt during the morning hours, although none but the tall, slight woman can afford to cut herself in half and shorten herself apparently by several inches.

Fortunately short skirts, even for formal visiting and evening gowns, are smarter than those that trail and although never so graceful as their longer sisters, the short skirt has the inestimable advantage of cleanliness and of safety, for the trailing skirt was ever a menace in its ankle-winding and foot-entrapping properties. Then, too, and that is a matter quite as often taken into consideration by the extremely wealthy as well as those only moderately provided with money, short skirts wear longer, need cleaning less often, and are, therefore, much less expensive.

Half-length sleeves, or those coming just over the elbows, are the latest from Paris for late afternoon and informal evening affairs, and are much worn when made up in opera and dancing frocks.

For formal receptions, bridge, and other afternoon functions the sleeves may be either long ,with often a small puff of diaphanous material at the elbows, and the lower half of lace or net; or the three-quarter length, or ending perhaps, three inches below the elbows.

The full-length sleeves are, generally speaking, patchy affairs made of several different materials, including first the satin or other material of the gown over the upper arm with a small transparent puff of chiffon or chiffon cloth over the elbows ,this matching the color of the gown material, and then a strip of embroidery followed by a tight-fitting section of lace or embroidered net finished at the bottom with a band of embroidery, braiding or gold or silver lace and a fold or two of satin. It takes a long and slender arm to carry this combination, or even half of it, successfully, but as the American girls all too often have thin arms, illy developed above the elbows, it is not a bad style for them.

The round, plump, tapering arm with small wrist and dainty hand is best set off with thin, plain sleeves as devoid of all ornamentation as possible, a little lace or net matching the material and not spoiling the effect.

The use of fur in trimming gowns is one of the prettiest fashions that has ever obtained for winter costumes. Fur is quite as effective when used as a finish for chiffon as for velvet or cloth.

Skunk is one of the very best wearing furs; it is also handsome and now far from cheap, owing to the push the Parisians gave it when two years ago they commenced making it almost the most fashionable fur. Skunk by anw other name sounds far sweeter, and one may call it by its French name of leutre, or Alaska sable, or marten, if one prefers. Raccoon is the fur, next to real marten, that most closely approaches skunk when dyed, in appearance or wear, but the hair is much shorter, scantier and coarser.

Mink is an ideal fur for trimming, owing to its beautiful shadings, but it fades far too quickly, and loses its soft wood brown tone and takes on red and yellow tinges that cheapen it wonderfully. Fine thin mink in the brown shadings makes charming semi-long ,cutaway coats, and the one worn by Mrs. Alfred Wagstaff, Jr., is one of the prettiest seen this year the stripes running to conform with the natural lines of the figure and the coat long enough not to cut the figure in two.

The season so far has been so warm that comparatively few fur coats and wraps have been seen, although for carriage and motor wear they are of course more or less worn.

The warmth of fur garments has always been much overrated, for in a climate like this cloth coats interlined with lambs wool are quite as warm for walking and for all ordinary wear. One reason, perhaps, being that they may be shaped to fit the figure closely and yet not be cumbersome and awkward, as fur almost invariably is, unless it be broad tail.

The woman whose purse is not as well filled as some of her richer sisters can have her broadcloth coat interlined with lambs' wool and be quite as warm and far smarter looking, in the sense of grace and line than her richer sister in her chinchilla or other fur coat.

For motoring, where long, cumbersome garments do not matter, fur is warmer, because the skin is impenetrable by the driving, biting wind, although personally the writer, who has tried both fur and the lambs' wool, prefers the latter, even for motoring on a cold day, and, after having worn long sealskin coats and coats of cloth, fur lined, and caracul coats, has found the lambs' wool interlining warmer on a bitter day.

Dark colors are much in vogue this season for evening dancing frocks for the younger set, and deep tones of blue in sapphire shades, vivid emerald and soft apple greens, glowing golden browns, rich violet, and other colors in liberty satins or other soft silks, in chiffon ,and net over white, will be much seen. Properly selected and handled, a dull-colored girl may be made brilliantly attractive in these colors, and the average observer will ascribe the vivid color tones as partially, at least, belonging to the girl herself, and not to her skillful gowning.

The madness for everything Russian is growing daily with the designers. It began with the advent of the Czar's dancers in Paris, and it is now accepted as the leading note in every part of fashion.

The fact that we shall see Anna Pawlowa, the ballet leader, over here this winter intensifies American interest in these marvelous Russian styles.

The military turban is the most heralded and the least important. It is swamped in a sea of other turbans, called by half a dozen different names, and lending themselves to a dozen separate shapes.

Of these the Uhlan and the Oriental are possibly the preferred ones.

The Cossack hat has its place among them, and it will be chosen by the woman who will have her new tailor suit made with a long Russian blouse instead of a coat.

This garment promises to be in the lead, and it looks especially well in the rough, shaggy fabrics that the shops offer today instead of the once prevalent broad-cloth. These have a zibeline finish that, in itself is suggestive of the bitter Moscow winters.

This blouse panders to the demand for extra length in all top garments; it fastens at the left side from shoulder to hem with flat buttons, and is belted in with a broad band of soft patent leather. Sometimes velvet or ribbed silk is preferred.

The belt is loose and drops a line or two below the usual waistline, back and front, showing that the Moyen Age styles remain with us. The collar is high, if one wishes, but the correct thing is to have a round, rolling one that fits the neckband and does not meet in front. Young girls have the band finished off a trifle low in the neck, and wear a wide Dutch collar of fur as an accessory.

The features that were borrowed directly from the Russian dancers, and that will rule the season, are furs and metal fabrics. The former will trim gowns in every way the designer can invent.

It will go on street suits, house gowns, and ball gowns of the most gauzelike weaves. Whether it is precious or semiprecious, matters not, It must be there, that is all.

Just how women will walk or dance in the massive metal fabrics designed for house wear will be solved when the social season opens.

Last winter it was silver and gold; this season, are added bronze, copper, steel jet, crystal, and every hue of colored beads. Vestments, bodice shields, girdles and sleeves, are these ponderous and massive embroideries.

Women will clash like cymbals when they walk across the room.

—There is urgent need for a great awakening of a keener sense of civic responsibility, so that men of ability and reputation should come forward more readily to take their part in local affairs.—Sanitary Record.

CHAPTER X.

THE BATTLE'S ON.

"GENTLE knocked and entered.

"Ah, how is Mr. Gentle," said Haggleton, putting down his hat again, "and what brings him here?"

"I'll come right to the point, Mr.—Mr. Jackson." Gentle glanced around him cautiously. "I want to have it out with you before Philip comes in."

"I expect him later on to report on our bakeshop organization."

"Ah! And you ask what the trouble is! There you have it! We have nothing but bakeshops here, nothing but schemes for making money. I wanted you to study the problems of poverty with Philip"—

"Pardon me. That was not our arrangement. Understand, I am a poor man hustling for a living."

"A poor man! It's a wonder no one has recognized you yet!"

"The newspapers say I am away on my yacht. Nobody knows that I'm down here; nobody is looking for me."

"But Philip knows."

"Philip will be silent."

"That's the trouble, Mr. Haggleton. He's too much interested."

"The use of it is that it will help me to win my son. And he is worth winning. Besides, it has another use—as an object lesson to all you kickers. Look at this room and think what it was."

Haggleton looked significantly around at the evidence of his driving power. His eye stopped at the two windows facing the East river, with their view of Brooklyn bridge.

"By the way," he asked, "what's the matter with joining these two little windows into one large observation window? We shall have the finest view in the city."

"What about the landlord?" asked Gentle.

"The landlord never objects to improvements in the property if the tenant pays for them. We'll pay for that window."

"Philip is demoralized," grumbled Gentle.

"Mr. Gentle, you are just getting acquainted with him. He's my son."

"He is fascinated by the idea that John J. Haggleton is doing this extraordinary thing."

"Just so, Mr. Gentle. And he will be more fascinated when he knows why John J. Haggleton undertook to do it."

"It was a clever move."

"No. It has turned out to be a clever move. I am gaining ground with the boy every day, but that's not why I am doing it. I am sixty years old, Mr. Gentle, and used to my comforts. Do you think I'd stand all this because it was a clever move? No, sir! I stayed down here on account of a few little words that my son fired at me. He looked me straight in the eyes and said, 'You've got to do your own loving yourself.' Heavens! That hit me hard! I'm not getting sentimental. I'm going to fight you for all I'm worth, Mr. Gentle, but when you've played your last card and told my boy the worst you can tell about me, then, anyhow, he's got to know that his father came down here and lived in a tenement"—

He stopped a moment.

"Because his father wanted to do his own loving himself."

"Yet you would influence him to be hard and selfish."

"I want him to be a fine business man."

"And I," rejoined Gentle slowly, "want him to be a fine man."

"H'm! I don't expect my son to be a business man and nothing else. I'm glad to have him study these problems of poverty. All I ask is that you and he be reasonable. Suppose we draw up a plan that will satisfy all of us. I'll put up one million, two millions, five millions, if we can work out some sound scheme of public betterment."

"Five millions?" gasped Gentle.

"Yes, sir, five millions. And I should want the work of carrying out such a scheme, the executive work, to be in your hands."

Gentle reflected. It was a great chance for him, and—what touched him far more—a great chance for the poor. What could he not do with so much money? A sudden thought struck Gentle. Oh, ho, here was the nigger in the wood pile. John J. was John J. still.

"Then Philip would know his father?"

"Of course."

"And his mother? What about her?"

Haggleton was ready for him. He never made a proposition without having prepared it in all details, foreseen all objections. So now he answered readily:

"We will tell Philip that there was trouble years ago between his mother and me. I'll admit that I was much in the wrong—absorbed in business; too keen about money. That ought to fix it."

"Oh, no, not with Philip. It is too vague. He must know exactly what the trouble was."

"Out with it!" exclaimed Haggleton.

"You mean that Philip must see that statement."

"I mean that justice must be done to a noble woman."

But Haggleton presented his arguments with restrained vehemence.

"You talk about my wife and the wrong I did. I can't atone to her, can I? For she is dead! If I atone to anybody I've got to pay to the living, have I not? After all, that was what his mother wanted—to have Philip do good with my money. Now he'll do more good than she ever dreamed of. I'll put aside—what did I say? Five millions? I'll put aside ten millions for a great battle against poverty!"

"Ten millions!"

"Ten millions, but not one dollar unless I get my son."

"There still remains your wife's statement," said Gentle.

"You are bound by your promise to see her wish carried out, are you not?" argued Haggleton. "Now, if it is accomplished without the statement"—

"See! You think that I ought to destroy it?"

"Don't you?"

Haggleton followed up the advantage already won.

"You have considered yourself and my dead wife in the matter," he pointed out. "But what about Philip? Suppose he preferred not to see this statement—suppose he hesitated? You would advise against it, would you not?"

"In the circumstances I—I think I would."

Haggleton bent, held out his hand.

"Then we'll leave it to him," he concluded, "but not until I say the word."

Gentle nodded assent. The practical man of affairs had shown him how to carry out the dead woman's wishes without unnecessary harm to the living.

Philip entered.

"Well, did you succeed?" asked Haggleton, watching Gentle out of the corner of his eye.

"Indeed I did," exulted the young man. "I got the kneading machine on credit with a hundred dollars paid down."

"And how about the flour?"

"The Wisconsin mills will furnish it to the combination at 15 per cent off the jobbers' price."

"They will accept thirty day notes from the different bakers?"

"Exactly. No trouble about it at all."

Haggleton turned to Gentle.

"You see," he pointed out, "we shall save on wages and material. We'll do a bigger business because we'll sell better bread—and cheaper bread." Then he turned to Philip again.

"How many bakers have come into the combination?" he asked.

"Six so far, but we can get more."

"Get more?" echoed the millionaire. "Why, within ten days all the little bakers on the east side will be tumbling over themselves to get in."

"They've got to come in," began Philip grimly, "or"—

"Or what?"

It was Gentle who spoke, and there was a world of meaning in his voice. This was Philip, the friend of the poor. Indeed, the boy had drifted far away from his teachings in these few days under Haggleton's influence.

Philip looked at him; then his eyes wavered. He saw the accusation in his old friend's face.

"They've got to come in, or go out of business."

"Philip," said Gentle quietly and very gravely—"Philip, my boy, do you realize that you are building up a little trust? That you will turn men out of work?"

The young man looked uneasy.

"A few men will be thrown out of work. But we'll give better bread and cheaper bread to the whole east side."

"Just so," declared Haggleton. And he added, "Incidentally I will prove that a poor man like Moran can conquer these tenement house conditions if he has any gumption."

Haggleton went on.

"We'd better take that empty flat across the hall for sleeping rooms. We shall need this one for offices."

"In a little while," he asserted, "you'll see Joe Caffrey at work in a clean shirt, with pool rooms cut out, and Moran will stop kicking."

"I doubt that, Mr. Haggleton," said Gentle dryly.

"As long as a man has no money he's a kicker about the wrongs of the poor, Mr. Gentle. Give him some, and he stops kicking. That's why Socialists are poor."

"Some Socialists are rich."

"Oh, yes," answered Haggleton, "parlor Socialists, but they never earned the money themselves."

Philip came to the assistance of his old friend.

"Still," he said, turning to Haggleton, "the main point is that things in this country are not fair between the rich and the poor."

Haggleton faced Philip and Gentle. He felt the time had come for a decisive statement.

"Look here," he began sternly; "you can't expect one class to fight the battles of another class. Why should they? Do you fight our battles? If you want us to run our railroads and mines and factories in a certain way, it's up to you to make us do it. You've got votes; we've got money and organization. It's a fight, class against class. You want to get rid of your grievances; we want to keep our privileges. Go ahead—make laws, inspect our books, learn our secrets, put us in jail, do anything. But if you can't do anything, keep still, take your medicine and don't come whining to us to play your game. We will never do it—never! We are too busy playing our own."

Moran stormed into the room. He was hot, disheveled; his eyes glittered.

"Here, you, Jackson!" he shouted. "Do you think that you can grab the whole bakeshop business and throw hundreds of men out of work? My boss has joined your combination, and I've got notice to quit! It's an outrage!"

He turned upon Haggleton.

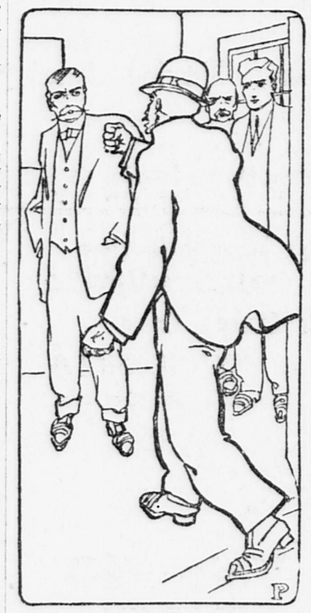
"Hold on!" commanded Philip.

Moran restrained himself.

"See here, Moran," the millionaire began, "this combination is a good thing."

"It's a blamed monopoly"—

The baker's assistant started on another speech full of abuse.



"You watch him," said Haggleton, dryly to Gentle. "Now listen."

"Look here, Moran; we'll make better bread and cheaper bread for the whole east side."

Moran continued his harangue.

"Yes, and you'll ruin homes in every street."

Better and better, thought Haggleton. The man was working himself up to a climax of denunciatory fury. The anticlimax he had already prepared would be all the more telling.

"Here, you, Jackson!" he shouted.

"We will make a lot of money," he said.

"Blood money!" shrieked Moran. "Any man who would touch a penny of it is a low hound!"

"I am sorry you feel that way." Haggleton's voice sounded disappointed. "I had picked you out as assistant manager."

Gentle became very attentive.

"Assistant manager!" exclaimed Moran.

"With a salary of $18 a week to begin with."

"Eighteen to begin!" Moran was staggered.

"But of course," the millionaire went on regretfully, "I can't ask you now to take it, knowing the way you feel. You would regard it as blood money."

"Yes—of course," Moran stammered, "that is to say—perhaps—come to think of it, I don't know as I would"—

"But consider you would always be thinking of those mothers and children."

"Well, cheaper bread would be a blessing, and as assistant manager I could make things easier for them. I accept."

"Very well, then. Go down to the Madison street bakery and help set up the electric kneading machine."

Moran turned with alacrity, touched his hat and went out.

"You see," commenced Haggleton, "it's as easy as that."

He was grimly amused.

Gentle did not answer. It occurred to him that perhaps he might teach Haggleton an object lesson in his turn and regain his influence over Philip. So he said:

"I forgot those tenement house calls, my boy." Turning to Haggleton, he added, "Perhaps you would like to go with us?" But the millionaire replied with barely concealed impatience:

"There is no use in these tenement calls."

"Oh, yes, there is," protested Gentle. Quietly Haggleton had continued his investigations of this tenement house problem himself and achieved a great deal. Much of the misery he had seen was preventable by the sufferers themselves. Already he had begun to formulate plans which he would lay before these two reformers. His offer of ten millions for the cause to Gentle had not been made on the spur of the moment. Still, considering it wise not to leave Philip just then to the unopposed influence of Gentle, he accompanied them upon their mission.

Knots In Her French.

Johnson—Does your wife speak French?

Thompson—She thinks she does.

"You don't speak it, do you?"

"No."

"Then how do you know she doesn't?"

"I watched a French waiter's face the other day when she was talking to him, and I'll be blamed if he didn't look as if he had the toothache."—Detroit Free Press.

Land Assessment In England.

The evils of under assessment of land are perhaps more glaring in Cardiff than anywhere else. Cardiff castle, with its huge park, lodges and gardens, with a boundary wall of three-quarters of a mile situated right in the heart of the town, is rated at £924 a year. The land is worth millions. Within sight of the castle and not more than 200 yards away is a tailor's shop which is rated at £947.—London Chronicle.

The Only Way He Could Go.

A man fearfully addicted to stuttering stepped up to the ticket window at a railroad station and asked what it would cost him to go to New York by freight.

"By freight!" exclaimed the astonished ticket agent. "What in thunder do you want to go by freight for?"

"Bec-c-c-c-ause," stammered the man, "I c-c-c-can't exp-p-pres my-s-s-self very w-well, c-c-can I?"—Ladies' Home Journal.

Convincing the Waiter.

"I have learned how to make the foreign waiters in the restaurants where I eat think I have lived in Europe half a lifetime," said a woman who never dines at home. "I dawdle over my dinner twice as long as anybody else in the place. It requires no effort for me to do that. By nature I eat in the same leisurely manner that I do everything else. Most of my compatriots bolt their food. As a consequence the foreign waifers who are used to leisurely dining regard them with amazed horror.

"'Ah, those Americans!' they exclaim. 'Some day they choke. But as for madame'—meaning me—'well, madame is different. Madame nibbles, she sips, she lingers; therefore she is not as those of common American clay. It takes madame never less than two hours to eat her dinner. That marks her as one of the European elect.'"—New York Globe.

Some Odd Spelling.

Americans, says the London News, employ the word "Britisher," which they invented, in a contemptuous sense. It was a certain Philadelphia wit who is said to have asked his friends what a "Britisher" would mean to convey by the written word "ghoughphtheightteeau." He had to explain to them that, according to the genius of the English language, it meant "potato." Thus: Gh—p, as in "hiccough;" ough—o, as in "dough;" phth—t, as in "phthisis;" eigh—a, as in "neighbor;" tte—t, as in "gazette," and eau—o, as in "beau." This was at least as puzzling as the livery stable keeper's bill which contained the two lines—

Aosafada
Atacinontmomgin.

Nobody who does not "know the answer" has ever yet arrived at the solution, which is, in the vernacular of the creditor himself, "A 'oss 'alf a day" and "A-takin' on 'im 'ome ag'in."

Unappreciated Efforts.

Unselfish goodness is seldom appreciated in this world of ours. There was that man in the electric car, for instance. Having rung up three fares in his efforts to stop the car for the lady that sat on the opposite side, he tossed after her the umbrella that belonged to the little gray whiskered man on his right. Neither the gray whiskered man nor the conductor liked the thoughtful Samaritan for his altruistic efforts.—Boston Transcript.

There Are Better Seats.

"He is now, they say, on the very pinnacle of fame, and yet he isn't exactly in comfortable circumstances."

"That's not surprising. Did you ever sit on a pinnacle of any sort?"—Brooklyn Citizen.

The Better Way.

"Awfully rude of him to throw a kiss at me."

"Yes, my dear; those are things which always ought to be delivered in person."—Illustrated Bits.

What He Found.

"He went into the country to find solitude."

"Did he find it?"

"No; quite the opposite. He sat down on an ant hill."

Cunning.

Deemster—Whenever I have to borrow money I try to get it from a pessimist. Fieldman—Why? Deemster—A pessimist never expects to get it back.—Life.

Free Advice.

The telephone in the office of a prominent New York lawyer rang, and when a clerk answered it the lady on the other end refused to give her name, saying she wanted to see the lawyer himself on private business. As soon as the lawyer himself picked up the receiver, before he could make any inquiries, she began, "Oh, please tell me, must there not be two copies of a lease?"

"Why," he answered, "it is usual to give one to the landlord's agent and one to the lessee. But who are"—

"Yet the fact that the wife of the lessee had never seen a copy of the lease wouldn't keep it from being legally binding?"

"No," slipped from the lawyer, who quickly added, "But before I discuss the matter further may I ask to whom"—

There was a pretty little laugh. He admits it was pretty even now. "Oh, I'm Mrs. Brown, and I live on Broadway. You don't know me"—it was obvious likewise that he wouldn't—"but I've always heard your advice was so very valuable, and I wanted a lawyer, and so I just called you up. Goodby."

And when he asked for the number central gave him the Grand Central station!—New York Times.

The Canary's Toilet.

Just watch your canary after he has had his daily bath. See how each separate feather is cleaned, pulled and looked over and how all the loose ones are taken out and dropped. All this is done by the bill, for a bird's neck is so flexible that it can be turned in all directions, but the bill cannot reach the head, and so Mr. Canary uses his foot. With it he combs his hair first on one side, then on the other, scratching very fast, as if to get all the tangles out. Then he uses his hair oil, for, although complexion powders are not known in the bird world, hair oil certainly is. Ladies and gentlemen alike carry it about with them. They have a little pouch or sack on the back near the tail for the purpose. When Mme. Bird wishes to use it she squeezes it out with her beak, just as you would press a rubber bulb. Then she lays the oil on her back just above her wings and rubs her head against it, turning her neck in all directions until every feather in her head is straight and shining.—Exchange.

Red Cheeks In Addison's Day.

It seems that the "beauty doctor" is by no means a modern invention. The Atlantic cites an amusing advertisement to this effect printed in Addison's Spectator:

The famous Bavarian Red Liquor:

Which gives such a delightful, blushing Colour to the Cheeks of those that are White or Pale, that it is not to be distinguished from a natural fine Complexion, nor perceived to be artificial by the nearest Friend. Is nothing of Paint, or in the least hurtful, but good in many Cases to be taken inwardly. It renders the Face delightfully handsome and beautiful; is not subject to be rubb'd off like Paint, therefore cannot be discovered by the nearest Friend. It is certainly the best Beautifier in the World. Is sold only at Mr. Payn's Toyshop at the Angel and Crown in St. Paul's Church-yard, near Cheapside, at 3s. 6d. a Bottle, with Directions.

The Yaws.

On the west coast of Africa the natives call the raspberry a yaw. It happens that one of the pleasing diseases that come out from that quarter of the globe is characterized by dusky red spots that appear on the body and soon grow into ulcers about the size and looks of the raspberry. So this disease is called the yaws. It is contagious and downright disagreeable. White sailors bring it back with them to their own discomfort and the disgust of those at home. Yaws prevails also in the Fiji islands and in Samoa, but in these two places children mainly are attacked, and the natives regard the disease in the same light as civilized persons look at measles—almost a certainty to have and the sooner over with the better.

Satisfied.

"People praise my work," said the artist boastingly.

"And they laugh at mine," rejoined the sad faced party, "but I don't mind."

"What is your line?" queried the artist.

"I'm a professional humorist," replied the other.—Chicago News.

Run Over Him.

"Oh, Mrs. Smith, do you know that your son Billy has been run over by a train?"

"Oh, dear, dear! My poor boy! Whatever shall I do? Where did it happen?"

"Underneath the railway arch. Billy's standing there now!"—London Telegraph.

Not In His Line.

"They tell me," said the new reporter, who was doing an interview, "that you have succeeded in forging your way to the front."

"Sir," replied the self made man coldly, "you have been misinformed. I'm no forger."

An Obstinate Maid.

Mr. Sappeigh—I wouldn't marry that Miss Gabby. She is terribly set in her ways. Mr. Softleigh—Is that so? Mr. Sappeigh—Yes, indeed. Why, she has refused me nine times! — Baltimore American.

The Treatment.

"Yes," said Mrs. Lapsling, "Johnny's all right now. When he was bitten by that strange dog I took him to a doctor's and had the wound ostracized right away."—Chicago Tribune.

HELPFUL WORDS

From a Quincy Citizen.

Is your back lame and painful?
Does it ache especially after exertion?
Is there a soreness in the kidney region?
These symptoms indicate weak kidneys:
There is danger in delay.
Weak kidneys fast get weaker.
Give your trouble prompt attention.
Doan's Kidney Pills act quickly.
They strengthen weak kidneys.
Read this Quincy testimony.

Mrs. J. Boyle, 8 Marsh street, Quincy, Mass., says: "I have used Doan's Kidney Pills and can say they are unequalled for kidney disorders. They built up my entire system and in six weeks, freed me from kidney complaint from which I had suffered for a long time."

BRIEFS

Election Extra of Daily Ledger at 6 o'clock tonight.

Miss Winifred Cole of Appleton street has been confined to her home with a severe attack of gastritis.

A gang of men are busy laying pipes and setting poles for gas on the other side of the bulevard. We are sure to be well lighted.

About 1,000 people visited the reservoir on Third hill, Wollaston ,on Sunday. The view is unsurpassed in New England.

Mr. and Mrs. Edson Loud of New Jersey have been guests of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. F. P. Loud of Washington street.

Miss Maude Read is having a three weeks' vacation from Leland Powers school of oratory, where she has been studying since September.

Mayor Shea spoke last evening at rallies in Stone hall, Ward Two; Associates hall, Ward One; Cahills hall, Ward Three, and St. Mary's hall, West Quincy.

The girl's club of the Memorial Congregational church with Mrs. D. C. Pope as its head, are planning for an entertainment to be held in the church the first Saturday evening after New Years.

Mrs. Herbert Gearwar of Madison street will entertain the club of women who have taken for a name of their club, "Le Douze elle hibou," or the Twelve She Owls, at a luncheon on Wednesday. The house is to artistically decorated and a most enjoyable time is anticipated.

The cities which are voting today are Brockton, Fall River, Gloucester, Marlboro, New Bedford, Waltham and Quincy, all of which voted last year against license, and the following seven which voted for license: Haverhill, Lawrence, Springfield, Taunton, Fitchburg, Northampton and Pittsfield.

The Ten Social Girls' club held their first meeting at the home of Miss Helen Connor, South Walnut street, Monday evening. The following were elected as officers: Miss Anna Gilcoine, president; Miss Catherine Pitts vice president; Miss Helen Connor, secretary; and Miss Annah Corbin ,treasurer. A social hour was spent after the business meeting.

The booming of real estate in Atlantic is the chief topic of conversation. Fifteen houses are planned and already three are under way. Three on Atlantic street beyond Squantum. Six on Squantum street, which will be three on either side of Conant road, and nine on Ocean street which leads from Squantum street to the boulevard. These fifteen will be under construction soon and undoubtedly finished before we can realize it.

One of the best lectures ever given at the Quincy Mansion school was that of Dec. 3d, when Rev. Charles Edward Stowe told the life story of his mother Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe. There was a large attendance of students and friends of the school who gave close attention to the speaker as he told of the experiences which led to the writing of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" the book that preached a sermon throughout the north and aroused the people to the necessity of freeing the slaves.

All Star Football Teams of the 1909 Season

By TOMMY CLARK.

| ALL AMERICAN TEAM. | | |
|---|---|---|
| Kilpatrick | Left end | Yale |
| Walker | Left tackle | Minnesota |
| Andrus | Left guard | Yale |
| Cooney | Center | Yale |
| Tobin | Right guard | Dartmouth |
| Fish | Right tackle | Harvard |
| Regnier | Right end | Brown |
| McGovern | Quarterback | Minnesota |
| Allerdice | Left halfback | Michigan |
| Coy (captain) | Fullback | Yale |

With the close of the football season every year it is customary to select the best players from the big teams east and west to form two all star elevens and an all American team. The players who have played the best and most consistent football during the entire season are given the honorary positions, and the choices are not based on the work of the different individuals in one game.

In picking these teams an effort is made to select the star players of the various elevens and put them in positions where their work would be most valuable to their maters, at the same time figuring in their individual virtues and placing them accordingly.

CAPTAIN FISH OF HARVARD.

The picking of ends is a very difficult problem. This is because of the extra amount of work placed on the shoulders of an end in the new style game. In fact, an end to be a star must not only be a sure tackle and fast man, but one who can receive a forward pass in faultless style.

Kilpatrick and Regnier are the two best all around ends in the country. They both handle the forward pass in perfect style, are wonderful runners in a broken field, and they cover all kicks in good shape.

Fish of Harvard and Sherwin of Dartmouth are placed at tackles. Fish is a wonderful man in receiving a forward pass as well as being a great defensive player. He is a hard man for any end to block. Sherwin because of his build and experience, coupled with the great game he has played in all games this season, gives him a position at one end.

Andrus of Yale played a very consistent game all season. He is the choice for one guard, with Tobin of Dartmouth as the other. Tobin is a wonderful player. He is one of those big, rangy fellows who have a knack of getting low and charging hard. He plays on the defensive about the best of any of the guards and helps a great deal on the offensive.

| ALL EASTERN TEAM. | | |
| Kilpatrick | Left end | Yale |
| Sherwin | Left tackle | Dartmouth |
| Andrus | Left guard | Yale |
| Cooney | Center | Yale |
| Tobin | Right guard | Dartmouth |
| Fish | Right tackle | Harvard |
| Regnier | Right end | Brown |
| Sprackling | Quarterback | Brown |
| Minot | Left halfback | Harvard |
| Philbin | Right halfback | Yale |
| Coy (captain) | Fullback | Yale |

At center the choice falls to Cooney of Yale. He hasn't any close rivals for the position this season. On defense Cooney is the best lineman in the country. His work is as good as any center who has played the position in several years.

The quarterback position is harder to pick. None of the big eastern teams has a crack quarter this year. Howe of Yale is a fairly good man. He ran his team in a good, heady way, but he isn't a star individual player. The honors lie between Sprackling of Brown, Vorhis of Penn State and Geary of Fordham.

The writer gives Sprackling the position, as he was the hero of the Brown-Indian game. He not only ran his team in such a way as to pile up a score of 21—8 against Carlisle, but he made the most sensational individual play of the whole season. Later in the game Sprackling kicked a field goal. His work in this one game justifies his selection.

For one of the halfbacks I'll take Philbin of Yale. He's as good, heady and fast a man as there is on the field today.

The other half will be Minot of Harvard. If it wasn't for Coy I'd pick him for fullback. He's a very close second at that.

Minot runs and hits the line well. They undoubtedly make an unbeatable pair.

Coy of Yale is of course the unanimous choice for fullback and captain. He is a great all around player, who possesses all the qualifications for the position. A powerful line plunger, a strong interferer and defensive player, he is the superior of any other fullback in the country.

This team would be equally strong in offensive and defensive play. With Coy to do the punting and field goal kicking, Sprackling the forward passing and onside kicking, Cooney to buck the line and Kilpatrick and Regnier to run the ends, it would be a worthy opponent for any similar aggregation in any section of the country.

Good ends are plentiful in the west this year. Andersen of Wisconsin and Rademacher of Minnesota are very much in a class by themselves, although Pettijohn of the Gophers comes pretty near filling the bill.

In picking out tackles one stands out head and shoulders over any other in the position in the west—Walker of Minnesota. He is a giant in stature and strength, and despite the fact that he closed the season slightly overtrained he played a magnificent game. At breaking up interference he had no superior on the western gridiron and in carrying the ball from position has few in the line. Boyle of Wisconsin has the call for the other position.

There should be no difference of opinion as to quarterback. McGovern of Minnesota, Page of Chicago and Moll of Wisconsin all have scores of adherents, but for all around playing it will probably be admitted that McGovern has no peer in his position in the game this season. In carrying the ball from position as well as punts, running in a broken field as well as behind interference, McGovern showed up as a star of the first magnitude.

Among the guards Butzer of Illinois and Benbrook of Michigan have shown

| ALL WESTERN TEAM. | | |
|---|---|---|
| Rademacher | Left end | Minnesota |
| Walker | Left tackle | Minnesota |
| Benbrook | Left guard | Michigan |
| Farnum | Center | Michigan |
| Butzer | Right guard | Illinois |
| Boyle | Right tackle | Wisconsin |
| Anderson | Right end | Wisconsin |
| McGovern (capt.) | Q't'rback | Minnesota |
| Allerdice | Left halfback | Michigan |
| Magidson | Right halfback | Michigan |

magnificent form, the Michigan man especially playing around his Minnesota opponent recently. Both have played marvelous football during the season. As an aggressive player, picking out his opponent's weaknesses of offense as well as defense, Butzer has shown marked ability. The same fits the giant Wolverene.

As in many a past season, the center rush position has few good candidates. Hull of Illinois, Badenoch of Chicago and Farnum of Minnesota are undoubtedly the best. Farnum, although against a stronger man physically, held his own against Smith of Michigan. Of these Farnum must be given first place for his all round value to the team.

Coming to the halfbacks, there is a wealth of material to chose from. Rosenwald of Minnesota, Culver of Wisconsin, Magidsohn and Allerdice of Michigan and Crawley of Chicago are those who might lay claim to the honors. Allerdice and Magidsohn of Michigan are given the places. Both are aggressive players, are good ground gainers when it is difficult to advance the ball, and both have shown good headwork in their games. Both have grit to spare, make use of their interference and know how to "follow the ball." Allerdice, in addition to being good in any open field, is one of the best punters in the west.

There should really be no serious opposition to Pickering of Minnesota for the fullback position. There is no man in the west who is a better line bucker. He is almost as strong in open field work as he is in his specialty. He has wonderful faculty for picking out holes in the line and is remarkably strong on defensive, seldom missing a tackle. Wilce of Wisconsin and Worthwine of Chicago would be good material under ordinary circumstances, but neither is in the Gopher's class.

Old Manx "Banknotes."

Speaking of the curious Manx banking lore of the past, the Liverpool Post says that a singular state of affairs was exhibited in "the island" at the close of the Napoleonic wars. Trade was brisk, money was more freely adventured, and all sorts of private persons began to issue notes. There was no occasion whatever to have sterling against them. All you had to do was to get some one to take them and pass them on. The fashion grew till even the humbler traders issued card "promises to pay," the values most in circulation being 5 shillings, a shilling and even sixpence. Once an advocate from Castletown went to Peel to collect a judgment of £350 from the coroner of Glenfaba. This worthy paid him 2,704 card notes, many of them worthless. They took several hours to examine and count, and their transport was an item of extreme difficulty. Finally they were put into a big sack, half shaken to one end and half to the other, and the whole slung over the back of a horse. The lather of the horse, soaking through, spoiled nearly half the cards!

Clearing the Atmosphere.

In his capacity of dramatic critic Mr. J. Comyns Carr, the author, wrote a notice of the play of "Charles I.," in which Irving played under the management of Mr. Bateman. His production deeply incensed the manager. Ir order perhaps to find the opportunity of informing the critic of his disapproval, the manager invited him to a supper at the Westminster club on the second or third night of the production. When he thought the fitting moment had arrived Mr. Bateman led the conversation to the point at issue and, emphatically banging the table with his fist, declared in the loudest of tones that he did not produce his plays at the Lyceum theater to please Mr. Comyns Carr. There was a moment's awkward silence, which Mr. Carr confesses he did not feel quite able to break, but which was released by a wit of the company with the happy retort, "Well, dear boy, then you can't be surprised if they don't please him."

Sight Lost and Restored.

A farmer's wife who had had much trouble with her servants was accosted by one of them.

"I fear I shall not be able to work much longer. I think I am going blind."

"Why, how is that? You seem to get along pretty well with your work."

"Yes, but I can no longer see any meat on my plate at dinner."

The farmer's wife understood, and the next day the servants were served with very large and very thin pieces of meat.

"How nice!" the girl exclaimed. "My sight has come back. I can see better than ever."

"How is that, Bella?" asked the mistress.

"Why, at this moment," replied Bella. "I can see the plate through the meat."—London Scraps.

His Passport.

On one occasion Gustave Dore, the artist, lost his passport while on a tour in Switzerland. At Lucerne he asked to be allowed to speak to the mayor, to whom he gave his name.

"You say that you are M. Gustave Dore, and I believe you," said the mayor, "but," and he produced a piece of paper and a pencil, "you can easily prove it."

Dore looked around him and saw some peasants selling potatoes in the street. With a few clever touches he reproduced the homely scene and, appending his name to the sketch, presented it to the mayor.

"Your passport is all right," remarked the official, "but you must allow me to keep it and to offer you in return one of the ordinary form."

Brutal Indifference.

"It seems since his marriage Jack Thornley has developed into a perfect brute."

"You surprise me! What has he done?"

"Why, the other night while his wife was regailing him with all the particulars of that choice Verifast scandal she noticed that he seemed very quiet. And what do you think! He was sound asleep!"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Nearing the Limit.

An old lady was going down in the cage in a Cornish mine. She looked with apprehension at the rope, and asked the miner anxiously: "My man, are you sure this rope is quite safe?" "Well, mum," was the cheerful answer, "these ropes is guaranteed to last exactly six months, and this ain't due to be renewed till tomorrow."—Birmingham Mail.

The Real Trouble.

"I'm afraid," said the lady to a diminutive applicant, "that you are too small to act as nursemaid to my children."

"Oh, I'm not too small," replied the applicant. "I guess the trouble is your children are too large."—Chicago News.

The Press Agent Proposes.

"Your pulchritude is peerless. You are an astounding aggregation of feminine faultlessness. Be mine!"

"Sure!" responded the girl. "I never could resist that press agent language."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Return of the Prodigal.

"Who's that a-hollerin' down yander in the branch?"

"That's the prodigal son. The old man's a-wailin' thunder out o' him fer runnin' away!"—Atlanta Constitution.

There is no wisdom like frankness.—Beaconsfield.

VOTE ON LICENSE

A Big Majority Each Year Against The Sale Of Liquor.

Quincy is the banner No-License city of Massachusetts. Twenty-eight times the question has been submitted to the voters: "Shall Licenses be granted for the sale of intoxicating liquors?" And each time the verdict has been decisive. Previous to 1901 the majority was always less than 1000, but at the last four elections it has been in excess of 2000. In 1908 the "NO" vote was 3,470, the largest ever cast, while the "YES" vote was not as large as in 1896, 1899, 1900 or 1902. The number of blanks or silent votes was 331, about the average in recent years.

Quincy's enviable record since the local option law went into effect follows:

Plurality of Mayor Shea 914

A Majority of Over 2,000 Against the Sale of Intoxicating Liquors

Ex-Mayor Bryant Leads the Councilmen at Large--Vote Close for School Committee At Large But Dr. Bushnell Is Reelected

Mayor Shea has every reason to congratulate himself on his re-election, for the handsome plurality which he received can be taken for an endorsement of the policy which he has maintained in the administration of the business of the city. His plurality was 914, or 202 less than last year, but the total vote of the city was 289 less than last year.

During the past week a hot campaign has been waged, but throughout it all, Mayor Shea took the defensive, leaving the Republicans the aggressive side.

In his own ward there was evidently an effort on the part of certain of his own party to cut his plurality but it amounted to but little. Some days ago Mayor Shea claimed that he would carry every ward in the city but Ward Five, and his prediction proved true. Ward Five is usually overwhelmingly Republican, yet Mr. Nichols only carried the ward by a plurality of 111. Last year Mr. Stone carried this ward by 53.

In Ward One the Mayor received a plurality of 143, as against 235 a year ago. In Ward Two he had a plurality of 245, as against 231 a year ago.

Ward Three gave the Mayor a plurality of 121, as against 297 a year ago. Ward Four gave him a plurality of 453 as against 519 a year ago. In Ward Six he received a plurality of 43 as against 12 a year ago.

It will be seen by these figures that Mayor Shea lost 92 in Ward One, gained 14 in Ward Two, lost 176 in Ward Three, lost 66 in Ward Four lost 58 in Ward Five and gained 31 in Ward Six.

The only contest over members of the School Committee was for member at large. Dr. E. H. Bushnell was the Republican candidate seeking reelection, and opposing him was Dr. George M. Sheahan. Dr. Sheahan received a very flattering vote ,his total being 1,857. Dr. Bushnell's total vote was 2 276, a plurality of 419. In Ward One Dexter E. Wadsworth was reelected by a total vote of 727, and in Ward Five Dr. William G. Curtis was reelected by a total vote of 663. Neither Mr. Wadsworth or Dr. Curtis had any opponent.

The act relative to pensions for firemen was accepted by a plurality of 841, the vote being 2168 yes and 1327 No. It is doubtful if many know the full purport of the act so that they could vote intelligently upon it. Before the act becomes operative an ordinance concerning it will have to be adopted by the City Council.

NEW CITY COUNCIL

Democrats Make a Gain of One Member

The new City Council will be composed of 16 Republicans and 7 Democrats, a gain of one Democrat.

Outside of the Mayoralty question the most interest was in the election of Councilmen at large. There were nine candidates on the ballot Five Republicans two independents and two Socialists. The two independents were Councilmen Gilson and Hadlock, who failed of nomination at the caucuses.

A large amount of work was put in by friends to elect Councilman Hadlock, but to no avail. There were a large number of blanks cast especially in Ward Four, which show many bullets cast there.

As usual Councilman Bryant proved himself a vote getter, for he led the list with a grand total of 2805. E. J. Sandberg was second with a total of 2617. Others elected with their total vote were: Ernest W. Branch 2492, ex-Councilman Alexander Clark 2448, Councilman Cherrington 2264. Of the two independents, Councilman Hadlock received 1466 and Councilman Gilson 1027. The vote of the Socialists was: William L. O'Brien 341,

HON. WILLIAM T. SHEA
Re-elected for Third Term

Charles W. Hanscom 325. Blanks aggregated 8,185, an average of nearly two to every voter of the city.

In Ward One the Republicans were elected without much opposition. Councilman Whiton led the van with a total of 692, Charles A. Erickson had 642 and Councilman Nowland 608. The only Democrat on the ticket was Archie Thayer who received a total of 266 votes. The Socialist candidate Fred H. Lord, had 85.

In Ward Two the three Democrats were elected, although there are but seven votes between Edward P. Histen, the low Democrat, and Harry G. Studley the high Republican. This may possibly mean a recount. Of the three elected Councilman Flynn was high man with 405, Councilman Carey was second with 385, and Edward P. Histen third with 267. The vote of the other candidates was Studley, 269; D. J. S. McCurdy 218, Percy H. Holman 207, George H. Corliss 194, and Willey E. Stoddard 21.

In Ward Three two Republicans and one Democrat were elected George A. Bolster was high man with a total of 475, Councilman Richards second with 440, and ex-Councilman James M. Cantfill third with 404. Robert B. Craig, the third Republican candidate received 382 and James M. Faircloth, the second Democratic candidate 249. Edward F. Brault the only Socialist candidate received 71 votes.

Ward Four as usual elected three Democrats to the Council. The hardest fought battle in the whole city was probably in this ward. The Republicans were striving hard to elect one candidate, while there was a determined effort on the part of certain people to defeat one of the Democratic candidates. No Republican was elected, however, and the efforts to defeat Councilman Smith were a flat failure. The result of the vote however shows the effort made. Of the three Councilmen elected. Councilman McDevitt led with 515, Harry T. Boyd was second with 476, and Councilman Smith third with 435. The vote of the other candidates was J. L. Ferguson 312 and John J. Clarke 231.

There was practically no contest in Ward Five for Ward Councilman, and the three Republicans had an easy victory. Of the three elected Councilman Gardner led with 655, Fred R. Snow had 638 and ex-Councilman Arthur W. Loud 622. A. H. Kingsley, the Socialist candidate, received 47 votes.

Ward Six elected its three Republican candidates with so much margin that there will not be any need of a recount. President Hobbs led with 392 and Councilman Moir was second with 346. Washington G. Woodward, the new councilman, received 319. Of the defeated candidates F. J. Mullen, the Democratic candidate, received 212 and James W. Ross, the Socialist, 45.

SOLID AGAINST LICENSE

Every Precinct Gave a NO Majority

Every precinct as well as every ward of the city gave a majority against licensing the sale of intoxicating liquors in this city.

The two precincts at Wollaston led with the largest No pluralities, 404 and 237, but precinct one of Ward One was a close third with 213. The only precinct of the city to give less than 100 No majority was precinct one of the Quincy Point ward.

The total vote of the city was:

|---|---|
| YES ..... | .....1,199 |
| NO ..... .. .. | ....3,262 |
| Majority .. .. .. | ..2,063 |
| Blanks .. .. ..... | ..333 |

Both the YES and the NO vote were smaller than last year, but the total vote of the city was 289 smaller than in 1908. There were about the usual number of blanks or silent voters, 333 against 331 last year.

The NO majorities by precincts were as follows:

| | Majority |
|---|---|
| Ward One, Pre. 1, ..... | .213 |

WARD FOUR JUBILEE

Great Demonstration over Victory of Mayor Shea

Election night was the biggest night in the history of West Quincy, as nearly every man, woman and child turned out despite the heavy rain to do honor to their most respected resident and honored Mayor, William T. Shea. Cheering and celebrating thousands accompanied him all over the city and when he reached Ward One the crowd had reached such enormous proportions that it filled the street and sidewalks for hundreds of feet along Hancock street.

As early as when the first unofficial returns began to come in, and there was an indication that Mayor Shea was running way ahead of his opponent, the people began to turn out in the West Quincy ward, and a little after 7 when the Daily Ledger gave the figures several hundred people were on hand and immediately planned for a big celebration.

About 7.30 over a 1000 persons had gathered at the corner of Cross and Copeland streets and a little later when the Mayor accompanied by the Councilmen elect from Ward Four, and several of the ward's prominent citizens including James F. Burke, the peerless, swung down Cross street into Copeland, one of the most demonstrative celebrations the west end ward has even seen took place.

Cheer upon cheer rent the air and the red and green fire, the torches and the burning wagons which some enterprising youngster had managed to secure brought into strange relief in the uncertain light, beaming faces of the successful candidates with their brooms, denoting that for a third time their candidate had made a clean sweep of the city.

The crowd was finally formed into line, and began its triumphal march through the city. Swinging down Copeland street with two bands of music the crowd made the air ring with cheers and songs and when they reached the South Quincy ward they received a great ovation. Continuing along Franklin street they stopped at Dr. George H. Sheahan's house where they saluted him, and in turn were saluted by fireworks and red lights.

As they turned down Hancock street to City Square the orders were given to douse all lights, and so a dark and unwieldly mass, the huge crowd pushed its way in darkness until they reached the Daily Ledger office. There the music once more struck up, and lights were relighted. Cheering and shouting they swung around by City Hall where they received another tremendous ovation. Continuing on, they turned into Washington street and then into Foster passing in review before the Elk's clubhouse.

For some time the crowd stopped before the clubhouse, and when they passed on they were without their Mayor as the Elks had captured him, giving them in his place a wagon which contained a member of the family noted for its ears and brays.

They were so happy by this time, however, that nothing mattered to them, and they made their way back

Gladly will our merchants sell them
For the Fresh Air Camp
One a penny, one a penny
Red Cross Stamp.

Miss Edna Stokes of Amesbury is the guest of Mrs. Charles W. Eastman of Norfolk street.

Mr. and Mrs. Wendell G. Corthell of Grand View avenue left Tuesday for Deland, Florida where they will spend the winter months.

Mrs. Thomas A. R. Gould of Trafford street passed away on Tuesday, aged 66 years. Funeral service will be held on Friday.

Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Groce of Hancock street left Monday for Atlantic City hoping that the change will be of benefit to Mr. Groce who has been in poor health the past few weeks.

Mrs. Tenney, Mrs. Fleming, Mrs. Crowell and Mrs. Lewis, discuss the subject of "Educators" at the meeting of the Elliot club on Wednesday evening of next week at the home of Mrs. Rowe.

The Pickwick club is to discuss a big subject at its meeting next week Wednesday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. George L. Badger when under the leadership of Mrs. Wilson Marsh "The servant girl problem "will be debated.

"Settlement Work" is the subject for the Sunday night meeting of the Wollaston Y. P. R. U. in the Unitarian vestry, the leader will be Louis Weston and the speaker Miss Persis Thompson.

Mrs. Alexander Rose of Warren avenue was hurriedly summoned to Cohasset Friday on account of the sudden illness of her sister, Miss Abbie Souther, who passed away Monday evening. The most heartfelt sympathy of many friends is extended to Mrs. Rose.

ALL WORK TOGETHER.

The citizens of Quincy are to be congratulated upon the substantial sums of money which have been contributed to the Anti-Tuberculosis Association to assist them in building a camp in this city for the treatment and cure of consumption, a disease which has gained appalling headway among us. This however is only a beginning and to make a success of this great cause we must all work, every individual. To this end the Civic-Betterment committee of the Women's club are to sell Red Cross stamps, which bear the Christmas and New Year Greetings in all the post offices in the city, and in many of the stores. It is urgent that all firms see to it that their mail matter from now until Christmas bear the Red Cross stamp, and all banks also, each person sending letters or parcels. As our beloved Dr. Hale expressed it, our success is in all working "together all together." Let every one help this grand work to success.

—Isn't it funny when the water on the ponds and streams begins to freeze and there is every prospect of good skating soon that the boys cover the surface with bricks and stones and sticks and spoil it for the one winter sport they like so well!—Waltham Free Press.

NO SURPRISE TO CONGRESS

President Taft's Message Is Regarded as Progressive

SMOOTH TIME IS ANTICIPATED

Some Phases of Chief Executive's Production, However, May Cause Sharp Controversy—Suggestions as to Postal Savings Bank Law, Campaign Contributions and a Few Other Matters Not Pleasing to All

Washington, Dec. 8.—Even before President Taft's first annual message was read, it was current throughout the corridors of the senate that congress would have a pretty smooth time this year. Members of steering committees and other senators whose business it is to grease the wheels of legislation and keep things moving are expressing quiet confidence that an agreed program will be presented to congress before long and that adjournment will be taken perhaps by the middle of May.

The president omitted from his message, after having written them in, the important paragraphs relative to conservation of natural resources and amendments to the interstate commerce and Sherman law. His reason is that he thinks these subjects too great to be buried in the depths of a long message. In consequence, he expects to send special messages containing his recommendations on these points within a short time.

Washington views the message as being progressive, without being radical. Where it is emphatic it goes forward rather than back, but it has given no shock to congress. General surprise is expressed that the president should be so insistent upon the passage of a postal savings bank law and that he has demanded it in redemption of the party pledge, with the knowledge that when that pledge was given by the Republican national convention in the summer of 1908 the national monetary commission was practically unorganized. It had not then made the recommendation it so strongly urges now, that the whole subject lie over and be considered by the commission along with other schemes of monetary reforms. If President Taft remains as firm as he appears to be in his message, he will have a sharp contest with congress over this issue, for many of the advocates of the system are willing to wait as suggested.

Congress is growling under its breath over the suggestion of a law requiring a return of campaign contributions. It believes the president could have afforded to let that subject alone, on the theory that it will be pressed hard enough by some zealous advocates without the necessity of a word from the administration. In the view of many senators such a system will simply cause a lot of lying and false reports, and embarrass the campaign committees of both parties without advancing the cause of political morality one inch.

The president's desires that congress let the sugar trust alone, for the present, is well received even by some of the enemies of that august institution. Feeling against the trust is very strong, however, and Attorney General Wickersham must probe deep and aim high if he would avoid an investigation not only of the sugar trust but of the department of justice in connection therewith.

The president's recommendations in behalf of labor go no further than the anti-injunction plank of the Republican platform—which is not an anti-injunction plank at all, as the labor leaders view it. As the president says, such an act as he recommends would do no more than embody the best practice in equity, and this already prevails in many of the courts, notably in Massachusetts.

Some disappointment is shown that the president has not asked for an extension of time for the operation of the maximum and minimum provisions of the tariff law. As the tariff board, or the government, will have little time between now and April 1 in which to negotiate for better terms with foreign governments, his statements are being construed to mean that the president may wink at such discriminations against the United States by foreign countries as he may find to be embarrassing.

The president apparently approves the drastic steps taken by Third Assistant Postmaster General Lawshe to reduce the abuse of the second class mail privileges by advertising publications, and even suggests an increase of the rate of postage on magazines and periodicals, in view of the deficit through second-class mail of $17,500,000. His recommendations on his point are certain to create much comment.

ARE NOT WORRYING

Congressment Preparing For Usual Whack at the "Pork Barrel"

Washington, Dec. 8.—Judging by the talk about the corridors of the Capitol, congress is little impressed with the agitation to abolish the log-rolling involved in the old-time public building and rivers and harbors bills, and members are framing up their requests with the conviction that the "pork barrel" will contain about as much meat as of yore.

A counter-argument to that for a scientific program for developing inland waterways, which will be urged by the rivers and harbors congress, is that for $1,000,000,000 a four-track railroad could be made to gridiron the United States in all directions, which would give adequate facilities for transit so rapid that the waterways would be comparatively unused.

WIRE INQUIRY WANTED

Recent Merger of Two Big Companies May Be Considered by Congress

Washington, Dec. 8.—Representative Hitchcock of Nebraska, a Democrat and editor of the Omaha World-Herald, will ask congress to investigate the merger recently effected by the American Telephone and Telegraph company and the Western Union.

His request will take the form of a resolution asking not only an investigation of the recent transactions, whereby the two interests were brought into such close relations, but demanding a physical valuation of those properties and those of the Postal Telegraph company.

This last is intended to develop data by means of which any elaborate scheme of stock-watering may be prevented if further consolidation is attempted later.

IS HELPING THE LAW

Sugar President Instructs a Witness to Tell All He Knows

New York, Dec. 8.—Testimony given Tuesday at the trial of six former employes of the American Sugar Refining company, charged with defrauding the government by underweighing, showed that W. B. Thomas, president of the company, had made an effort to assist the prosecution by calling at least one witness to his office and instructing him to tell all he knew concerning the alleged frauds.

John H. Thompson, who had charge of the sugar import business in the main office of the company, swore that Thomas had given him such instructions.

GRAND JURY ACTS IN FINANCE FRAUD

Phenix Insurance Probe May Extend to Chicago

New York, Dec. 8.—The grand jury has begun an investigation into the shortage of $1,000,000 discovered on the books of the Phenix Insurance company, of which George P. Sheldon, who is reported seriously sick at his home in Greenwich, Conn., was the former head. At the same time plans were made to extend the inquiry to Chicago.

Sheldon is accused of juggling the affairs of the company in the style of high financiers, of dominating its affairs for more than two decades to its detriment, and of advancing loans to insurance department officials that averted an investigation of the company's books for years.

Steps for the rehabilitation of the company under the direction of President Gray, elected by the directors about the time when Superintendent Hotchkiss' report was made public, are planned. In the superintendent's report it is declared by writing off $1,000,000 of the company's $3,000,000 surplus the accounts can be balanced.

LEAK OF GASOMETER

Responsible For Explosion Which Causes Loss of Twenty-Seven Lives

Hamburg, Dec. 8.—Twenty-seven workmen are thought to have perished, while forty were seriously injured in a gas explosion here. Two gas tanks were torn to atoms and the flames blotted out the sun for several minutes.

The explosion was due to a leak in a new gasometer. Escaping gas entered the retort house, where it came in contact with the fires, causing a terrific explosion. A large number of workmen were engaged in rebuilding and enlarging the plant.

Ten men are known to be dead and seventeen are missing. It is almost certain that all of these are dead. Forty men were dangerously injured, of whom several cannot recover.

DIPTHERIA AT ANDOVER

Academy Boys Get an Extra Vacation on Account of Disease

Andover, Mass., Dec. 8.—Because of one case of diphtheria at the Andover academy twenty of the young men occupying rooms in one of the dormitories were allowed to go on their Christmas vacation, which is much earlier than is customary.

It is said that the boy afflicted is not considered ill enough to be taken to a hospital, but is being cared for in his room. Two other boys have had mild attacks and are also living in the dormitory.

LICENSE GAINS IN BAY STATE

More Than Five Thousand as Compared With Last Year

HAVERHILL TURNS TO "DRY"

Fall River, New Bedford, Marlboro and Gloucester Swing Into "Wet" Column—Democrat Elected Mayor of Springfield, While Ashley Wins In New Bedford For Fourteenth Time—Clifford Wins In Brockton

Boston, Dec. 8.—A reaction of the wave of prohibition which swept over Massachusetts last year yesterday sent four cities, Fall River, New Bedford, Marlboro and Gloucester, back into the license column, while Haverhill alone, by a close vote, turned over to no-license.

The total vote, as compared with last year, shows a gain of over 5000 in favor of license in the fourteen cities voting yesterday.

Following is the general result of the election:

| | Yes | No |
|---|---|---|
| City and Mayor-elect Brockton—Clifford, D. | 3646 | 5488 |
| Fall River—No election for mayor | 8316 | 6158 |
| Fitchburg—O'Connell, D. | 2749 | 2457 |
| Gloucester—Parsons, R. | 2161 | 1829 |
| Haverhill—No election for mayor | 3298 | 3706 |
| Lawrence—White, R. | 6139 | 3292 |
| Marlboro—Shaughnessey, D | 1833 | 1367 |
| New Bedford—Ashley, D. | 5735 | 3394 |
| Northampton—Coolidge, R. | 1490 | 1315 |
| Pittsfield—McInnes, D. | 2775 | 2357 |
| Quincy—Shea, D. | 1199 | 3262 |
| Springfield—Lathrop, D. | 6138 | 4064 |
| Taunton—Woods | 2799 | 2527 |
| Waltham—Walker, R. | 1581 | 2909 |

The most notable turnover in the mayoralty contests was at Springfield, which, for the first time since 1901, elected a Democratic mayor, Edward H. Lathrop defeating William E. Sanderson, Republican, candidate for a fourth term.

In six cities, six mayors secured re-elections, Fred O'Connell, Democrat, being re-elected at Fitchburg, William P. White, Republican, at Lawrence, Henry H. Parsons (no party designation), at Gloucester, William H. MacInnis, Democrat, at Pittsfield, William T. Shea, Democrat, at Quincy, and M. A. Walker, Republican, at Waltham.

William H. Clifford, Democrat, for four years an unsuccessful candidate, was elected mayor of Brockton by a close vote. J. J. Shaughnessy, Democrat, was elected at Marlboro; Calvin Coolidge, Republican, at Northampton, and William S. Woods (no party designation), at Taunton.

Charles S. Ashley, Democrat, who has conducted sixteen campaigns for mayor in New Bedford, was elected for his fourteenth term by a comfortable majority.

Fall River and Haverhill did not hold elections for mayor this year.

In none of the cities was the complexion of the city governments changed outside of mayor, although in Pittsfield the mayor's vote will cast a deadlock in concurrent actions of the two bodies.

Special legislation was provided for in a few instances, Springfield voting a two-year term instead of one for mayor and city treasurer, while Pittsfield voted in favor of pensions for teachers and Quincy voted for pensions for firemen.

Newport's Election

Newport, R. I., Dec. 8.—A hotly contested election resulted in a victory for Mayor Patrick J. Boyle, who is serving his thirteenth term, over William P. Clarke. There are no party designations on the ballot under the city charter adopted four years ago.

Democrat Elected Mayor of Rochester

Rochester, N. H., Dec. 8.—Representative Joseph Warner, Democrat and Citizen's candidate, defeated Joel W. McCrillis, Republican, in the mayoralty election here by a majority of 295 votes. The city council continues overwhelmingly Republican.

Strout Mayor of Portland

Portland, Me., Dec. 8.—The election here resulted in the choice of Charles A. Strout, Republican, for mayor, over Oakley C. Curtis, Democrat, and the Republicans elected their ward ticket in seven out of the nine wards.

Taft Still Heads Red Cross

Washington, Dec. 8.—President Taft was re-elected president of the American Red Cross at the fifth annual meeting of the association. Mr. Taft expressed the hope that some one some day might present the Red Cross with an endowment fund of $5,000,000 to place its beneficent work on a more permanent basis.

Twenty-One Ships Missing

London, Dec. 8.—Dispatches from Germany say that twenty-one craft from the Finkenwerder, Hanover, fishing fleet are missing and that they are thought to have been lost in the recent storm. Their crews included 100 or more men.

Cabinet Formed In Italy

Rome, Dec. 8.—Baron Sonnino, who was called upon to form a cabinet to replace that under Signor Giolitti, has made a tentative selection.

A FREE DIARY.

We take pleasure in announcing that any of our readers can secure a pocket diary for 1910 by sending 4 one cent stamps to D. Swift & Co., Patent Lawyers, Washington, D. C. The diary is bound in a beautiful stiff red cover, contains 96 pages, gives the amount of corn wheat, oats, tobacco and cotton produced in each State, 20 pages of other valuable information, such as business laws, patent laws, business forms and population of all States and cities: Worth 25 cents. For 3 one-cent stamps, we will also send a fine wall calendar 10 x 11 inches. Send 7 one-cent stamps for the diary and calendar worth fully 40 cents.

The suggestion that the Thanksgiving season be changed from the last of November to the last Saturday and Sunday of the same month is well worth thinking about. It is argued that this would solve a problem that has long vexed the church folk—that of having a Thanksgiving feast that would not interfere with the religions observance of the occasion. The new plan would also enable people to travel from distances to join friends, as they could start at the close of business on a Friday and arrive in season for the turkey, and have plenty of time to get home the next day easily and comfortably, and without rushing and hustling. Also, so far as practicable it is a very good idea to have a holiday and a rest day come together. Saturday and Monday holidays are the most popular of all for this reason. Under the present system people have to return to work the next morning after a day that has taxed the digestive powers and after in many cases, long and tiresome rides in the cars.—Framingham News.

—The Flint, Mich., Journal says that football is to be revised again and that three slaps on the wrist shall be equivalent to a touchdown.—New Britain Herald.

HOLIDAY SEASON DON'TS.

In the hope of lessening the number of petty housebreaks and picked pockets during the coming holiday season, a Boston police official endorsed the following list of "Dont's" as covering the principal ways the public is apt to lose money and valuables by the hundreds of thieves that rush to the city every Christmas:—

Don't wait until the last minute to do your shopping. The stores are always crowded then, and a crowd is a fertile field for the pickpockets.

Don't carry large sums of money with you when you come down town. Use a charge account, or have your purchases sent home C. O. D.

If it is necessary for you to carry the money with you, don't carry it in a satchel or chatelaine. Use a purse, and keep the purse in your pocket.

Don't load yourself up with bundles so that your hands are not free. When you do that you make wourself an "easy mark" for thieves.

Don't fail to lock your doors and spring the locks on your windows when you leave home on a shopping tour. Warn the janitor that you are leaving, and have him keep an eye on your premises.

If you find a thief at work in your house when you return from a shopping tour, don't rush in and warn him that you have arrived. Keep quiet go to a telephone and call up the nearest police station.—Somerville Journal.

The Rayo Lamp

A bright and steady light depends upon the construction of the lamp.

The best skill has put forth its best effort in perfecting the Rayo Lamp.

As the air is fed to the flame—so does the light burn. The easy-flowing current of air through the air-tube of the Rayo Lamp secures a uniform light, with never a flicker or flare.

The ideal family lamp. Made of brass throughout and beautifully nickeled.

The Rayo is a low-priced lamp, but you cannot get a better lamp at any price.

Get ready to be thankful next year. Nothing like getting a good running start, you know.

"Why doesn't the college woman marry?" asks a writer for one of the magazines. Why not ask her?

Looks like the trusts will be put to the trouble of finding another way to do it.

Yes; that hardened old sinner, Joe Cannon is hovering on the horizon again, gentle reader. But cheer up. So is Santa Claus.

The only reason we can see why we should not have a merry Christmas is that Congress is fussing again.

When the insurgents politely ask Mr. Cannon to quit, they may discover that Uncle Joe is not a quitter.

Nicaragua will soon be added to the white man's burden. The peers are swarming, but they can not tell whether it is for a funeral or a celebration.

Senator Aldrich has stormed the West in much the same way that Don Quixote stormed the windmill. A central bank to be controlled by Standard oil is not popular east or west.

Now that the battle of the votes has decided who is to preside over our city the coming year thoughts will turn to the next thing of importance which seems to be Christmas. These are good days to shop especially in the morning when there are not so many about and the clerks are fresh for the day's work and ready to help you select what you need. Quincy merchants have made their stores attractive with Christmas decorations and are stocked with a fine lot of goods. It is doubtful if prospective buyers could find a better or more varied stock of useful and pretty gifts anywhere than can be found this season right in our own city.

Christmas season this year, as for the past two or three years, will have as one of its interesting and helpful side features the use of American Red Cross stamps, which, affixed to gifts ,not only have a decorative and sentimental value, but increase the income for anti-tuberculosis work in sections where they are sold, credit being given to states and communities. It is a subtle yet worthy way of aiding a good cause. Nearly every merchant in Quincy is showing his interest in the work in this city by having the Red Cross stamps on sale and it is reported that there is great demand for the stamps.

The Ledger man was asked the other day why so and so did not advertise. He knew why in that particular case but gave the questioner several reasons leaving him to draw his own conclusions. If there is a man doing business in Quincy whose ad you do not find some time during the year in the columns of the Ledger there is a very good reason. Perhaps his credit is not good and the Ledger is doing too big a business to need space fillers of that kind; possibly the merchant is content to do a small business and not overwork his clerks so he does not want the public to know what he has in stock; then again as a matter of economy he thinks he cannot afford to invest money in advertising and lets his goods get shop-worn instead of making quick sales and getting his money in to reinvest in fresh goods. There are others who do not care to reach right into the homes and present their facts to the whole family but do a street business with flyers that are crushed up and thrown down to blow about the streets ,or picked up from the doorstep and put in the waste paper basket. If a reliable merchant wants to reach the people he does it through a reliable medium and readers of a family newspaper know that almost invariably they can depend on the character of the ads in the paper. The Ledger as a home paper takes pride in its advertising columns and in keeping them free from objectionable matter often turning down good money propositions because of the nature of the advertisement.

The Ledger has, what few suburban dailies have, a good paying subscription list. Think what it means to the advertiser a paper going into 500 or more homes every day in the year where it is carefully read by the whole family. Of course the Ledger has also the usual large transcient sales through the agencies and newsboys and all in all is one of the best advertising propositions within ten miles of Boston and gaining in popularity every day.

Congratulations to Mayor William T. Shea upon his reelection as the executive of the City of Presidents. His honor has many reasons to be proud. He is the first Democrat ever elected Mayor of Quincy for a third term, and no Republican ever received as large a plurality in his third year. Mayor Fairbanks received but 24, Mayor Bryant but 295, and Mayor Thompson but 192, yet Mayor Shea is reelected by a plurality of 914. Every ward of the city except Ward Five gave Mr. Shea a plurality, and he has reason to be proud of his vote in the Republican stronghold at Wollaston, where the Republican candidate resides. At the State election Ward Five gave a Republican plurality of 398 for Gov. Draper, yet it gave Mr. Nichols a plurality of only 111.

As Mayor Shea very truthfully says, he has given the city as its executive the best that was in him. There always will be much to criticise, but often times a Mayor is unjustly censured, and we think this is the case with Mayor Shea. But he has attended very faithfully to the business of the city, giving more time than most of his predecessors to the duties of the office. Quincy is entering upon a very prosperous era, and we believe Mayor Shea realizes this and will do his best to advance the best interests of the city. Hearty congratulations, Mr. Mayor.

DRIFT OF OPINION.

There are exactly ten trans-marine ships which fly the American flag today. There are four on the Atlantic and six on the Pacific. The four Atlantic liners only operate under subsidies granted during Harrison's regime.

Five of the Pacific liners operate at a loss of half a million dollars a year, for the sole purpose of giving the Southern Pacific railway an outlet to the Orient. James J. Hill has one big boat ,the Minnesota connecting with the Orient, and serving the Great Northern railway in a similar capacity.

To realize how completely America has lost her shipping trade, one has but to contemplate England's 11,517 vessels, Germany's 2,094 vessels and little Japan's 865. America's shipping, exclusive of the ten ships mentioned, is confined entirely to the Great lakes and coastwise trade.

There is now a probability that Harriman's death may mean the taking off of the entire Pacific Mail's fleet. Without subsidies, cross-ocean boats hire the cheapest foreign labor they can get and consequently are no part of America's industrial life.

Under present conditions, America is building a $950 000,000 canal for the merchant ships of other lands.—Roach's Financial News.

The activity and good health of the man over forty is one of the features of the present day. "Undoubtedly," observed a member of the Royal Statistical Society, "elderly people appear to maintain what one may call a greater efficiency than they did years ago. I think this is largely due to the great growth in medical skill and also to the fact that people—particularly those in responsible positions—study their physical fitness far more than used to be the case. The man of forty-five or fifty appears today, by careful dieting, golf and healthy exercise generally, to keep himself far more alert and youthful looking than his father or grandfather at a similar age." "My view," said the middle-aged head of a prominent city firm, "is that men in the city preserve their efficiency nowadays far longer than they used to do. I know old men, as you may call them, who still bear upon their shoulders the responsibilities of some big concern. Years ago they would have been sitting at home in their slippers at such an age." "Elderly men study today their appearance far more than they used to do," said the manager of a city bank. "They wear collars and ties and styles of dress which make them look smart and youthful. From my experience it certainly seems that the elderly man is very loth to leave the scene of his activities nowadays. I put it down to our being an abstemious age. Directly a man has a small ailment he goes straight to his physician. What the medical man tells him to do he does exactly. His one desire is to keep fit, and he manages to do so."—London Daily Mail.

The Quippy Ink Thief.

"Women prisoners is quippy," said the jailer. "One had a quip toward writin', and she was always swipin' ink out of the schoolroom.

"She swiped ink in her thimble. She'd fill the thimble up to the brim and then stand it carefully in her hair. Mighty good balancin' was required on the way back to her cell. Still, what if she did spill a drop or two on her scalp? A female convict ain't on view like a society woman, is she?

"Of course as soon as we got on to the thimble game we put a stop to it. That didn't put a stop to the ink stealin', though. I says to her one day on the way back from the schoolroom:

"'Well, Russell, no more poetry writin' with ink what don't belong to ye, hey?'

"She just smiled and mumbled somethin'.

"'Speak up,' says I. 'Do ye miss yer ink—yes or no?'

"'Bub-ub-ub,' says she, tryin' to brush past me. But I grabbed her arm. I noticed a thin black thread of sump'n tricklin' from her lips. Yes, sir! Would ye believe it? She was stealin' the people's ink now in her mouth!"—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Not a Good Mark.

A French actor named Hyacinthe once illustrated the saying, "Discretion is the better part of valor." It was in the month of June, and a company of the national guard of which Hyacinthe was a sergeant was engaging a body of insurgents behind a barricade at the other end of a short street. One of the insurgents in particular, from a corner of the barricade, was making remarkably effective practice on the assailants. At that moment up came a general.

"We must get him to expose himself," said the general. "One of you must clamber up on top of the barricade; then, when our friend at the other end of the street shows himself to take aim, two or three of you fetch him down. Up with you, sergeant!"

"Beg your pardon, general, but perhaps, you see, an insignificant noncommissioned officer like myself may have no attraction for him, but a handsome, distinguished man like you, in that stylish and becoming uniform—he'd be more than mortal if he could resist the temptation. I'll lend you a hand, general."

NEW ROUTE TO BOSTON

Petition to Connect Granite and Shawmut Railroads

Important petitions to Quincy have been filed this week in the office of the Secretary of State to be referred to the next Legislature.

One petition provides for an extension of the Boston & Providence Railroad between Boston and Quincy and Hyde Park, one line to run from Mattapan to a point near Clarendon Hills in Hyde Park, with depressed tracks under the Blue Hill Avenue parkway; another line between the Shawmut and Milton branches to the Granite branch in Quincy. The latter petition contemplates the building of a new railroad station at East Milton.

The building of these connecting links will give Braintree, West Quincy and East Milton a new route to Boston, and may result in the development of the marshes east of the railroad at Atlantic at an early date for Boston freight purposes.

A Truthful Sign.

Mr. Longear—By the way, did you ever know that large ears are a sign of generosity? Miss Beauti—of course, Mr. Longear. They are a sign that nature has been generous.

The Spelling Class.

Teacher—Spell coincidence, Willie. Willie—I can't spell it, but I can tell what it means. Teacher—Well, then, what does it mean? Willie—Twins.—Judge.

He who relies on posterity to do him justice will not feel the pain of disappointment.—Puck.

THE LEDGER EXTRAS

Greater Demand Than Usual for Election News

It took over 4,000 Election Extras of the Daily Ledger last evening to supply the demand for election news, and the Ledger telephone was kept busy all the evening answering calls for news.

It would have been possible for the Ledger to have given the complete vote of the city for Mayor at 5.30 but we waited for complete returns for all candidates, and issued but one extra edition at 7.30, before the last returns were received at City Hall.

The returns in this edition were unusually accurate for all candidates. and the public evidently appreciated the efforts of the Daily Ledger.

The Label Language.

"There's a language in hotel labels, the same as in stamps or flowers," said a courier. "All over Europe the hotel porters paste the hotel labels on your trunks in such a way that the porters in future towns will know what sort of a tipper you are.

"Up at the top of the trunk the label means you are generous. In the middle it means you're a middling sort. Down very low it means you are no good."

Willing to Help.

"Ma, what are the folks in our church gettin' up a subscription fer?"

"To send our minister on a vacation to Europe."

"Won't there be no church services while he's gone?"

"No, dear."

"Ma, I got $1.23 in my bank. Can I give that?"—Cleveland Leader.

WOMEN'S CLUBS

WHAT THEY ARE DOING AND SEASONS' PLANS

A largely attended meeting of the Civic committee of the Quincy Women's club was held Monday afternoon in the interests of tuberculosis work. It was decided to Red Cross the city thoroughly and the afternoon was spent preparing the stamps which will be on sale in nearly every store in the city. There will also be ladies at the Post Office from now on until Christmas to sell the stamps.

* * *

The class in Current Events Mrs. May Alden Ward, lecturer meets at the club house, Thursday afternoon at three o'clock. This is the second in the series being given under the auspices of the Art and Literature committee of the Quincy Women's club.

* * *

Mrs. Herbert Lawton of Presidents hill entertained at luncheon Tuesday Mrs. Harriet Minot Laughlin of Boston who spoke later so interestingly at the meeting of the Quincy Day Nursery association.

Wollaston Alliance has "Christmas for Everybody" at its meeting next week in the Unitarian vestry.

* * *

Mrs. C. Theodore Hardwick was hostess and Mrs. George W. Morton committee for the meeting of the Friday club on December third.

* * *

Mrs. Forrest B. Royal who is working most strenuously in the interests of tuberculosis work in the city was a guest Tuesday afternoon of the Philergians at Braintree. Dr. Gordon was also present. Miss Ellen Emerson gave a lecture on Health. The afternoon was in charge of the Social Service committee and was brought to a close by the usual club tea.

* * *

Mrs. Rufus P. Williams of Cambridge who spoke on anti-tuberculosis work last year at a meeting of the Quincy Women's club and is well known throughout the federated clubs of the state for her interest in the work has designed several new stamps for different state federations to increase the funds to use in those localities. The stamp used by the health department of the general federation bears the usual holiday greeting, the double red cross, intertwined with a golden "U" and surrounded by the laurel wreath of victory. "Victory Through Unity," which this symbol means, is the motto of the health department. The stamp Mrs. Williams designed for the Florida federation has oranges, the state emblem, with the green; Vermont has a wreath of clover, the state flower; Arkansas apple blossoms, and Somerville has the motto, "Victory Through Unity." The Missouri federation has adopted the general federation wreath on its stamp.

* * *

This week Friday evening the Quincy Alliance gives the second in its series of three entertainments at First Church chapel, a recital by Mrs. Elsie Washburn of Boston. Mrs. Washburn will be assisted by Miss Emily Ball Willson, soloist and Mrs. Chandler W. Smith, pianist.

* * *

Third Plantation chapter D. R. of Lynn, presented a beautiful large flag to the new club house of the Lynn women at the dedication on Tuesday evening. Miss Josephine Wright Chapman ,architect of the building is the daughter of Mrs. Mary C. Chapman a former regent of the state society of the Daughters of the Revolution.

* * *

Mrs. J. Henry Emery of Adams street is to open her house on Saturday afternoon for a Christmas sale by Charitable Tens Circle of King's Daughters. This has become an annual feature of the Circle and brings out a large number of friends who wish to help along the work of the Circle.

* * *

Junior Friday club held its only meeting for the month on Monday afternoon with Mrs. Perry Lawton of Presidents hill. Miss Georgiana C. Lane was chairman of the afternoon's program which was a continuation of the study of France with Capetian Kings as the special subject. Sandwiches and ices were served by the hostess during the social hour.

* * *

The Watertown Woman's club observed its fifteenth anniversary Monday and it was also Charter members' day.

* * *

Junior Alliance of First church holds its regular meeting in the church parlor on Monday evening when Miss Mary E. Harris will be the speaker.

Mothers' meeting at Bethany chapel last week was largely attended and Miss Edith Randall's paper on Holland proved most entertaining.

Owing to the rush of the Christmas season but one meeting of the Quincy Women's club will be held this month that of Dec. 14th which will be in charge of the Arts and Crafts committee. The speaker will be Vesper Lincoln George who takes for his subject "Household Art." Mr. George has made it a study for years and the club is assured a pleasant and profitable afternoon.

* * *

Clubs in the National Federation of Women's clubs are doing considerable work along civic lines, one of the most active being that of Cincinnati. This is to be the hostess club for the next biennial meeting and already clubs are looking ahead and planning to send delegates to the meeting. Ten years ago the club commenced to raise funds for a clubhouse the stock issue being placed at $75,000 and the shares at $50 each. The building will be ready for the biennial. It is in colonial style with two auditoriums, committee rooms, office, library, kitchen dining rooms and other features.

A provision shower is being held this afternoon at Bethany chapel for the benefit of the Day Nursery and liberal donations mean a nice Christmas dinner for several little children as well as good daily rations. Some twenty children are now accommodated at the Nursery and soon larger quarters will be necessary as month by month working mothers realize what such a place means to them and their children .

* * *

The Christmas meeting of the Quincy Alliance in First Church chapel on Monday afternoon will be in charge of Mrs. Isabelle Davis and a fine program is promised of a miscellaneous character, participated in by daughters of members. It will be real Christmasy and a good time for all.

* * *

A landlord with an economical turn of mind when his tenants moved out put up a sign in the window announcing the house was to let and sat down to wait for new tenants. Another landlord, a wiser one, rushed to the newspaper office and advertised his house and had tenants ready to move in as soon as house was vacant. The ad cost him only a small amount and he lost no rent. The economical landlord is still looking for tenants and losing rent every day. Which landlord are you?

New England Wheaton Seminary club holds its December meeting Dec. 11th at hotel Vendome, Boston with business at 1.30 and lecture at 2.15 by President S. V. Cole, D. D., who will give readings from his own writings. There will be piano duets by George M. Stiner and Mrs. Nellie E. Swain followed by a social time and tea from 3.30 to 5.

* * *

There was a good attendance Tuesday afternoon at the clubhouse for the meeting of the Quincy Day Nursery association. Mrs. Harriet Minot Laughlin, president of the Dover Street Day Nursery in Boston was the speaker and told of her sixteen years' experience in the work. She presented much helpful matter to the local association which has outgrown its small beginning and now needs to reorganize and systematize the work. Mrs. Laughlin's talk was valuable and inspiring to the ladies who are working so earnestly to help the working mothers and little children of Quincy.

DAUGHTERS OF REVOLUTION.

Adams Chapter Daughters of the Revolution held a very informal meeting Monday afternoon at the birthplace of President John Adams. The meeting was held in the west parlor and was bright with sunshine and a blazing log fire in the fireplace.

After the regular routine business an interesting paper on John Howard Payne, written by Eliza Philbrick of the North Bridge chapter of Salem, was read by Mrs. William Porter. The author of "Home Sweet Home" is remembered throughout the land although dead for many years.

A social cup of tea and crackers brought the meeting to a close.

The State society will celebrate "tea party day" Thursday, Dec. 16, at hotel Victoria, Boston ,by a reception from two until half past two to the state officers which will be followed by a paper, music and refreshments.

Junior Sons and Daughters of the Revolution hold a Christmas party Dec. 18 from two until five in Sewall hall, Boston, with entertainment, dancing and refreshments. Those attending are asked to bring gifts to be given to poor and needy children at Christmas.

CLUB WORK.

Among the special subjects of interest to the Federated Women's clubs is forestry.

A majority of the Massachusetts clubs have taken some interest in this subject. There has been the meeting with lecture or paper, or a practical talk from a tree warden ,often open to the public, or shared by many guests. Tree guards have been placed planting done, protests have been made against tree cutting and attention has been called to insect infestation.

Arbor day observation in the schools has interested many clubs and a large number are encouraging school and home gardening.

One club conducted 100 successful children's home gardens at a cost of $20, and others are establishing gardens upon the same plan.

Other work with children consists chiefly of prizes for essays on forestry, or for collections of leaves, flowers, ferns, mosses, mushrooms, etc., with the ability to name them; a tree talk in the school, a bird and tree study class and invitations to pupils ,teachers and school officials to attend forestry meetings.

Conservation of waterways and the reforestation act are matters of recent development that suggest lines of study and work.

To the question "What shall we do?" the forestry committee recommends to the clubs: "First study the subject as carefully as you would Shakespeare, Browning, or Ibsen. Whether the question be upon neglected trees on one's own street or upon fifty billion bond issue for a unified system of national waterways; we must know what we are talking about, else how can we hope that our influence will count? Altruistic people sometimes say: 'I don't like study about mere things give me humanity to study.' Our subjects are all social and economic problems, thrilling in their bearing upon every human being and upon posterity. Their study is a literary and aesthetic delight. It gives zest and charm to every walk and drive, however stale and worn the way. If it discovered evil it shows its cure. There is no end to the suggestions for something worth doing. Many of these things can be done by you, if you only know how. Birds ,trees, flowers, fruits, forests, rivers and little brooks ,the whole universe of nature and society, the homes and the children call to you through the forestry department." —Lynn Item.

MAGAZINE OF CHRISTMAS CHEER.

An original conception in a Christmas greeting is found upon the cover of the National Magazine for December. It is the first of a series of Uncle Sam covers planned for 1910. In full uniform he is represented dragging home a generous-sized Christmas tree. with a smile on his face that portrays the good-natured and prosperous Santa Claus. In his hand is shown the axe with which he has captured the Yule-tide trophy. The National sparkles with the Christmas spirit and even the stern dignity of officialdom at Washington in the glow of Christmas good cheer, is portrayed by Editor Joe Chapple in his own congenial way. The felicities of the season adorn the stern business letters, and the reader begins feeling Christmassy before he has been long submerged in the pages of the December National.

QUINCY CHORAL SOCIETY.

The eighth rehearsal of the Choral society on Tuesday evening was well attended, in spite of disagreeable weather conditions, and a great deal of work accomplished. The singers this year continue to show the same spirit of willingness to try and try again, until every difficult passage is thoroughly learned, that counted for so much in the successful rendering of Elijah at the first concert. Although Conductor Wonson would insist that any class of singers under his instruction should learn their music thoroughly, yet he argues that study in the right spirit is more successful than that done grudgingly and he is convinced that the Messiah concert will be one of very great excellence.

Plans for the concert are nearly completed the date being set for Tuesday evening, February 15th. Mrs. Grace Bonner Williams, who sang this part for the Handel and Haydn society last year and will sing it again for them at the December 19th concert this year, is the soprano already engaged and the other soloists will be of equal reputation. No expense will be spared to make this "first production of the Messiah in Quincy" one that any city might be proud to support and although it may be necessary to set the price of a small section of seats at one dollar the greater bulk of the house will be sold at seventy-five and fifty cents as it was last year. It is still the first aim of our young society that these great compositions shall be produced in the best possible manner at prices which shall debar no music lover from hearing them.

RED CROSS STAMPS.

On Thursday afternoon the Red Cross stamps will be on sale at the Quincy post offices. A corps of women of Quincy will be at the post offices from 9 A. M. until 5 P. M. every day until Christmas. The week before Christmas the stamps will also be sold evenings in the post offices as long as the offices are open. Mr. Hammond post master has been most courteous in his willingness to welcome the sale of the Red Cross stamp in the corridor of the post office and will provide comfortable accommodations for those who expressed such ready enthusiasm and willingness to sell the Red Cross stamps.

UNIVERSALIST GRAND FAIR

Election Extras of Daily Ledger on Sale

The grand two days' fair being held in the Universalist church vestry opened Tuesday night with a supper at 6.30, consisting of baked beans, cold meats, fancy pies, etc. The supper was in charge of an efficient committee, Mrs. George E. Sprague being chairman.

Many upon entering the vestry expressed their surprise as a number of improvements have taken place during the past month. The vestry has been cleaned and newly painted, new gas fixtures have been added and its general appearance greatly improved. This was done by the boys of the Sunday school assisted by some willing workers.

For this occasion the vestry was decorated with red and green crepe paper streamers, the various tables being also decorated in the same colors. The decorating was in charge of Miss Annie Hobart, and many expressions of praise were heard.

The Ladies Aid society sold aprons and useful articles, being in charge of Mrs. James Harris, Mrs. Charles Veazie and Miss Susan Bradbury.

The Dorcas society sold fancy articles being in charge of Mrs. W. F. Carman, Mrs. George F. Spooner, Mrs. Lermond and Miss Mary Blake.

The Murray club sold candy being in charge of Mrs. Robert Reed, assisted by the members of the club.

Mrs. Hobart's class of boys sold mystery packages and grab boxes, these were in charge of Bartlett Spooner, Elmer and Lester Sprague, Herbert Morton and Irving Fletcher.

The Parish Committee sold canned goods, groceries, etc., in charge of Charles Hobart, G. W. Gragg and Arthur Merritt, assisted by Mrs. Hobart and Mrs. Gragg.

The Y. P. C. U. had the ice cream table being in charge of Ralph Merritt.

Miss Harriet Lombard was Rebecca at the well, selling orangeade.

Miss Katherine Reed had post cards and Christmas cards for sale and later the Daily Ledger election extras.

The entertainment for the evening was in charge of Mrs. George F. Spooner, and consisted of the following: selections by the French orchestra, readings by Miss Smith of Norfolk Downs, vocal solos by Miss Eleanor Crane and readings by Master Beale of Braintree. The entertainment was thoroughly enjoyed by all. Those in charge of the tables were kept busy, and a good sum was realized.

The sale will be continued tonight with an entertainment at 8 o'clock.

JEWEL FOR MASTER

Wollaston Lodge Re-elects Walter S. Pinkham

The annual meeting of Wollaston lodge, A. F. & A. M., was held Tuesday evening and the following officers elected:

Worshipful Master—Walter S. Pinkham.

Senior Warden—Charles E. Monroe.

Junior Warden—Charles E. Cherrington.

Treasurer—I. Woodbury Pinkham.

Secretary—Alfred H. Richards.

Chaplin—Rev. Edward A. Chase.

Marshal—Charles B. Hoxie.

Senior Deacon—Carroll E. Bates.

Junior Deacon—John Morgan.

Senior Steward—George A. Smith.

Junior Steward—Hugh H. Ralph.

Sentinel—Arthur B. Hillmen.

Organist—Herbert Y. Follett.

Tyler—William P. Chase.

Following election the officers were installed by Wor. Albert W. Fay, assisted by Wor. Sidney F. Copeland as grand marshall.

A pleasing incident after the installation was the presentation to Worshipful Walter S. Pinkham of a past masters' jewel, the presentation being made by the Chaplain, Rev. Edward A. Chase.

TO LIGHT SIX ROOM HOUSE.

It is no small task even for a good engineer to arrange the lighting of an ordinary six room house. Of course, when lighting is being considered and figured on, such little items as paint and wall paper make a great difference in the general results. In a general way it is a good rule to use light tints for both paper and paint because they reflect the light and consequently it does not require so many lamps or so much electricity to properly light the house. Dark wall paper absorbs the light and should be avoided as it is impossible to get a good lighting effect with dark tints.

In laying out the plans for the following rooms it is to be understood that the walls and ceilings are tinted a light yellow or a light buff and that the wood work is only a shade or two darker.

Porch light, located directly above the front door with switch in vestibule. An eight candle-power lamp is sufficient.

Reception room, two ornamental ceiling lamp fixtures for Tungsten 32 candle-power lamps; controlled by button switch on the reception room side of vestibule hall, and also from the head of the stairs. This arrangement is most convenient.

Living room, planned for two lighting effects. Five light Tungsten ceiling fixtures controlled from point near reception room entrance. This fixture may be installed so that a push of the button throws on one, two, three or five of the lights. A reading lamp is also provided for the table.

Dining room is lighted with an ornamental pendant lamp hanging low from the ceiling. The lamp should be about forty candle-power, chain pull socket.

Kitchen lighting is obtained from a single ceiling lamp switched on or off from wall near dining room entrance.

Basement lighting should always be controlled from head of stairs with an indicating switch, enabling one to turn light on before going down stairs and to turn it out after returning to the kitchen.

In the modern home to today, where so many electrical appliances are used, it has become quite the fashion to install wall sockets for such conveniences as the electric iron, fans, small motors, chafing dish cookers, and other heating devices.

The upstairs hall light should be controlled from the head of the stairs.

Bed room lighting should be controlled from a point very near the entrance. Wall brackets are used, their position varying with the style of furniture used.

The bath room should be lighted with a wall lamp on each side of the mirror. Suitable wall sockets for such heating devices as the shaving mug, water heater massage machine and luminous radiator to be provided. Small Tungsten lamps are suitable for all the upstairs lighting.

AN UP-TO-DATE DRUGGIST

says it is surprising how many old-fashioned remedies are being used, which goes to show that it is hard to improve some of our grandmothers' old time-tried remedies. For instance, for keeping the hair dark, soft and glossy, nothing equaling our grandmothers' "sage tea" has ever been discovered. Although, by the addition of sulphur and other ingredients, this old-fashioned brew has been made more effective as a scalp tonic and color restorer. Nowadays when our hair comes out or gets faded or gray, instead of going to the garden or garret for herbs and making the "tea" ourselves, we simply go to the nearest drug store and ask for a bottle of Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur. This preparation is sold by all leading druggists for 50 cents and $1 a bottle, or is sent direct by the Wyeth Chemical Company, 74 Cortlandt St., New York City, upon receipt of price.

ESTRADA'S MEN MEET DEFEAT

Zelaya's Triumph at Rama Makes American Task Hard

CRUCIAL POINT IS REACHED

Nicaraguan Revolution Now Said to Be Extending Into Honduras—Recognized In Washington That It May Complicate the Situation—Davila's Actions May Make Trouble With Other Central American Rulers

Washington, Dec. 8.—Unofficial reports announcing that the Zelaya forces have been victorious at Rama have been received here, and foreshadow serious consequences, as Zelaya's success would doubtless mean sharp resistance to the United States bluejackets and marines when they land on Nicaraguan soil.

Although the United States government is ready to take any action deemed necessary against Zelaya, it should be hoped that the Estrada forces would make the task easy by its continued successes.

Rama is now recognized as a crucial point in the struggle for supremacy between Zelaya and General Estrada. If Zelaya defeats the revolutionary forces there it will mean that he again takes the upper hand and this means trouble for the insurgents and all who side with them.

It is hoped at the state department that the rumors of Zelaya's success at Rama are not founded. In the meantime the navy department's plan of concentrating forces on both Nicaraguan coasts is being carried out with regularity.

Official reports to the state department indicate that the Nicaragua fight is being extended into Honduras and that Manual Bonila is planning a revolution to overthrow President Davila of Honduras, who is said to be a partisan of Zelaya.

In order to check the effectiveness of this revolution, Honduras has been placed under martial law. By this means it is hoped to check the spreading sentiment in favor of Davila. That the trouble in Honduras may complicate the situation is admitted here.

Honduras has been long suspected of being friendly to Zelaya. Held in restraint by the Washington peace conference of 1907, Honduras has not been able to defend Zelaya openly, but it is now feared Davila may take more drastic measures, declare himself openly in favor of Zelaya and thereby precipitate trouble with his enemies in his own country and with the rulers of the other Central American republics.

Word reached the navy department that the Albany and Yorktown have reached Acupapulco, Mex., en route for Corinto. Pending their arrival the Vicksburg will continue to "hold the fort" at Corinto, remaining there watching developments.

HELD IN $2000 EACH

Four Alleged Holdup Men Get Strong Taste of Law In Boston

Boston, Dec. 8.—Petit larceny received a blow in the municipal court when a total of $8000 bail was imposed on four defendants for two alleged offenses where the money taken in each case was not over $5.

Clifton E. Russell declared that because he refused to loan money to two men they set upon him, gave him a severe beating and took his money. His face appeared to bear out his testimony, for it was badly bruised.

The men held for the grand jury on the charge were James L. Stearns and James F. Murray. They were each held in $2000 for the grand jury.

Similar tactics, it is charged, were used on Lawrence Daly, who was robbed of $5. James O'Toole and Patrick Foley are charged with the crime, and each held in $2000 for the grand jury.

ACTRESS IN CUSTODY

Said to Have Swindled Unwary People In Many Cities

Chicago, Dec. 8.—Donna Seymour, an actress, indicted by the grand jury on a charge of operating a confidence game, is under arrest here. She is wanted, the police say, at Lowell, Mass., New York, Peoria, Ills., and other cities.

The woman, the police assert, has swindled many persons out of amounts ranging from $300 to $500. Her method of operation is to advertise in the newspapers for a man to act as "manager and treasurer" of a theatrical troupe, get him to put up all the money he wishes to risk, and then disappear.

Records Broken by Cyclists

New York, Dec. 8.—Ten teams of the fourteen still remaining in the six-day bicycle grind here covered 957 miles at the end of the forty-seventh hour. The score of the leaders is nearly three miles better than the previous record.

Wagner and Clark With Pirates

Pittsburg, Dec. 8.—Hans Wagner and Fred Clarke have accepted terms offered by the Pittsburg ball club for next year. This official announcement was made here.

PIERCE IS ACQUITTED

Texas Jury Finds That Oil Magnate Is Not Guilty of Perjury

Austin, Dec. 8.—Henry C. Pierce, head of the Waters-Pierce Oil company, was acquitted after trial on the charge of perjury. The offense with which Pierce was charged was committed on May 30, 1904, when he made an affidavit in which he swore:

"The Waters-Pierce Oil company is not a party to any agreement or understanding with the Standard Oil company or any other corporation to regulate or fix the prices of any article of manufacture, and is not a party to any agreement to limit the amount or supply or quantity of any article of manufacture."

Later, when Attorney General Hadley brought suit to oust the Standard Oil company of Missouri it was proved that at the time Pierce made his affidavit the Standard owned two-thirds of the stock of the Waters-Pierce company. Attorney General Lightfoot of Texas soon afterwards had an indictment returned against Pierce in Texas.

CROSS APPEAL FILED

Labor Federation Sends Bucks Case to the Supreme Court

Washington, Dec. 8.—The American Federation of Labor noted a cross appeal to the United States supreme court from the decision of the district court of appeals in the injunction case of the Bucks Stove and Range company of St. Louis. Chief Justice Shepard allowed the appeal.

The St. Louis concern some time ago appealed from the decision on the ground that the court erred in modifying the injunction of the lower court.

This cross appeal of the labor organization is based on the theory that the appellate court ought to have further modified the decree or reversed it. The result of both appeals, it is suggested, leaves the decision of the court of appeals friendless before the supreme court.

TEMPORARY TRUCE IS NOT ACCEPTED

No Change Noted In the Strike Situation at Ludlow

Ludlow, Mass., Dec. 8.—The failure of the striking employes of the Ludlow Manufacturing associates to reach a decision on the matter of accepting the terms of temporary agreement suggested by the state board of arbitration leaves the matter "up in the air."

The strikers held a mass meeting Tuesday and dispersed without result. Their leaders conferred with representatives of the Springfield Central Labor union in that city last night, but again without action on the terms.

The matter of further evictions is problematical, but it is understood that the company will not oust more families for a week, at least.

FOR THE THIRD TIME

Fall River Cotton Manufacturers Waive Right to Reduce Wages

Fall River, Mass., Dec. 8.—There will be no reduction in the wages paid the 30,000 operatives in Fall River cotton mills during the next six months. This was announced by the Cotton Manufacturers' association, following a conference with the Textile union representatives, at which the manufacturers waived their rights to cut wages.

Under the provisions of the sliding scale agreement they were entitled to reduce wages 8 percent, their margin of profit during the past six months having decreased in that proportion. They explained, however, that having stocked up well with cotton at low prices, they are able to give the operatives the benefit of the existing high prices.

This is the third consecutive time the manufacturers have waived their rights.

WINE BETTER THAN LIQUOR

Argument That Americans Do Not Appreciate Value of Grape Juice

New York, Dec. 8.—The problem of educating the American public to indulge in native wines in preference to whisky and beer came up for discussion at the opening of the annual convention of the American Wine Growers' association.

"The American people are not wine drinkers," said L. J. Vance, secretary of the association, "because they have not been educated to appreciate the value of wine consumption and because they have been unable to get imported wines at a reasonable price." Incidentally, W. E. Hildreth, president of the association, said the tide of prohibition was turning.

Two New Rear Admirals

Washington, Dec. 8.—The rank of rear admiral was conferred upon A. C. Dillingham and Hugo Osterhaus by the navy department. Osterhaus has been assigned to the command of the fourth division of the Atlantic battleship fleet.

Marshal Field's Great Wealth

Chicago, Dec. 8.—The net receipts from the estate of the late Marshal Field from March 1, 1907, to June 30, 1909, were $34,922,349, according to a report filed in the probate court by the executors.

CHAPTER XI.

THE WOMAN WHO TEMPTED HIM.

JENNY, who had been hidden in her little room during this long interview, waiting, watchful for an opportunity to see Philip alone, now entered the larger apartment swiftly and darted to the window.

Where were they going? She looked out of the window. Would Joe tarry out his promise? She had paid him for his service.

She saw a boy run out of a doorway, speak to Philip and give him a note.

She was all prepared for him. She had taken off her dress and put on a soft wrapper of yellow and black, with her daintiest, filmsiest things underneath and just a touch of perfume. She had let down her thick hair and left it hanging over her shoulders. Then she had opened a bottle of gold dust fluid and carefully applied little dabs of it to her arms and shoulders, where it remained in shining blotches.

Poor Jenny! She built such high hopes upon this primitive ruse of hers, this trap of her physical attractions laid for the man whom she worshiped and would have served so loyally and with a devotion that asked so little in return. This was what life had taught her. The dregs through which she had waded clung to her. She believed that through them she could attain her high purpose, for her love for Philip was high and true, compact of the noblest aspirations, the best of all of her.

She would not stoop to the base use of her knowledge of Margaret's relationship. Mr. Jackson had saved her from that baseness, but all was fair in love, and she was beautiful. That weapon, given her, she would employ.

Presently the door opened. "Who's there?" she called.

"It's I," replied Philip. "Hello! Are you here?"

"Yes," confusedly. "I—er—I was fixing up the room. I did not expect you."

The girl came forward, walking rather unsteadily. "I don't feel well," she said. "It is a sort of dizziness." She put her hand to her eyes.

"You're weak and faint," exclaimed Philip. "You must sit down."

Jenny sat down obediently.

"Has Joe Caffrey been here?" asked Philip.

"No."

"He wants to see me."

Jenny sighed faintly.

"Want a blanket around you?"

"No; I'm too hot already. Maybe I have fever." She held out her hand.

"Your hand is warm," said Philip, "but it seems all right to me."

He drew up a chair and sat down at her side.

"I'm so unhappy, Phil," murmured Jenny. "What can I do? Tell me, Phil. You're the only one I can turn to, and—oh, it's awfully hard!"

"I know, Jenny, but"—

"I've tried to do right, haven't I? I've taken any old kind of work, and, God knows, $5 a week isn't much for a girl who's lived as I have. Why, $5 a day wouldn't pay for the flowers I used to get! Haven't I come down and lived and worked in this rotten place and never kicked?"

"Indeed you have, Jenny. You've been fine," said Philip earnestly.

"Sometimes I ask myself what's the use of being decent. Who cares?"

"We all care."

Jenny smiled wistfully. "Do you care, Phil? I did it all for you."

"You did it because it was right, Jenny," he said gravely, but he felt vaguely uncomfortable under her pleading eyes.

"Phil," she went on, "you don't know how hard my work is. This gold dust stuff seems to eat right into me, and I can't get it off. See here," and she showed him the marks.

He gazed at the gilt marks on her neck and spoke sympathetically to her.

Jenny interrupted him.

"Phil, do you ever think of the old days, before I was married? You said I was pretty."

"You were pretty," he answered unsteadily, "and—and you are pretty."

How his pulses throbbed!

"Yes?" she brightened. "And, Phil, you kissed me once. I remember what you said."

"What did I say?" he faltered.

"You said my lips were the sweetest things you ever tasted."

He rose in agitation.

"I must go, Jenny," he said. "I—I can't wait."

"Not yet, Phil," she begged, and, swiftly changing the ground of her attack, she spoke of her life with such humble sadness that Philip, touched and reassured, sat down again. It seemed, she said, as if an evil star hung over her. Why should George have been killed? If he had been spared her everything would have been different. And if they hadn't taken away her little baby and let it die then still she would have had something to live for. Her voice broke as she spoke of her baby. And if that selfish woman hadn't left her husband alone then, perhaps even then, she would have kept straight. But things had been too hard for her. She hadn't had a fair chance, and—

She turned to Philip with her whole soul in her eyes. "Tell me, Phil, do you think me a wicked girl?"

"No, Jenny, I—I don't."

"Oh, thank you!" she cried.

"Sit closer to me—here. People get lonely, don't they, Phil?"

Her eyes were burning on him.

"Ye-es."

"And want to be loved, don't they?"

"I—I suppose so."

"And—sometimes petted?"

He could not speak; he could only look at her, at her swimming eyes and her red, half parted lips. She trembled with the love that scars and sears, but will have its way. For a moment she met his eyes and then with swift passion caught him in her arms.

"I love you!" she cried passionately. "Oh, how I love you!"

She kissed him full on the lips again and again, and he returned her kisses.

Then at this moment of peril—then suddenly some power in him cleared his brain, and in a flash of sober vision he saw Margaret, his Margaret, looking at him with grave reproof. With sudden revulsion he broke away from her, crying:

"What a dog I am!"

Jenny, disillusioned, humiliated, rose quickly and stood looking at him. A bottle on the table caught his attention. It was the little flask of liquid gold. The truth suddenly flashed upon him. She had been playing a part; she had tricked him here to—to destroy him.

"You little devil!" he cried.

"Phil!" she cried in fear.

"Let me see those stains," he ordered, and he tore her wrapper open, exposing her neck. He rubbed his fingers over the stains.

"Ah, I thought so! You said it wouldn't come off. It comes off quite easily. You were lying to me."

"No," she said weakly.

He opened the bottle.

"I say you were lying. It's the same stuff. You brought it here; you put it on your shoulders; you—you"—

"I didn't mean any harm."

"No harm!" he shouted. "Heavens! What do you call harm? Because you hate the girl I love you get me here by tricks and lies. Joe Caffery never sent that note!"

"He wrote it, Phil."

"You made him write it. If he wanted to see me he'd be here. You wanted to get me here—alone."

He paused.

"Do you—do you own up?"

"Yes," she said faintly.

"Phil, I—I did it because"—

"You're bad all through."

Jenny shrank in despair.

"I am bad all through?" she said quietly. "All right. I got you here by a trick? That's true. And I hate the girl you love? You bet I do!

"But what are you?" she flamed. "You are a loyal lover; you are a preacher of reform, Philip Ames, but you held me in your arms, and you kissed my mouth!"

She paused, then added:

"And you liked it! You liked it!"

She showed the scorn of the woman for the man who is weak and places the blame on her.

Philip sank into a chair, crushed, burying his face in his hands. How could he ever face Margaret again?

Jenny forgot herself, her defeat, in the desire to console the beloved one. It was a sister's feeling, pure, compassionate, unselfish.

She knelt beside him and compassionately whispered his name.

He rose with hatred in his voice:

"Don't speak to me."

The tone drove her to a desperate determination.

"Do you mean that?" she asked.

"Yes, I mean it."

Philip's voice was that of the man who echoes the weak plea of the first man; The woman tempted me.

"Then it's all off," Jenny said briskly. Her mind was made up.

She went to her room and returned with hat and cloak.

"I am going. I won't trouble you any more. Goodby."

Philip did not grasp the horrible meaning of her words.

Jenny still had a lingering hope. But Philip neither moved nor spoke. So she said her final farewell, pleadingly:

"I am sorry, Phil—but I—I loved you, and when a girl as bad as I am loves a man—it is"—

The door closed behind her.

Haggleton found Philip in the room an hour later.

"I have had an unpleasant experience," said the son.

"With Jenny Moran?"

"Yes; it was Jenny. I tried to help her."

Haggleton brushed some face powder off Philip's sleeve. Philip blushed.

"I see," he said, then resolutely, "She's in love with you?"

"Love!" answered Philip, with loathing.

"H'm!" mused Haggleton, brushing some more face powder off the lapel of Philip's coat. "Next time I would advise you to help some older and homelier female."

"Don't speak to me."

Haggleton proceeded to give the young man a little lesson in practical worldly wisdom.

"Nothing has happened, has there?" he asked.

"I took her in my arms. I kissed her."

"It is a little thing."

"Little?" Philip's voice grew bitter. "If I cannot control myself in little things, how can I control myself in big things? I am engaged to a fine, pure girl. I must tell her, and she will despise me."

Haggleton slowly walked up and down with him.

"Why tell her?" he asked. "She has a right to know anything serious, but this isn't serious. You love her, don't you?"

"Love her? I worship her! Oh!"

"You don't care for this other woman?" persisted Haggleton.

"No! Indeed not!"

"Then you are easy with your conscience. It would be cowardly to tell her. You would simply transfer the regret from your shoulders to hers. It would cause her needless pain. Repentance is best done in silence when open confession means suffering to others."

"By George, you are right!" exclaimed Philip. "I must not tell her."

He added:

"It's wonderful how you see the best thing to do. I don't know why I speak of it, but I—I feel a sympathy for you, sir. I used to think you were—sort of inhuman, but you've been kind to me, and—you have taught me a lot. Sometimes," Philip went on, puzzling, "I have thought that I have two natures, one from my mother, the other"—his face darkened—"from my father."

"What about your father?"

"My father was not a good man, Mr. Haggleton. He—he pretty well broke my mother's heart."

"How do you know that he was cruel to her?"

"I know how she suffered."

"But she never said what your father did?"

"I never asked. I just grew up with the idea that my life was set apart for a special work. I have a trade for my living, but my real work is to help the poor. But sometimes I feel another thing urging me—a hateful, infernal thing, urging me toward money and—and all that."

Philip's voice was anxious:

"That is why this Jenny affair is so serious. It shows the weakness in me."

Haggleton, seeing his opportunity to strengthen the ultimate position in which the last, the decisive struggle must be fought, grasped it with determination.

"We are all weak, my boy," he said (and how sweet it was to say those two words, "my boy"). "I will show you how weak I am. It isn't entirely to study the problem of poverty that I am down here."

"No?" Philip looked interested.

"Years ago I did something that I—regret—something wrong. And—Gentle knows it."

"Gentle!"

"Yes. I am making amends for that wrong now."

Haggleton stopped, getting ready for his final argument.

"You will not try to find out what it is that I did in the past?"

"I certainly won't. It is not for me to judge another man."

"And if Gentle should try to tell you?"

"I won't let him tell me."

HIS REMARKS CHALLENGED

Banker Clews Attacks Socialism In an Address to Students

Cambridge, Mass., Dec. 8.—In an address delivered in the Harvard Union last night before 500 students of the university, Henry Clews, the New York banker, took bitter issue with the claims of the Socialist party.

He declared that municipal ownership, such as Socialism contemplates, would lead to more graft and corruption than was ever known in the worst days of the Tweed ring.

"Socialism is self-contradictory and opposed to the deepest human interests," said Clews. "Its origin is purely selfish, and it overlooks the fact that the identical love of gain which seeks to equalize the distribution of wealth will not be satisfied with equality."

Not all Clews' arguments were accepted without question by his hearers, for there is a large Socialistic organization in the university. His conclusions in regard to the problem of municipal ownership called forth the most adverse comment.

DEATH BY ASPHYXIATION

Young Married Woman and Unknown Man In Suicide Pact

Woonsocket, R. I., Dec. 8.—A suicide compact which resulted in the death by asphyxiation of Mrs. Octave Sylvestre St. George, aged 20, and an unidentified man, aged about 50, was disclosed last night when the authorities broke into the room occupied by the couple at the Commercial hotel and found their dead bodies.

Doors, windows and transom had been closed and fastened, an electric light was burning and there were partially consumed refreshments in the room, while one gas jet had been left open.

The couple came to the hotel Monday night. Mrs. St. George was the wife of Clement St. George, who formerly lived here, but has been living elsewhere for some months.

A name tag sewed in the man's clothes bore the name of F. B. Clouette, the same initials being marked on other portions of his clothing.

RELATIVES WANT AN INVESTIGATION

Suspicions as to Cause of Death of an Aged Man

North Adams, Mass., Dec. 8.—An autopsy was performed on the body of L. J. Gardner, a retired newspaper man, who died at Williamstown. He had returned but a few days before from Troy, N. Y., asylum. It revealed that Gardner's breastbone and two ribs were broken, and the body was a mass of bruises.

The autopsy was ordered by Medical Examiner Brown. Dr. Elliott of Troy, the head of the institution to which Gardner was sent, said that he made a casual investigation at his sanitarium and that in his opinion Gardner's injuries were the result of a fall.

Gardner, who was well along in years, and whose mind had failed slightly, was sent to a private sanitarium in Troy, N. Y., about three weeks ago. He had been there eleven days when his son-in-law, L. J. Hickox, went to see him. He found Gardner in a much weakened condition.

One eye had been blackened and he was bruised from head to foot. He brought him home to Williamstown, where he died Monday. The family of Gardner, it is understood, have retained two lawyers to push an investigation of the case.

FLOATS FOR FEW MINUTES

Cruiser Yankee Then Returns to Bed of Old Ocean

New Bedford, Mass., Dec. 8.—Raised from her bed in the mud of Buzzards bay through forty feet of water, the United States cruiser Yankee remained on the surface for a few minutes, then suddenly sank to the bottom. Two men who were at work inside the hull sprang to a hatchway when they felt the vessel settling and succeeded in swimming to a place of safety.

The Yankee went ashore on the Hen and Chickens reef about a year and a half ago. The Arbuckle concern succeeded in freeing her, by the use of compressed air, several months later, and towed her nearly ten miles into Buzzards bay, where she sank. Several unsuccessful efforts have since been made to raise her.

Shoots Girl and Himself

Buffalo, Dec. 8.—What will undoubtedly result in successful attempt at murder and suicide occurred on Erie street when John Schaubert shot Emma Jantzen, 18 years old, twice and sent a bullet into his own head. The shooting, the police say, was the result of Schaubert's infatuation for the girl. Schaubert has a wife and two children.

New Comet Discovered

Princeton, N. J., Dec. 8.—Zaccheus Daniel discovered a new comet while at work in the Princeton observatory. The position of the comet is in right ascension, 6 hours, 16 minutes and the declination is north about 34 degrees. It is in the constellation of Auriga.

The Alexandrian Library.

Omar, a fanatical caliph who overran Egypt about the middle of the seventh century, proclaimed that, since the Koran contained everything that human beings ought to read, no other books had any right to exist, so he condemned to destruction the immense library at Alexandria founded by the Ptolemies and constantly enlarged by their successors until the advent of the Saracens. How enormous it was can be imagined from the fact that for six months the manuscripts supplied the fuel of 4,000 public baths. It was the most terrible blow ever inflicted upon literature.

Genius Rewarded.

A schoolmaster not famous for his personal beauty swooped down on the inattentive boy and found him drawing caricatures. He picked up one and asked the boy in a voice of thunder, "Is this meant for me?"

"Please, sir," said the victim, in a state of terror—"please, sir, I did not mean to make it so like."

The master destroyed the picture and let the matter drop.—London Globe.

Thought It Was a Proposal.

Scene—Cab stand near London. Lady distributing tracts, hands one to cabby, who glances at it, hands it back and says politely, "Thank you, lady, but I'm a married man." Lady nervously looks at the title and, reading "Abide with me," hurriedly departs, to the great amusement of cabby.—London Spare Moments.

BRIEFS

Miss Edna Newman a typical western girl from Kankakee, Illinois, is visiting Miss Pauline Swingle of 1230 Hancock street.

The Young People's Religious Union of First church is to give a dance Monday evening Dec. 27, at Alpha hall Miss Lela B. Smith is the chairman of a committee on arrangements.

Several copies of the Daily Ledger extra containing full account of the city election were presented to the committee on the fair held at the Universalist vestry last evening and found ready sale.

"My turn next" is the title of the farce to be presented this evening at the First Presbyterian church by the young people of the church. It is to be given in aid of the pipe organ fund. Following the play there will be a social and refreshments will be served. Such well known amateurs as "Honey" Collins, Miss Anna R. Giles, Miss Margaret Craige and Irving Kemp, members of the Sans Souci Dramatic club will be seen in the cast.

One of the unique sights of Tuesday was the pony cart driven by little Miss Beatrice Johnson, daughter of Robert T. Johnson. The cart bore several picture cards of Mayor Shea, and Miss Beatrice took several voters from her father's store to the polling place at City Hall.

FLOWERS FOR MAYOR.

When Mayor Shea arrived at City Hall this morning he found it ornamented with a large standing crescent of roses, pinks and ferns. The card attached said "Congratulations from the Winter club, Houghs Neck."

TODAY'S COURT.

Charles T. Heald was fined $15, Thomas P. Beal Jr. $15, and Oliver M. Chadwick $15, for exceeding the automobile speed limit at Milton.

William A. Barry was fined $15 for drunkenness at Quincy.

Matching the Braid.

After ten years he returned, footsore and weary. His wife met him at the door.

"I thought you were dead," she told him.

"You should have known better than that," he said. "Do you remember that last piece of net I tried to match for you? You scolded because there was a difference of an eighth of an inch in the width of the folds, and I vowed that I would never again return from matching anything for you until I had found the exact thing you wanted."

He handed her a package.

"Here is that old rose binding braid that you told me to buy. I found it last Monday in Billings, Mont. I have looked for it in thirty-seven states."

She tore off the wrappings.

"It is a little too dark," she said.

"But the sample has faded some in ten years," he reminded her.

"It is a little too heavy besides."

"But handling by thousands of clerks has worn the sample away some. It was heavier when I started out."

"I suppose I can make it do," she said.—Newark News.

Her Dime.

Somebody had given the east side woman a bad dime. It was composed largely of lead. She tried to pass it at several places, but they are wary for some reason or other on the east side. They invariably ring a dime on the counter once or twice and bite it besides. When she got home with the dime it had several holes in it from the pressure of east side teeth. "It is more impossible than ever," she said.

The impecunious man called that evening. He had a dollar with him which was wholly intact—that is to say, it had not been broken.

"I am afraid they'll give me bad money for it," he said upon taking his departure, "over here in these east side cars. Will you change it for me?"

"I shall be delighted," said she.

He called a week later with a grouch.

"You can't seem to get away from the bad money over here on your old east side," he complained. "Somebody or other stung me with an old lead dime that was full of holes."—New York Press.

to City Square, and then started for home. There were hundreds of women who accompanied the men all the way, and did their part towards making one grand racket and jubilee, in honor of their friend and neighbor Mayor-elect William T. Shea.

In the center of the parade there was hoisted a large banner with the inscription, "Result of East Side, Shea 255." Several pictures of Mayor Shea were also carried.

The Mayor's house was open to all during the whole evening, as was also the Copeland Club and the other numerous organizations in Ward Four. Until a late hour the celebrators paraded the streets with red fire and torches. Councilman John Smith who fought one of the bitterest fights ever seen in Ward Four, with Councilman McDevitt, was repeatedly cheered and Harry Boyd who was elected for his first year came in for a great demonstration. Altogether it it was one of the greatest celebrations Ward Four has ever witnessed, and as one enthusiastic voter put it, "ever will see, now listen to me."

RETURNS AT CITY HALL

Last Precinct Reported Just Before 8 o'clock

The official returns did not arrive at City Hall quite as early this year as a year ago, but they came in fairly well and by 7.45 all had been received. Long before this, however, the unofficial returns received by telephone made it sure that Mayor Shea had been reelected. These returns gave him a plurality of 1,067. When the official returns began to arrive, however, there were quite a number of changes so that the final plurality was cut to 914, which is a very flattering vote for a third term candidate.

The first official returns received came from precinct 2 of Ward Five, at 5.37. Nothing more arrived until 6.10 when precinct 2 of Ward Six reported. From then on, the returns arrived about as fast as they could be handled.

At 7 o'clock everything had arrived but one precinct of Ward Two, and one precinct of Ward Three. The missing Ward Three precinct arrived at 7.37 and the missing precinct from Ward Two at 7.46. Half an hour later City Hall was closed as everybody had departed.

Apples as Omens.

In parts of England many quaint superstitions still center round the apple. Apples hung on strings and twirled before the fire are said to fall off in the order that the marriages of the various owners will proceed. An apple eaten before a looking glass is supposed to give a view of the inquirer's future husband, who will be seen peeping over milady's shoulder. Peel safely taken from an apple, tossed three times round the head and thrown to the ground unbroken forms the first letter of a future lover's name. A more recent, though hardly more serious, custom necessitates a bowl of water in which are floating a number of apples. Mothers must drop forks into the bowl from a distance of about four feet. If the fork pierces an apple the feat is believed to protect the performer's children from catching cold.—London Scraps.

Early English Scare.

In 1370 a report was circulated that "certain galleys, with a multitude of armed men therein, were lying off the foreland of Thanet," and an order was at once issued that "every night watch shall be kept between the Tower of London and Billingsgate, with forty men at arms and sixty archers." The watch was kept in the following order: "Tuesday, the drapers and the tailors; Wednesday, the mercers and the apothecaries; Thursday, the fishmongers and the butchers; Friday, the pewterers and the vintners; Saturday, the goldsmiths and the saddlers; Sunday, the ironmongers, the armorers and the cutlers; Monday, the tawers, the spurriers, the bowyers and the girdlers." Even in 1616 pirate vessels were captured off the Kentish coast, between Broadstairs and Margate.—London Chronicle.

But He Did.

"What do you mean by kissing my daughter, sir?"

"I'm sorry, but I couldn't help myself."

"Couldn't help yourself! That's just what you did do!"

Heard In the Barber Shop.

"Our charges are the lowest in town," observed the barber.

"Cut rates, eh?" said the customer as he looked at his lacerated chin in the glass.—Judge.

Undecided.

"If he has proposed, why don't you give him an answer?"

"I can't make up my mind whether I would like him when I got him home."—Brooklyn Life.

WOLLASTON WINS

In School Games with Massachusetts Fields

The inter-school games between teams representing the different grades at the Massachusetts Field and Wollaston schools were concluded this week. The Wollastons at the first meet lost 20 to 10, but at the second meet they tied the score 30 to 30, and this week won again, making the totals 60 to 40. There were contests in five school games: Straddle ball, potato race, relay race, dodge ball, and side kick.

These games were held in order to foster a better school spirit and increase interest and skill in athletic sports, and Mr. Goodspeed, the principal succeeded admirably. It was in the relay races in particular that the Wollaston teams, both boys and girls, did their best work, capturing all the points.

The results follow, the winning team securing five points in each event:

NEW STEAMER MEETS ALL REQUIREMENTS

Fine Piece of Apparatus Added to the Quincy Fire Department

Quincy's new second class Amoskeag steam fire engine had her official "try-out" Wednesday afternoon, and met with every requirement. In fact, it exceeded the guarantee. The trial was witnessed by a large number of local officials including Mayor Shea, Overseer of the Poor Elcock, Assessor Adams, Tax Collector Carey, Inspector of Buildings Parker, Assessor Falconer, Councilmen Whiton, Flynn, Smith, Carey and Flaherty. Also ex-Engineer John Whitney Hall and ex-Councilmen Jesse F. Curtis and William T. Spargo, District Engineer Packard and Nyhan, Chief G. F. Bartlett, and Engineer F. Banton of Plymouth. Engineer Warner of Swampscott, Engineer Andrews of Boston Chief Cade of Wakefield and Fred L. Black, representing the Diamond Rubber Co. who furnished the tires.

G. G. Tidsbury represented the Amoskeag company, and Paul Charland and James Fellell came on from the factory at Providence to run the engine.

Councilman Whiton was the one who first introduced the order in the City Council to purchase the new steamer. Riding on the rear of the engine was Capt. C. P. Costa, James W. Connell, the regular driver of the steamer, and Herbert Griffin the fireman.

Following the steamer were several pieces of the fire apparatus, including Combination No. 1, and Hook and Ladder No. 1, Combination No. 2 Combination Ladder No. 2, and Hose 3. Thus representing all sections of the city except Houghs Neck.

The route of the parade was down Hancock street to City Hall, where Shea mounted the seat with Councilman Whiton. The parade then passed around the fountain and back to the Central station. The steamer was drawn to the hydrant at the corner of Quincy avenue and Water street.

First a line of 200 feet of hose was laid and a half dozen men held the pipe with 1 5-8 inch nozzle. When all was ready the fire was lit and all eyes were on the steam guage. No attempt was made for a record on getting up steam, but she had made 20 pounds in 7 minutes and 120 pounds inside of eighteen minutes.

Mayor Shea was to start the engine and he took hold of the throttle and opened it. The engine failed to start, the steam apparently passing directly through the piston cylinders. All efforts to start her were unavailing. The fire was then drawn and the top of the cylinders taken off.

After some delay it was found that the bumping the engine had got on the cars had displaced one of the valves. This was quickly fixed, and once more a fire was built. This time the engine worked, and water was soon being thrown through the hose at a pressure of 250 pounds. The engine was guaranteed to throw 700 gallons per minute but on this test she threw 775 gallons, and it required nearly a dozen men to hold the nozzle.

Two lines of 100 feet each were then laid, and two streams were forced through 1 1-4 inch nozzles at a pressure of 120 pounds and the guages indicated 850 gallons per minute.

The last test was the water tower turret attached to Combination No. 1. Two lines of hose were centered into this pipe and 940 gallons per minute was thrown through the 2-inch nozzle. This was a very powerful stream and could be directed at will. It was so heavy that it would quickly drown out most any fire. An illustration of its force was shown when in being moved about the stream struck the telephone wires directly overhead and lifted the telephone pole nearby several feel out of the ground.

CHIEF WILLIAMS.

The tests over the officials and visiting engineers went to Grand Army hall, where a lunch was served.

After lunch Chief Williams called upon Mayor Shea who spoke briefly. He said that he was glad that the trial had been so successful. We have now got a good steamer and everyone says we have a good chief. We were now prepared to handle any fire that came along.

Councilman Whiton said, when I was asked if I intended to drive the steamer I replied yes, if Bill Shea is elected. We have got a good engine. It had been wanted a long time. He hoped there would be no occasion to use it, but if there was he felt sure it would put out most any fire.

Chief Cade of Wakefield congratulated the city. It had made no mistake in getting an Amoskeag. He hoped the occasions when it would have to be used would be few.

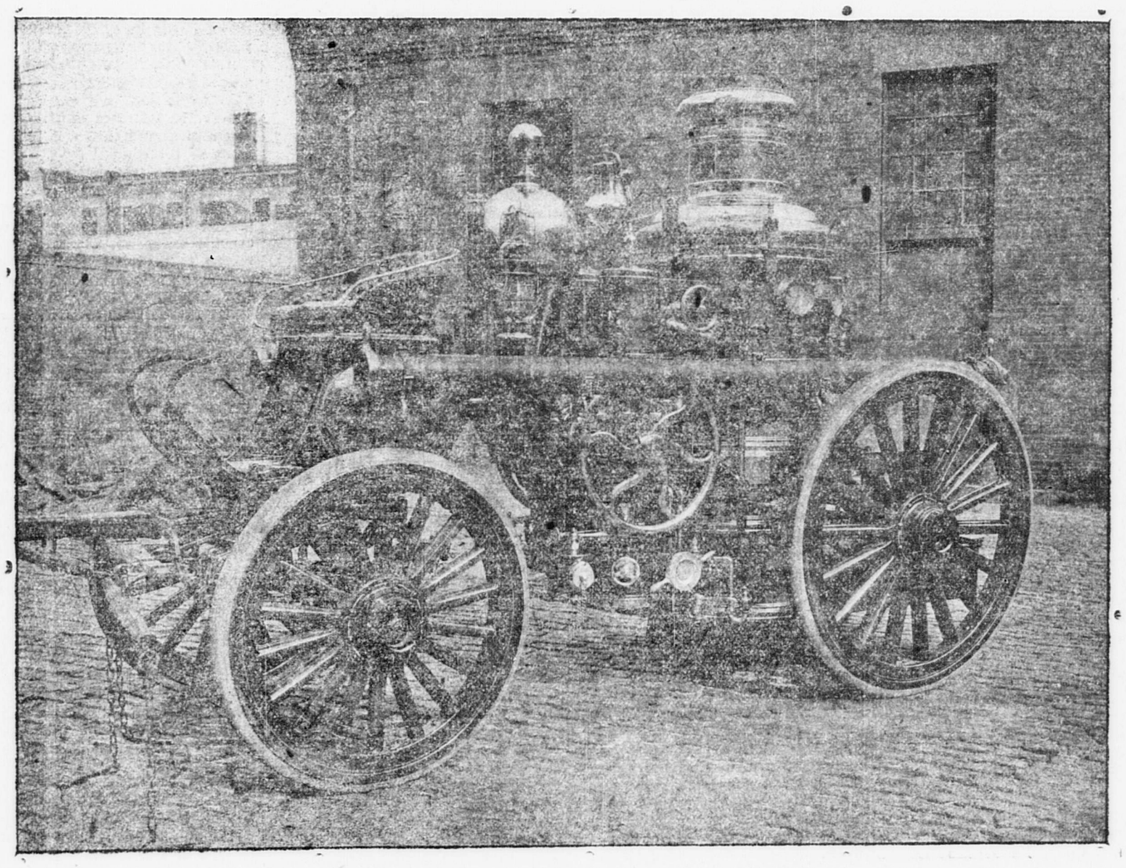
Overseer Elcock, an old fireman, said the city now had a fine piece of apparatus, and a fine Chief, one of the best fire fighters in the country. He hoped the Council would give him all the hose he needed.

Ex-Councilman Curtis, also an old fireman, said no mistake had been made in getting an Amoskeag and that it had fulfilled all requirements.

Fred H. French, another old fireman, felt out of place with these young firemen. He was a back number, he said. Things were different from what they were in his time.

Councilman Flynn was also pleased with the work of the steamer, and thought no mistake had been made. He had advocated the purchase of the engine in the City Council and also argued for rubber tires. We have a good Chief and good steamer, but he hoped the occasions to use it would be few.

T. J. Collins said he did a little missionary work for the steamer, and that the city should have one or two more, and an auto chemical.



Ex-Councilman W. T. Spargo thought the steamer had done great work, and that she was all right.

Galen Vinton Bowditch, the veteran, told the party a thing or two about fire fighting in his day.

G. G. Tidsbury, representing the Amoskeag Co., said that the little incident the same as happened at the start today, did not trouble him any, for he knew that it was simply a temporary trouble. The engine was tested before she left the factory and she was one of the finest ever turned out. She had more than met the requirements. The trouble was the banging of the freight car had disarranged some of her machinery. It would never happen again and she will be ready at any and all times whenever you put her to do her work. He congratulated the Chief. The Chief knows what he wants, and he congratulated the citizens on giving him what he wanted. Back up your Chief and you will have a good department.

Fred L. Black, of the Diamond Rubber Co. said that the tires on the steamer were a set made for the New York department and were what is known at the New York spiral internal wire tires. He congratulated the citizens of Quincy on their handsome piece of fire apparatus.

This concluded the speaking and the exercises of the afternoon. The steamer is now in commission ready for service.

MAYOR SHEA.

EX-ENGINEER ELCOCK.

The first thing on the program was a short parade. A few minutes before 2 o'clock the Chief's call was sounded, and the new engine came out of the station with Councilman Whiton on the drivers seat handling the ribbons.

—It has been proven that our great railway terminals, where traffic is constant, where switch engines are shunted back and forth and suburban trains are run requently, can be operated more economically by electricity than by steam.

MR. NICHOLS WRITES

Hopes His Candidacy Aroused the Public

Editors of the Daily Ledger:

I am glad of the opportunity to express through the columns of your paper, my appreciation of the loyal support accorded me by many of the voters of our city at Tuesday's election. Having entered the campaign about three weeks ago without organization or definite support, the showing made is very satisfactory.

It is only within the past week that I have been able to get a line on the situation, sufficient to enable me to push an aggressive candidacy. I have called to the attention of the people certain live issues and raised some standards for the conduct of public business according to my ideas. If this has in any degree contributed to the awakening of a more general interest on the part of the voters and taxpayers in city affairs throughout the year, rather than the concentrating of the same in the few days just prior to election, some good may surely come. As regards the results so far as I am personally concerned I am content.

Sincerely Yours,
Walter F. Nichols.

Quincy, Dec. 8, 1909.

HOW VOTE FELL OFF

WHIST TOURNAMENT.

Some good scores were made Wednesday night at the weekly whist tournament of the Granite City club. Seven tables were in play and the top scores were secured by Warren H. Rideout and Henry F. Tilden. The former secured a score of 74.5, and the latter a score of 70. A lunch was served after the play. During the evening Mayor Shea dropped into the club, and shortly after, everybody was "smoking on the Mayor."

BRIEFS

About two weeks to Christmas.

About 20 degrees temperature at sunrise this morning.

Mr. and Mrs. Levi Willcutt of Phillips street welcomed a daughter on Tuesday.

The Joseph H. Titus of Standish avenue are moving to 55 Warren avenue the 1st of January.

Mrs. Albert W. Fay of Newport avenue is spending this week with her sister, Miss Ella Mann at Sherborn.

It took 1500 extra Ledgers yesterday to supply the demand for authentic news of the City election, an edition of nearly 4.000.

Work was commenced Wednesday, laying a 6-inch water main on Bigelow street to replace the 2-inch main which has long been inadequate for this thickly settled street. A gang of 30 to 40 are rushing the work before cold weather. A three-way hydrant will be located near the junction with Miller Stile road.

SANTA CLAUS DANGERS.

There is more evidence than usual that Christian people are awake to two dangers that attend the annual visit of the genial and beloved old fiction saint of the Christmas season, Santa Claus. Both dangers are grave. One is that Santa Claus will be given the chief place in the Christmas exercises of the Sunday school, instead of the Christ-Child whose birthday Christmas is; the other that children's faith in their parents and friends will be shaken or destroyed by being told the Santa Claus myth as though it were true.

The Sunday School Times does not believe that "Santa Claus" ought to be done away with, for it has long expressed its belief that, properly introduced, he is a harmless and joyous old figure, whose loss out of childlife would be a real loss and one that is wholly unnecessary. But we need to be reminded that there is a right way and a wrong way of bringing him into the life of our homes.

It is never well and it is never necessary to lead a child to believe in something that does not exist, and when this unreality is made to crowd out Christ himself the loss to the child is unspeakable. But we and the chillren can have our Santa Claus and all the Christmas good times and mystery and jollification that are so dear to the child "when Santa Claus comes" without any of the danger that has been so earnestly and wisely spoken against in these letters. How this is to be is shown in the letters themselves. The child does not have to believe that Santa Claus is a real being to enjoy him. No one responds so readily to "make believe" as does the natural healthy-minded child, nor does anyone enjoy it more. The make-believe world and friends of the child are often among his most real and treasured facts, yet never for a moment resulting in actual self-deception nor the need that anyone else shall deceive him.

It is in this make-believe world of the child's that Santa Claus belongs, and there he will be gladly welcomed. If children are told about Santa Claus and his mythical doings in this spirit they will be quick to accept him and enjoy him, yet will never need to pass through the unsettling and certainly harmful experience of learning that they have been deceived by those whom they trusted. That is too high a price to pay for our children's Christmas fun.—Sunday School Times.

STRIKERS AGREE TO ARBITRATION

State Board to Consider the Trouble In Ludlow Mills

CONTENTION OF LABOR MEN

Say It Is For State Board of Conciliation to Bring Mill Owners Into Line, as Their Employes Have Already Made Many Concessions—Strike Breakers Arrive—More Eviction Notices Served

Ludlow, Mass., Dec. 9.—At a mass meeting the striking operatives of the Ludlow Manufacturing associates' mills voted to submit their grievances to arbitration by the state board of conciliation and arbitration.

Eviction notices were served on fifteen more families last evening, and they will be put out of their houses the first of the week unless they move of their own accord in the meantime.

This announcement was made last night to Secretary Supple of the state board, who came here from Boston, by a committee from the Springfield Central Labor union, which is aiding in directing the strikers' cause.

The proposition to be made by the state board will be considered at a meeting of the strikers this evening.

The labor men informed Supple that the strikers had already made almost every concession possible and that it was now for the state board to bring the mill owners into line.

Eighty-one Greek and Italian strike breakers arrived in Ludlow from New York yesterday and 150 women to take the places of strikers are expected to reach the town from New York today.

It is not believed that the eviction notices will be enforced because of the action of the strikers in accepting the proposals of the state board of arbitration, which will bring over 1200 former employes of the Ludlow associates back into the mills at any wage the company will offer.

The entire state board will come to the town today and at the mass meeting, which is regarded as the most important yet held, will outline what action they plan to take to bring about a settlement of the difficulties.

The eviction notices served yesterday afternoon were upon families of strike leaders, who have been prominent in the handling of the strike, and in a number of instances are upon men who have been evicted twice already.

POLAR RECORDS SAFE

University of Copenhagen Receives Observations of Explorer Cook

Copenhagen, Dec. 9.—The North Polar observations of Dr. Frederick A. Cook reached here on board the steamer United States. Extraordinary precautions were taken to make sure that the long-heralded data would be delivered safely to the university authorities.

As soon as the United States was tied up at her pier an iron box containing Cook's report and the diaries in which his original entries were made, was brought ashore. The box was closely followed by Walter Lounsdale, Cook's secretary, who had stood guard over its contents since they left the hands of Cook.

At the university the papers were formally turned over to the authorities there and placed in a strong room, where they will be guarded closely until the committee appointed to examine them is ready to begin its work.

GAS CUT OFF BY COLD

Cleveland Factories Closed and Ten Thousand Men Laid Off

Cleveland, Dec. 9.—A biting wind, with a temperature of 10 above zero, compelled the East Ohio Gas company to discontinue service to fifty or more local factories.

Approximately 10,000 men were laid off, while artificial gas plants could be put in working order. Plants without these contrivances will stay shut down until warmer weather.

Increased use of gas in private homes so diminished the general supply that in one or two hotels only soup was served.

Maine Timber Land Sold

Houlton, Me., Dec. 9.—A big transfer of timber land was recorded here when 54,000 acres were sold for $220,000 at a public auction by the receiver of the Fish River Lumber company. The purchaser was Edwin C. Burleigh of Augusta.

Building For Lawrence Y. M. C. A.

Lawrence, Mass., Dec. 9.—The Y. M. C. A. campaign, which was waged in this city to raise $150,000 to build a new association building, was brought to a close last night when the fund soared to $156,500.

Telegraphers May Soon Strike

Cincinnati, Dec. 9.—It is declared that if no concession is made by the company the 1000 telegraphers of the Big Four may be ordered out on strike within twenty-four hours.

Switchmen Losing Ground

St. Paul, Dec. 9.—There are many indications that the switchmen are losing ground in their fight and that traffic conditions are rapidly becoming normal.

SHOT BY HIS CHUM

Boy May Die as a Result of Bullet Wound In the Eye

New Bedford, Mass., Dec. 9.—A shooting affray which may result fatally occurred at the City mill, when Joseph Scholnick, employed in the spool room of the mill, was shot in the eye by Joaquin Fereira.

The two boys had been fooling when Fereira, according to the police, turned to his chum and requested him to stop. Scholnick made a laughing answer and threw a spool at the boy, who pulled a revolver from his pocket and shot directly at Scholnick, the bullet entering his left eye.

The bullet has not been removed. Until the location of the lead is known the boy's chances of recovery cannot be determined.

Soon after the shooting, Fereira, who was placed under arrest, was taken to the hospital and identified by Scholnick. Both boys deny that they had been involved in any quarrel previous to the shooting. Scholnick is 15 years of age, while his chum is a few months older.

HUNTING FATALITIES

Two Men Accidentally Killed by Companions In Maine Woods

Ellsworth, Me., Dec. 9.—Mistaken for a deer by his 15-year-old boy companion, Byron Carter was fatally shot at West Surry yesterday and died soon after reaching his home, a half mile away. He was 32 years old and leaves a widow.

Millbridge, Me., Dec. 9.—Samuel Fickett, 40 years old, was shot through the heart by his companion, William E. Francis, while the two were hunting rabbits. The coroner decided that the shooting was accidental, and that no inquest was necessary.

BOYS FLEE FROM REFORM SCHOOL

Dash by Their Keepers and Escape In the Darkness

Westboro, Mass., Dec. 9.—Five boys, inmates of the Lyman school, escaped from the institution at 7 o'clock last night, and the police of surrounding cities and towns have been asked to participate in the search for their apprehension.

Four of the boys belong in Boston and the fifth was sent to the school from Worcester. Each is about 16 years of age, and they were given special privileges by reason of good conduct.

The break from the lines came when the boys were filing from the dining hall to the playroom. They passed the attendants on the run, and before any attempt could be made to rou them up, had disappeared from t grounds.

YAMAGATA TO SUCCEED ITo

Were Constant Opponents, but Personal Friends In Japanese Affairs

Tokio, Dec. 9.—The appointment of Prince Yamagata as president of the privy council in succession to the late Prince Ito returns to that office one whom the slain prince succeeded on June 15, 1909..

The present situation is interesting. Premier Katsura has been the protege of Yamagata, who, while a personal friend and even an intimate of Ito, has for the last twenty years been the leader of the anti-Ito camp in politics. There was intense rivalry between the two men for power, but in all matters affecting the nation and the nation's weal they joined hands.

In earlier days of this political contest the failure of Yamagata meant the predominance of Ito and vice versa, but through it all there was no personal bitterness or estrangement, but rather a mutual support and acknowledgement each of the other's greatness.

ABDUCTION CHARGED

Old War Veteran Disappeared With a Thirteen-Year-Old Girl

Springfield, Vt., Dec. 9.—Joseph Ferguson, 70 years old, a Civil war veteran, was arrested and given a preliminary hearing here on a charge of abducting 13-year-old Mamie Blodgett, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Blodgett. He was held in $1000.

Six weeks ago the couple disappeared, but the girl was finally located and brought home.

High Prices For Hogs

Kansas City, Dec. 9.—When hogs sold at $8.50 a hundred pounds at the Kansas City stockyards yesterday, a record for twenty-seven years was established. In July, 1882, hogs sold for $8.80 during a cholera epidemic. The limited supply of fat hogs is the cause for the present high price. A year ago hogs sold for $5 in Kansas City.

BOUND OVER WITHOUT BAIL

Hattie Le Blanc Must Explain Murder Case to Grand Jury

MRS. GLOVER HER GUARDIAN

Fact Made Public For First Time When Wife of Murdered Man Appears at Hearing as a Witness—Accused Girl Now Declares That Glover Was Shot as He Was Helping Her Out of Laundry Window

Waltham, Mass., Dec. 9.—Hattie Le Blanc is held for the grand jury. All the government tried to show at the hearing before Judge Luce was that Clarence F. Glover was shot in the Waltham laundry on the night of Nov. 20, and in his dying statement said that Hattie Le Blanc killed him.

Judge Luce deemed the evidence sufficient to hold the young woman, and she was bound over without bail for the session of the grand jury beginning on the first Monday in January in East Cambridge.

As Miss Le Blanc is only 16 years old the hearing of her case was private, as the law says all juvenile cases shall be. For three hours the girlish looing prisoner sat in the small library of the district court and listened to the testimony of witnesses without understanding hardly anything of what was said. She speaks only a few words of English.

Perhaps the most interesting witness at the hearing was Mrs. Lillian M. Glover, widow of the murdered man. She had been subpoenaed by the counsel for the defense and her testimony occupied about thirty-five minutes, it is said.

That Mrs. Glover is the legal guardian of Hattie Le Blanc became known yesterday for the first time.

It is optional with the guardian or parent whether they appear or not. In addition to the notice sent Mrs. Glover, as guardian of the girl, she was also served with a regular summons by the counsel for the defense, which made her attendance compulsory.

Hattie Le Blanc's story which her lawyers expect will free her caused decided comment when it became known that she declares Glover was shot as he helped her from the laundry window.

She has changed in many wnys her original story to the police. She now declares that while in the main room of the laundry both she and Glover heard someone coming in the outer door of the laundry opening into the office.

As he heard the sound Glover called out: "Get out of here; run quick, Hattie."

Hattie Le Blanc then says she started to run toward the rear of the laundry, knowing she could escape by the door down stairs. Glover followed close behind, urging her to hurry.

She does not know that anyone was pursuing, but believes there was. Glover rushed after her in her headlong rush down the stairs.

She made for the window, and as she gained the sill Glover pushed her outside. She dropped to the ground and started to run. Just at this instant she heard the shots. This she claims is all she knows of the shooting.

Hattie also declared that on the night before Glover was shot Mrs. Glover asked her to go to the theatre, and they both visited the Scenic theatre in Waltham.

BAN ON FOOTBALL

Gotham Schools Cannot Indulge In the Game After Jan. 1

New York, Dec. 9.—After Jan. 1, 1910, football is barred from the public schools of Greater New York. This was decided at a meeting of the board of education over the protest of James E. Sullivan, a member of the board and former president and now secretary of the Amateur Athletic union.

He fought hard for the retention of the game and was in favor of referring the matter to a committee on athletics, but he was voted down.

Fire Destroys Old Landmark

Wellesley Mass., Dec. 9.—The old Hechel stone mansion, the most famous building in the town, was destroyed by fire last night. The house, built on a hill, furnished a spectacular fire which was seen for miles around. An overheated furnace is said to have caused the fire. The house originally cost about $40,000.

Head of Wrecked Bank Arrested

Mineral Point, Wis., Dec. 9.—Calvert S. Spensely, indicted president of the wrecked First National bank, was arrested and taken to Madison to be arraigned before a federal court commissioner.

King Leopold In Bad Condition

Paris, Dec. 9.—Private advices from Brussels say that King Leopold is slightly improved. His entire right side is paralyzed. He still suffers greatly from rheumatism.

Caruso to Wed Shop Girl?

Milan, Dec. 9.—The newspapers here announce that Caruso, the tenor, is to be married shortly to a beautiful Cicilian who has been working as a shop girl here.

The Food of Vim and Energy

One plateful of MOTHER'S OATS will produce more vim and vigor and energy and action—more vitality, more enthusiasm and more endurance, than many times the same bulk of meat, fish, fowl, or cereals of lower food value. MOTHER'S OATS are different from other's oats and different from ordinary oatmeal. They are put up in sanitary sealed packages. But there's more to MOTHER'S OATS than the package; they are the best oats in the world, the best selection of the best crops. Every batch that comes to our mills is screened and only the ripe, big grains are marketed. They are not only sterilized, but steamed (to burst the proteid cells); then rolled (to render the cooking easy), and after that, MOTHER'S OATS are crushed (to hasten their digestion)—easy work for the stove, easy work for the stomach and more work for the man. There's a coupon in every package of Mother's Cereals. You can collect enough of them in a little while to own a Fireless Cooker for nothing. Your grocer will tell you how to get it free. There are a number of ways and all of them make it worth while to buy Mother's Cereals: Mother's Oats, Mother's Corn Meal (white or yellow), Mother's Wheat Hearts (the cream of the wheat), Mother's Hominy Grits, Mother's Corn Flakes (toasted), Mother's Coarse Pearl Hominy, Mother's Old Fashioned Steel Cut Oatmeal, Mother's Old Fashioned Graham Flour.

Animals and Instinct.

It is a mistake to imagine that animals are prevented by instinct from eating injurious food. A chicken will drink paint; a cow partakes of water in which noxious chemicals have been washed; ducks cheerfully swallow snails and choke themselves in the process. No; animals, like children, need watching.

Recently numerous cases of poisoning in ducks, which followed the consumption of cabbage leaves, have attracted much attention. A few hours after feeding poisoning has manifested itself by loss of appetite, great weakness, tottering steps and sometimes death. From time immemorial ducks have thrived on cabbage leaves. The poultry farmers were greatly puzzled.

Then it was discovered that various caterpillars were concealed in the cabbage leaves; hence these tears. But the point is that, far from instinctively detecting any danger and behaving accordingly, the ducks consumed great quantities of the leaves with much apparent relish.—London Answers.

Aisle of the Car In a Railroad Wreck.

A veteran railroad man gave a piece of valuable advice not long ago.

"If you ever get into a wreck," he said, "and have time to follow out this suggestion remember this: Always stand in the aisle. Most of the injuries that are suffered occur because the victim is crushed between the seats. If you are in the aisle you may be thrown forward and bruised a little, but there is much less chance of receiving serious hurts. It isn't always possible to get out of your seat before the crash comes, but if it is follow that advice."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

GRIMMSBY'S PATENT CHRISTMAS.

"Would you like one of our patent Christmases?" Grimmsby didn't happen usually to go to the front door himself, but he did on this occasion. He was greeted by a quiet, perfectly groomed gentleman, with the most delightful manners that Grimmsby ever remembered to have seen.

Grimmsby gasped.

"Patent Christmas!" he said. "I don't quite understand."

"Quite easy. If you will permit me, I will explain. My company takes the whole thing off your hands. We do it all. We can furnish you with a complete Christmas—according to your circumstances—all the way from $50 up to $1,000. Nothing for you to do. All you do is to sit back, smile and be genuinely happy.'

"That sounds good," said Grimmsby, who was in that ante-Christmas condition of mind where he was willing to welcome anything. "How do you do it?"

"Quite simple, I assure you. Would you like yours with or without?"

"With or without what?"

"With or without personal Santa Claus visit. We have them all grades. An ordinary Santa Claus who appears at the right time and distributes presents to family party for the purely nominal sum of $5. If you wish him to come by aeroplane, and make actual descent through and down chimney, anywhere from 4 to 6 in morning, that of course ,is higher—from $30 to $40 extra. Let's see you have five in family. Shall I give you an estimate?"

"Do you think up things to give all of one's friends?" asked Grimmsby, trembling with excitement.

"Certainly. Short description of party to be honored is all we want."

"Do you trim the Christmas tree?"

"Of course. We make a specialty of getting something unique and original each year. This season we have trained birds that sing as the candles are lighted. They come high, but are worth it."

"Ah! Do you acknowledge gifts?"

"Yes, Sir! In the most delicate and sympathetic manner. One of our letters of acknowledgment, written by trained bands of authors we employ would bring tears to your eyes."

The stranger leaned forward impressively.

"We leave nothing undone," he said earnestly. "All you do is to furnish us a list of your friends and family. We employ a telepathic expert, who is enabled through mind reading to tell what every one wants. There are some errors, of course; we cannot all be perfect, but these we rectify afterward by a system of exchange. We do up all packages. We tip all servants—and we can do this cheaper than any concern in the world, because we have a system.

"We guard you against all intrusion. We superintend the Christmas dinner, and our doctor is on hand, in attendance afterward ,to treat the children. We hang up all stockings, preserve all illusions that the children have ever had ,abstract all letters they place in the chimney within five minutes after they are deposited, make all acknowledgments—in fact, Sir, there is nothing about Christmas that we do not attend to. In short, we give you absolute freedom, fill you to overflowing with the right spirit, and make you happier than you ever dreamed of being.

"And we do this at a less cost to you than if you did it yourself. Now, I can fit you out with a combination Christmas—say our No. 3—this includes father and mother, three children, eight relatives, and a limit of sixteen friends. Would that be about right for you?"

"I should say that would hit it."

"And about Santa—just an hour of him, or will you have an actual descent, with aeroplane waiting, Christmas bells heard overhead?"

"Put that in."

"Well, Sir, we can fix you out all complete, including exchanges, acknowledgments, and everything for the small sum of three hundred and—"

Suddenly, at this interesting point, something grasped Grimmsby firmly by the arm.

It was Mrs. Grimmsby.

"Come! Come!" she exclaimed. "Wake up, you lazy thing! It is almost 7 o'clock, and you've got to spend the rest of the day helping me tie up all those packages and trimming that tree."—Thomas L. Masson, in New York Times.

VOLTA, THE ELECTRICAL PIONEER

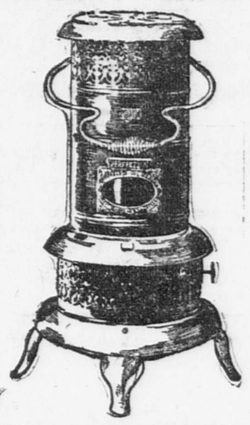
Perhaps the most familiar of all words in electrical phrasology is the word "volt," which means the unit of electrical pressure or potential. The name volt is given to this unit in honor of Alexander Volta, the famous Italian scientist, who experimented with electricity more than a century ago.

Alexander Volta was born in Como, Italy, in 1745. In 1774 he was appointed Professor of Physics in the Gymnasium of Como. In 1779 he was given the chair of physics at Pavia and in 1791 received the Copley Medal of the Royal Society. In 1801 Napolean called him to Paris to show his experiments on contact electricity and a medal was struck in his honor. In 1815 the Emperor of Austria made him Director of Philosophy of Padua. He died in the year 1827.



It was Volta who discovered that electricity could be produced by chemical action and he built the first electric generator consisting of plates of copper and zinc arranged alternately one above the other and separated by a liquid capable of conducting electricity. This battery was called the voltaic pile in honor of its inventor. The pile or battery so made was capable of producing a constant flow of electricity. Previous to this Galvani had made his famous frog leg experiments, noting the muscular constractions of the leg when brought in contact with iron. He assumed that this strange phenomena was caused by a vital fluid flowing out of the nerves of the frog through the iron. Volta at first believed this to be true but subsequent experiments convinced him that it was nothing but a new form of electricity caused by chemical action.

Out of these extremely simple experiments grew the first chemical battery which differed but slightly from the wet and dry batteries of the commercial world today which supply the current for telephone and telegraphs, signals, gas engines, automobiles and a thousand other things which require a small current of electricity.

He Got the Chair.

On a very hot afternoon a number of around town chaps who didn't seem to have much to do were lounging in the chairs in front of a leading hotel. Several traveling men came out of the hotel and, finding all of the chairs occupied, looked and spoke things that wouldn't go well in polite society.

"Let's dump a few of them out," suggested one.

"Hold on a minute," replied another. "Watch me get a chair." With that he walked over to one of the loungers and in the most courteous way said, "Will you please tell me whether that is a drug store across the street?"

"No," replied the lounger; "that's a bank."

"Oh, is it? Well, say, what is that nice big building just down the street there, two corners away?"

"That's the postoffice," was the reply.

"You live in this charming city, then?" asked the drummer.

"I do," said the lounger.

"Well, then," replied the traveling man, "I'm a guest at this hotel and paying for accommodations. Suppose you get up and give me that chair."

He got the chair.—Kansas City Journal.

The sweeping victory of Mayor Shea was not only large for Quincy, but his honor received the largest plurality of any of the fourteen Mayors of Massachusetts cities elected this week. The nearest approach to his 914 was in New Bedford where Charles S. Ashley, the Citizens' candidate had a plurality of 809. All the others were below 600, and in Taunton and Waltham were less than 100. In Brockton in a vote of 9000 William H. Clifford, the Democrat, was elected by only 209 plurality.

Representative Mann of Illinois has introduced a bill in the House which cannot fail to secure the hearty support of the entire country. It is designed to check the "white slave traffic" and there is no difference of opinion according to dispatches from Washington that it will accomplish the end desired if it is passed. The measure provides that any person who aids, induces or forces a woman from one state to another for immoral purposes shall be liable to a fine of $5,000 or imprisonment for five years. In the case of a girl under eighteen the fine will be $10,000 and the imprisonment ten years. Representative Mann has given the white slave traffic in Chicago serious attention and believes that his bill will in great measure check it.

There is another point in the vote on the License question of which Quincy should be proud. Fourteen Massachusetts cities voted this week, and Quincy had the smallest number of "Yes" voters by a good margin. In Quincy there were but 1,199 Yes voters, in Northampton 1,490, in Waltham 1,581, in Marlboro 1,833, in Gloucester 2,161, in Fitchburg 2,749, in Pittsfield 2,775, in Taunton 2,799, in Haverhill 3.296, in Brockton 3,646 in New Bedford 5,735, in Springfield 6,138, in Lawrence 6,139 and in Fall River 8,316. Some of these cities are smaller than Quincy.

The Congress just assembled will begin the consideration of President Taft's policies, already somewhat familiar to the public through the President's recent speeches and those of his Attorney General. It is a laborious programme which will keep not only this session busy but probably several succeeding sessions. Although it will require time and persuasion to secure the enactment of the measures which Mr. Taft desires, perhaps no President ever had more favorable prospect of success in a legislative policy. Conditions have changed in recent years so as to increase the influence of the Executive in legislation. The public has begun to look upon the administration more than upon Congress for the origination of national policies and Congress has to a great extent acquiesced. The legislative machine in both houses is weaker than it used to be. Insurgencies have damaged its prestige. Its independence and self-confidence are largely gone and it is being driven more and more to regard public opinion, to show deference to persons and measures which appear to have popular support and to seek agreements which have public approval. President Taft will undoubtedly recognize this fact and insist upon the legislation that the public demands.

DRIFT OF OPINION.

Another effort will be made this winter to get Congress to shift the inauguration of the President from March 4 to a day in April, say the last Thursday in the month.

Public interest in this change has lagged. When the inauguration was favored with fair weather, it died down. When Washington encountered a blizzard, as it did last March 4, the subject came up again. The general public, which does not see the President inaugurated, is not greatly excited over the question whether the ceremony takes place in the Senate Chamber or on an improvised platform outside. Nor does it care whether marching clubs and soldiers get a chance to display their uniforms and their discipline. On the whole, it would be satisfied to dispense with these auxiliaries to a change of administration.

But there is another consideration, which is of serious public import. It is the problem of the so-called short session of Congress. Beginning the first Monday in December, it ordinarily does not get under way until after the Christmas holidays. It expires by limitation March 4. In the interim there is scarcely time to consider the appropriation bills and none to take up general legislation. The months of March and April, which are the best Washington affords for work are lost. This throws all general legislation into the long session and protracts it through the hot months of July and August. By dividing the year more equally between the sessions, Congress would consult its own convenience and be able to do better work for the people.—Minneapolis Journal.

Pleasure and Sacrifice.

An alert little five-year-old was visiting a city park with her mother for the first time. She had noticed the beautiful red and white swan boats as they passed through in the morning, and her mother had promised they should come back after the shopping was done and have a ride.

Shortly after dinner they stood on the bridge over the lagoon watching the boats below and listening to the cry of the barker as he tried to induce the passing crowds to patronize his swan boats.

But when her mother started toward the boat landing little Elsie declared very vigorously that she did not want to go at all and, as her mother urged her, broke forth in tears.

This sudden fear was so different from her former eagerness that her mother could not understand it until she noticed the boatman's call.

He was crying: "Come along! Come along! Ride clear round the pond. Only 5 cents for ladies and gents! Children thrown in!"

LURTON FOR THE SUPREME COURT

Tennessee Judge Taft Selected to Succeed Justice Peckham.

OLD FRIEND OF THE PRESIDENT

Strongly Admired by Chief Executive For His Great Legal Ability—Fought In the Civil War and Gained Wide Reputation as a Financier.

Judge Horace H. Lurton of Nashville, Tenn., whom President Taft has decided to appoint to the supreme court of the United States as successor to the late Associate Justice Rufus W. Peckham, is an intimate friend of the president, who has a strong admiration for the jurist's great legal ability.

Judge Lurton, who is sixty-five years old, was born in Campbell county, Ky., Feb. 26, 1844, the son of Lycurgus B. and Susan Ann Harmon Lurton, who were natives of the Blue Grass State. Judge Lurton's father years ago was a practicing physician, but in 1870 he left medicine for clerics and was ordained a minister in the Protestant Episcopal church.

Judge Lurton's early education was received from private instructors, but in 1859 he went to Chicago and entered Douglas university, later the University of Chicago. The civil war brought a halt to the completion of his collegiate training, for, at the first bugle blast, young Lurton hurried south and offered his services. He was enlisted in the Thirty-fifth Tennessee, commanded by Colonel B. J. Hill, and was made sergeant major.

Served In the Civil War.

In February, 1862, Major Lurton was discharged on account of ill health, but he was not idle long, as he returned in time to take part in the battle of Fort Donelson, where he was taken prisoner and confined in Camp Chase. He managed to effect his escape in the spring of 1862 and promptly enlisted in the Third Kentucky cavalry, with which he served until July, 1863, when he was again captured, this time in Ohio on Morgan's famous raid.

HORACE H. LURTON.

Judge Lurton was carefully guarded and remained in prison until the end of the war, when he entered the law department of Cumberland university, Lebanon, Tenn., and was graduated in February, 1867, and entered at once into practice at Clarksville, Tenn., in partnership with Gustavus A. Henry, a kinsman of Patrick Henry. Later Judge Lurton was a partner of James E. Bailey, who subsequently was elected to the United States senate.

In January, 1875, Judge Lurton was appointed by Governor Porter chancellor of the Sixth chancery division of Tennessee to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Charles G. Smith. At the expiration of the term of appointment in 1876 he was elected to the office without opposition, but in 1878 he resigned. From 1878 to 1886 he practiced law at Clarksville in partnership with Charles G. Smith, having served as the first president of the Farmers and Mechanics' National bank and also acquired wide reputation as a financier.

In 1886 he was elected a justice of the supreme court of Tennessee and in January, 1893, by vote of his colleagues, became chief justice in place of Peter Turney, who was governor elect of Tennessee. Two months later he was appointed by President Cleveland circuit judge of the Sixth United States circuit to succeed Howell E. Jackson, who had been elevated to the United States supreme bench.

Doctor of Civil Laws.

Judge Lurton is an Episcopalian, was for many years a vestryman in Trinity church, Clarksville, Tenn., and since 1882 has been a trustee of the University of the South at Sewanee, Tenn., from which university he received the degree of doctor of civil laws. He married in September, 1867, Miss Mary Frances, daughter of Dr. Benjamin Franklin Owen of Wilson county, Tenn. They have two children living.

Judge Lurton's appointment gives the supreme court three justices named from the same judicial circuit, the Sixth. The other two are Justices Harlan and Day.

TRIBUTE OF ILLINOIS FARMERS

Will Hang Picture of C. H. McCormick In Their Hall of Fame.

Perpetuation of the names of men famous in the world of agriculture is planned in the founding of a "farmers' hall of fame" in connection with the agricultural college at the University of Illinois in Urbana. On Dec. 15 the hall of fame will be formally dedicated with the unveiling of a portrait of the late Cyrus Hall McCormick. James Wilson, secretary of agriculture, will attend the exercises, as will a number of governors of the great farming states in the Mississippi valley and throughout the west. Governor Deneen of Illinois is taking an active interest in the movement and will deliver an address of welcome.

Promoters of the plan believe the present year is especially appropriate for the hanging of Mr. McCormick's portrait in the hall of fame. It is the centennial anniversary of his birth, as he was born in Virginia Feb. 15, 1809. The portrait will be unveiled by Miss Muriel McCormick, the granddaughter of the inventor and also a granddaughter of John D. Rockefeller. Miss McCormick is the eight-year-old daughter of Harold F. McCormick.

Four names have been chosen for a place in the Illinois farmers' hall of fame, but only the picture of Mr. McCormick will be hung at the dedicatory exercises. The other names selected are those of James N. Brown, the first president of the state board of agriculture; Isaac Funk, one of the most successful of the pioneer farmers, and Professor Jonathan B. Turner, the originator of the idea of a national system of land grant colleges to include the then new subjects of agriculture and mechanic arts.

The commission of the Illinois farmers' hall of fame is composed of A. P. Grout, Winchester, president; Eugene Davenport, Urbana, and J. P. Mason, Elgin, vice presidents; Charles F. Mills, Springfield, secretary, and John M. Crebs, Carmi, treasurer. Mr. Grout is the farmers' representative on the board of trustees of the University of Illinois, and Mr. Davenport is dean of the College of Agriculture. Mr. Mason is president of the Illinois farmers' institute and Mr. Crebs president of the state board of agriculture. Mr. Mills is a former secretary of the board of agriculture.

La Verne W. Noyes, president of the Illinois Manufacturers' association, will deliver an address on the "Manufacturer and the Farmer," and the "Reaper and the Farmer" will be discussed by La Fayette Funk of Shirley. Charles F. Mills of Springfield will speak on "Cyrus Hall McCormick," and E. J. Baker of Chicago will speak on "The Reaper and What It Has Done For the Farmer."

SEEKS WORDS, NOT MONEY.

How Pastor Would Have J. D. Rockefeller Clear Up Religious Situation.

John D. Rockefeller's most needed contribution to religion, according to the Rev. Dr. Oscar Haywood of New York city, is words, not money. Such an expression of his, Dr. Haywood contends, would do more than anything else to equalize religious differences and establish a broad bond of brotherhood.

"Rockefeller has the brain of Caesar and unlimited moral influence," said the clergyman during his sermon at the Church of the Covenant, in New York, the other day. "Then let our most conspicuous man of wealth define his position with reference to evangelical Christianity. For one, I would await with confidence his answer.

"He is the founder of a scientific university which purposes to substitute scientific, speculative philosophies and scientific hypotheses for the simple religion of faith, creating an aristocracy of scholars and accentuating the imaginary gulf between the rich and poor. Now let him make the contribution of 100 words to the world's religious literature."

TO STOP CHAUTAUQUA SALUTE

Health Officer Says Waving of Farewells Spreads Diseases.

Chautauqua salutes and the use of handkerchiefs in the waving of farewells to football players by seminary girls must be suppressed if eminent scientists have their way.

"The custom of vigorously waving a handkerchief in the air is a dangerous one," says Dr. William C. Woodward, the health officer at Washington. "There are but few contagious diseases which cannot be communicated in this way. Scarlet fever, tuberculosis, diphtheria, even leprosy, as well as many other diseases, may be so spread.

"There is no way of suppressing the use of handkerchiefs in farewells except by reasoning with those who follow the custom."

Nicaragua.

They have scorned all the strength of Europe
And sneered at her battle fleet.
By the grace of an elder brother
Their dues they've managed to cheat.
They have mocked at the goddess Justice
And laughed at the law of right.
They have known that we would protect them
From the higher law of might.

They've relied on an ancient doctrine
To save them from foreign harm,
And the word of a long dead statesman
Has been their protecting charm.
Though a hundred brave men with Walker
Of their prowess made a show,
They laugh at the threats of Europe,
Protected by dead Monroe.

Their nation is built on murder
And ashes of treach'rous strife.
Is it true that we must maintain it
At the cost of one Yankee life?
Shall the elder brother's patience
Forever withstand the strain?
By the martyred Groce and Cannon—
Shall they murder our own again?

FARCE PRESENTED

By Young People of First Presbyterian Church

Over 300 attended the entertainment and social of the First Presbyterian church on Water street Wednesday evening, given under the auspices of the young people of the church. The affair from beginning to end was a grand success and thoroughly enjoyed by all who attended. It was given in aid of the pipe organ fund and a good sum was netted for this worthy object.

The entertainment consisted of a farce in one act entitled "My turn Next," and for 45 minutes the audience was kept in a continual uproar. Taraxicum Twitters, the village apothecary who was frightened almost to insanity because of the thought that his wife had poisoned three previous husbands and that it was his turn next was well impersonated by George Craig; and his bluebeard wife, Lydia, was admirably taken by Miss Anna R. Giles. Miss Margaret Craig, who took the part of Peggy the maid, and George Shirley as Tim Bolus the hired man, received a great hand at every appearance. The remainder of the cast, which included Tom Trapby Ernest Collins, Irving Kemp as farmer Whityear from Braintree and Cicily who was Lydia's sister, all did exceptionally well with their parts and contributed largely to the success of the play.

Following the play there was a social hour during which the people were entertained by some volunteer selections by the "Melon choppies club chorus," during which refreshments were served. The chairman of the committee in charge of the affair was George Craig, and he was assisted by George Shirley.

Varieties of Humor.

The Temple of Art, devoted to that peculiar form of entertainment yclept "polite vaudeville," was crowded to suffocation as Messrs. Biff and Bang, the refined sketch team and sidewalk conversationalists, stepped jauntily to the footlights. In response to the deafening applause Messrs. Biff and Bang bowed condescendingly, as though it hurt them.

Without further preliminary Mr. Biff hit his partner on the rear of his ample trousers with a stuffed club, remarking, "It's a wise man that knows his own mind."

And Mr. Bang, not to be outdone in this little exchange of pleasantries, promptly buried an ax in the skull of Mr. Biff, remarking the while, "It's a wise man that minds his own nose."

Whereupon the intelligent audience screamed with delight and voted Biff and Bang the best ever. "And yet they were a frost in the London halls," commented a man in the front row. "The English have no appreciation of real humor." — Philadelphia Ledger.

TWO-ACT COMEDY

"Cool Collegians" Presented At Colonial Hall

The annual dramatics of St. Margarets Guild and the Men's Club of Christ church were given Wednesday night at Colonial hall before a large audience. The drama was a two-act comedy entitled "Cool Collegians," which was produced under the direction of Mrs. A. Isabelle Davis . The first scene was Fred Parks room at college, and the second Mrs. Huntoon's living room.

Between the acts Mrs. Davis gave a monologue, and there was a piano duet by Misses Bessie and Irene Langhorn.

After the comedy there was an informal dance until midnight with music by Wilson's orchestra. The cast in the comedy was as follows:

Harry Meredith, college chum Merton A. Turner.

Fred Parks, college chum, Arthur L. Thomas.

Mrs. Huntoon, Fred's aunt, Edith Fox.

Fanny Morrison, her niece, Olive Smith.

Mollie Wainwright, Fanny's friend, Robina Hall.

Muggins, colored servant, Alex Rose.

Kate, Irish servant, Marion Mitchel.

TODAY'S COURT.

John F. Flavey was fined $15 for violation of the automobile law at Cohasset.

James Russo was arraigned for assault on Nellie Carrale at Quincy. Case placed on file on payment of costs.

The Sunday school of the First church will hold an informal reception in the chapel tonight from 7.30 to 9 o'clock. There will be short addresses by Louis A. Nash of the Church of the Disciples, Boston, and Rev. Charles B. Ames, the assistant pastor. Mrs. Laurance H. Sturtevant will sing.

QUINCY HIGH SCHOOL

Items of Interest to Students and Graduates

There are some very good cartoons in the first issue of the Golden Rod by Bill Northrop, High School's "funny man."

David Fulton who left school last year and joined the U. S. training ship, Ranger has been home the past few weeks with a broken rib.

Miss Elizabeth Craig, Q. H. S., '09, of Smith street is taking a course at the Burdett business college.

Invitations have been sent out for the reception to be tendered the 1909 football eleven, Friday evening at the High school. The Senior and Junior girls have the evening in charge, and have the arrangements in the hands of three popular members of the class, Miss Eugene Arthur, Miss Daisy Brooks and Miss Bertha Given.

The Iota Tau Kappa club held their first assembly last Friday evening at Electa hall, and it was a most successful one. The gathering was composed mostly of High school students and their friends, and lasted from 8 till 12. The members of the club are: Frank Harmon, Charles Sayward, Harold Hill, James Hill Aaron Gould, Claraence Armstrong, Harold Nash, Sarrott White, Theodora Corey, Phil. Rice and William Manning.

Last Monday the first call for candidates for the basket ball team was issued by Captain Bates. The result was far beyond expectations as fully 25 students responded. Practice was held in the High school gymnasium at 3 o'clock and as soon as they arrived Captain Bates started them on the simple requirements of the game, namely passing and shooting. Five teams were picked and a series of games consisting of short halves were put in progress. Some of the material, from which will be picked for the first team, a center and a back, showed up remarkably well for their first appearance. There are three vetcrans back from last year, Captain Bates, Billy Manning and Harold Prout. Bates will continue in his old position at forward, as will also Billy Manning, while Prout may play either back or center. His position is at right back, but unless some of the new ones show unexpected strength in the pivot position there is little doubt but that he will have to play there and with his weight and experience he should show up well in the position. As there are at least 20 men out for the other positions and there are only two positions to fill, ten men for each position. Of course from this number there will be picked a second team, and a numbe of its members will probably fill in on the first team a great deal, as there is such a wealth of material.

In fact not since basketball started at the school three years ago has there been so much to pick a team from. The first year in 1907, there were only about a dozen in the school who knew the game at all, and of this number only the team and two subs were able to play, and last year in 1908 while there were more who knew the game still lack of men and time to teach the green ones was responsible for their losing a number of games. Despite these facts however in two years they have had a team they have only lost 9 games out of 32. This year the indications are that the record will be even better as there are at the present time a large number who in the past year or two have picked up the game enough so that they will be available. The season starts the 7th of January when they will play Abington at Quincy. Manager Smith has arranged one of the best schedules ever put out in the school and has already 9 home games and 3 out-of-town, a fact which speaks well for the manager's ability and securely backs the judgment which installed an assistant manager for all the teams.

The schedule follows:

Jan. 7—Abington at Quincy.
Jan. 11—Reading at Quincy.
Jan. 14—Milton at Quincy.
Jan. 18, Open.
Jan. 21—Newton at Newton.
Jan. 26—Melrose at Quincy.
Feb. 1—Hyde Park at Quincy.
Feb. 4—Open.
Feb. 8—Reading at Reading.
Feb. 11—Thayer at Quincy.
Feb. 16—Rock Ridge at Quincy.
Feb. 18—Open.
Feb. 22—Open.
Feb 25—Concord at Quincy.
March 1—Milton at Milton.

There was a most satisfactory fire drill at the school on Tuesday, when the students cleared the building in one minute and three quarters. The time consumed from the moment the bell sounded until all the students were back in their places again was only four minutes which is an exceptionally good record.

Aaron Gould, a popular member of the Iota Tau Kappa club and a member of the class of '10 at the school, has announced his intention of departing for Portland, Oregon the 1st of January.

Harry Smith, '10 is to leave town very soon to make his home in Stoughton. He will be missed a great deal, as he is one of the most popular members of his class, besides being manager of the basket ball team. It is understood that in his new home he is to blossom forth in a new role that of a farmer, we wish him luck and only hope he manages the farm as well as he has the basket ball team.

The nominating committee of the Senior class was elected this week at a meeting of the class. Those from the different wards who will nominate the various graduation officers are as follows; Ward One, Charles C. Hearn; Ward Two, Alice Mahoney; Ward Three, Alfred Hanson; Ward Four, Walter Lakin; Ward Five, Leon Brown; Ward Six, Grace DeWolfe.

Much important business was transacted at the meeting of the Athletic committee held in room 7 on Wednesday, after school. The question of awarding "Q's" was considered and as a result there were 18 and possibly 19 Q's awarded for football. The names of those to receive them were not given out and will not be known until Mr. Cleveland announces them in accordance with the usual custom, at the football reception on Friday night.

The Athletic committee voted to give assistant managers a "Q" for their services, but have reconsidered the vote, and the matter will come before the board at the next meeting.

It was voted to issue season tickets for the basket ball season as there will be such a large percentage of the games played on the home court. This will give everybody a chance to see all the games at a reasonable figure. The books will be out before the close of this term so that orders can be taken for them at any time.

The question of having medals struck for those who have broken records in the past three years was taken up, and it was decided to have them made.

The most pleasing and encouraging feature of the meeting was the fact that the treasurer showed a balance in the treasury of between $30 and $40 This is something which has not happened for some time and shows the increased interest of the scholars in the affairs of the school. A large feature in this welcome overflow of funds from the football season was the play presented by the Sophomores and Juniors last month for the benefit of the football team.

The second term which has been short, closes this week, and once again the "regulars" are on the anxious seat.

BRIEFS

Dock and Water Front Commissioner Frank E. Crane is attending the sixth convention of the National rivers and harbors congress at Washington, representing the city.

CONNOLLY FOR CONGRESS.

ea Tale Writer to Oppose O'Connell In Massachusetts.

James B. Connolly, the author, famous for his sea stories and friend of former President Roosevelt, is a candidate for the Democratic congress nomination in the Tenth district of Massachusetts against Congressman O'Connell.

Connolly lives on Harvard street, Dorchester, Mass. He started with the United States battleship fleet on its voyage around the world, having been commended by President Roosevelt as his special chronicler and historian. He remained with the fleet until it reached the Pacific coast, where he left it and returned to New York. From there he sailed on the steamship Republic, intending to rejoin the fleet. He was on board the ill fated ship when the accident happened that sunk her.

Mr. Connolly is the man to whom Mr. Roosevelt paid the following tribute a few years ago in a talk at Washington with Martin Sheridan of New York city, the champion athlete of the world:

JAMES B. CONNOLLY.

My ideal of an all around man is James B. Connolly of Boston. You know Jim. He was with you at the Olympian games in Greece. Connolly is what I think a man should be. If my boy Theodore turns out to be as good a man I will be satisfied. Connolly has strength, agility and perseverance. He loves outdoor, healthful life, and he is clean through and through. I want my boy to be as good a man as Connolly.

The man whom President Roosevelt has picked out for Theodore junior to pattern after is a husky, breezy, virile type of man, who has shown his ability to hold his own under all sorts of adverse conditions. He is a noted athlete who has won honors as a jumper in the Olympian games and wears many medals rewarding his prowess in athletics on the field and on the water.

Mr. Connolly has been on whaling voyages and has sailed in fishing vessels in the north Atlantic, the North sea and the Baltic. He has spent the depths of winter months on the Newfoundland banks and fought through the Santiago campaign as a member of the United States army. His whole life has been one of physical exercise.

MEMORIAL TO EMMET.

Irish Americans Will Erect a Building In Chicago.

Irish Americans of Chicago are about to honor the memory of Robert Emmet, the Irish patriot, by erecting a hall building to his memory. It will be known as the Emmet Memorial Hall building.

The undertaking is to be conducted under the auspices of the Ancient Order of Hibernians of Chicago and Cook county. The officers who have been selected to take direct charge of the work are:

William J. Doherty, president; John Foley, secretary; R. M. Dore, treasurer; Thomas Moriarty and Michael Larney.

The committee on ways, means and finance is composed of P. J. Reynolds, P. J. O'Sullivan, Joseph A. O'Donnell, Thomas O'Dwyer, James E. O'Brien, John J. Mahoney, P. J. O'Brien, Martin Jefferson and John Bigune.

Mr. O'Donnell has been appointed attorney by unanimous vote of the officers and also by the members of the finance committee. The building is to be erected at Ogden avenue, Taylor and Leavitt streets. Ground will be broken at the earliest opportunity. Bonds are to be issued to the amount of $35,000. Opportunity is afforded every Hibernian in Chicago and Cook county to become a subscriber, and the unsold bonds are to be financed by a firm of bankers.

The auditorium, which will be on the main floor of the hall, will have a seating capacity for 700 persons. The halls on the second and third floors will accommodate respectively 130, 200 and 350 persons. The ground on which the building is to be erected is the property of the Ancient Order of Hibernians.

New Record With a Torpedo.

Officers and crew of the destroyer Paul Jones, which recently arrived at San Diego, Cal., from target practice in Magdalena bay, are elated with the record made with the new Bliss-Levitt torpedo. It was unofficially reported that the marksmen of the Paul Jones made ten hits out of a possible eleven under the direction of Lieutenant S. M. Davis, Ensign Cassidy and Gunner William Cox. This record is regarded at San Diego as marking an important development in the achievements of the navy. It was also reported that the Paul Jones had won the president's trophy for gunnery, which she already has captured twice.

WILLARD OF WASHINGTON.

Hotel Man Whose Name Was Indelibly Stamped In the Capital's History.

Henry Augustus Willard, formerly of Washington, who recently died at Walpole, N. H., was one of five brothers whose names have been indelibly stamped on Washington's history for more than half a century. Mr. Willard came to the national capital in 1847. He was a steward on the New York and Troy steamboat line on the Hudson river when he came under the notice of Mrs. Phoebe Warren, whose brother owned the City hotel in Washington. Mrs. Warren said to her brother, "Do you want a bright, energetic and capable young man to take charge of your hotel?" The brother said he did, and Mrs. Warren then said, "I have found just the man for you in Henry A. Willard, who is a steward on a Hudson river boat."

Mr. Willard came to Washington and opened the City hotel, soon changing the name to Willard's hotel. He managed this hotel alone until 1853, when his brother Joseph became his partner. They conducted the hotel until 1861, when they leased it. In 1892 Henry Willard sold his interest in the property to Joseph. All of Mr. Willard's brothers—Edwin, Joseph, Stevens and Caleb—came to Washington. Henry Willard gave them their start and enabled them to achieve great success in life.

Henry A. Willard was a loyal supporter of the Union cause during the civil war. At one of the most critical periods of the war, when it seemed as if the capital would be taken by the Confederates, the flag on Willard's hotel was the only one flying in Washington other than those on the government buildings. Some of Mr. Willard's southern friends advised him to haul the flag down, but he refused to do so.

In all matters relating to the improvement of Washington Mr. Willard took an active interest. Under President Grant he served as vice president of the board of public works, a body to which modern Washington largely owes its existence. During this period Senator Edmunds of Vermont one day met Mr. Willard. He was in high temper.

"I'm going to introduce a bill providing for the removal of the capital from Washington," he said. "A hog got into my garden last night and made a mess of one of the prettiest flower gardens in Washington. A town that hasn't any board of health to regulate the running at large of dirty animals does not deserve to have the honor of being the seat of government."

There was a sentiment at the time in favor of removing the capital to the middle west, St. Louis being mentioned. Mr. Edmunds was a power in congress, and his advocacy of removal might have proved serious. Mr. Willard persuaded him to hold off his bill until a movement could be started for the creation of a board of health. Such a board was formed soon afterward, and Mr. Edmunds forgot the unfriendly hog and thereafter planted his flowers without danger of their being uprooted by intruders.

The estates of Henry, Joseph and Caleb Willard comprise some of the most valuable real estate holdings in Washington.

MIRAGE TO ORDER.

Johns Hopkins Professor Reproduced Desert's Optical Illusion.

It is no longer necessary to travel the deserts of Africa or the burning wastes of Arizona to see a real mirage.

Dr. Robert W. Wood, professor of experimental physics at Johns Hopkins university, in Baltimore, recently showed his classes and other Hopkins students who were interested a miniature mirage that showed as perfectly as is possible in a laboratory experiment the realness and vividness of this hallucination.

Professor Wood produced the desert with a sheet of iron fifteen feet long, covered with sand, which he heated with gas burners. A mirror reflected the sun upon a white sheet of paper at one end of the artificial desert, which paper served as the clear sky line.

When the sand got fairly hot and one looked along its surface at some little piles of sand at the end toward the white paper one could almost believe that just a little way in front of the piles of sand there was a pool of crystal water on the sanded plate.

PRESERVE FOR IBEX.

Oregon Man's Plan to Protect Only Known Herd In America.

Sportsmen in Spokane, Wash., and throughout the northwest will give W. R. Parker of Baker City, Ore., every support in his efforts to secure state or federal protection for a herd of ibex on Mount Eagle, in Oregon. Parker advocates the creation of a preserve on the mountain so that the only known band of ibex on the continent may be saved from slaughter. He has hunted big game in eastern Oregon for years and possesses a wide knowledge of the trails and canyons in the mountains and believes that since the haunt of the herd is known to others the animals ought to be protected to prevent extinction.

When he first announced the presence of the band in the mountains some of the veteran hunters asked for proof, which was forthcoming by Parker bringing out a dead buck, doe and fawn. Parker looks upon the ibex as a big asset in a sporting way for the entire northwest.

Value of Volcanic Ash.

The fertilizing virtues of volcanic ash are beginning to be recognized in the United States, and commission merchants are getting orders for it.

TOMMY'S WIFE AT WOLLASTON

Plays Presented in Aid of the Free Kindergarten

The third entertainment in aid of the Wollaston Free Kindergarten was given Wednesday evening at Brasee hall and the dramatics by home talent proved very successful under the management of Mrs. Herbert Y. Follett.

"Tommy's Wife" a farce in three acts, was first given by this cast:

Thomas Pitman Carothers, an artist
N. G. Nickerson, Jr.
Rose, his sister,
Edith Munger Brady
Dick Grannis, in love with Rose
Robert F. Jennison
Patty Campbell, a dramatic student,
Beulah Clark Hatch
Mrs. De Yorburgh Smith, wealthy society woman, Grace Parker
Sylvia Smith, her daughter, "young and impressionable Helen Seavey
Pierre De Bouton, French fencing master, H. G. Campbell
Edith Bronson, interested in charities,
Carolyn Huntley Lewis

The one-act play "A Double Deception" followed with this cast:

Archibald Shillingsworth
Ernest Arnold
Marcus Dill Willard E. Keys
Lucilla, Archibald's wife,
Mrs. George F. Fleming
Penelope Shadrach, his aunt,
Miss Minnie Packard
Mrs. Bunn, the housekeeper
Miss Theodora R. Luard

"Tommy's Wife," is chuck full of fun and jokes and the clever actors made it brimful of snap and vitality, so it was a go from start to finish. The plot if it may be called one, was full of amusing situations and a series of incidents followed all remarkedly protrayed.

"A Double Deception" caused unceasing amusement from beginning to end, each one looking and acting their part to perfection. The hall was filled, there was much applause, and several curtain calls.

NEW DRAWBRIDGE.

Now that work has been commenced repairing Neponset bridge, it is being rushed, and it is expected that it will be completed inside of three weeks. It is understood that the repairs will be confined to the draw. One side of this will be repaired at a time so that teams and pedestrians can go over the bridge. This draw will be practically a new one, as the old stringers and planking will be replaced. In addition to this the old apparatus for opening and closing the draw will be taken out and a more modern method used.

MURDER WILL OUT

Laughable Bit of Comedy at Universalist Fair

At the concluding night of the church fair held in the vestry of the Universalist church Wednesday evening the entertainment was in charge of the Murray club.

Selections by an orchestra composed of Gilbert Booth, pianist, Chester D. Brown, cornetist, and Charles A. Hobart violinist, were enjoyed throughout the evening.

The farce, "Murder Will Out" was a laughable bit of comedy the participants thoroughly entering into the spirit of the play; those taking part were Mrs. James Harris, Mrs. George E. Sprague, Mrs. Robert Reed, Miss Katherine Reed, Miss Nellie Barnes and Miss Irene Howes.

Readings by C. M. Houghton were greatly enjoyed, and he was recalled several times.

Character songs by Miss Margaret Releigh in Scotch Highlander costume and Miss Irene Howes as a wild west girl were capitally done. Miss Howes was assisted by two younger girls in typical costume in the chorus. Miss Edith Hyland accompanied by the orchestra gave a solo, and Miss Annie Wright accompanied by Miss Hyland also gave a solo which were appreciated.

Mr. Brown the cornetist was well received in his solo accompanied by Mr. Booth.

The concluding number was a song in tableau by the twelve young ladies composing the Murray club.

Goods remaining unsold at the close of the fair were auctioned off and a good sum is sure to be the result of the very successful fair.

INDICTMENTS.

Among the indictments returned by the Norfolk grand jury Wednesday were the following cases from Quincy:

Philip J. Holden, for larceny Sept. 22 of $250 from Peter Lamonede and for larceny of $37 from Cumming Stephen.

Michaele Manguatarde for statutory offence.

Annie Lewis and Jean Kennedy for attempting to dispose of property by lottery, and for conducting a lottery. The two latter cases grew out of the gift of land in Long Island park, New York. Last summer cards were given out at Paragon Park which the receiver was asked to sign that they might participate in the free distribution of building lots. Several people in Quincy were awarded lots under certain conditions. They were also asked to buy a second lot on the installment plan. Some people agreed to purchase and paid out their good money. Then their letters came back from the New York post office marked "fraud." When the women came to Quincy to collect on the lots they were placed under arrest. The cases were heard in the Quincy court and the defendants held.

It seems to be a case of hustle at the Ledger office all the time, business is so good along all lines.

ONLY ONE "BEST"

Quincy People Give Credit Where Credit is Due.

People of Quincy who suffer with sick kidneys and bad backs want a kidney remedy that can be depended upon. The best is Doan's Kidney Pills, a medicine for the kidneys only, made from pure roots and herbs, and the only one that is backed by cures in Quincy. Here's Quincy testimony:

Charles Somers, 17 Newcombe Place, Quincy, Mass., says: "It is a pleasure for me to make known to other kidney sufferers, the benefit I received from Doan's Kidney Pills. I had lame back as the result of weak kidneys, for about ten years. I could get no relief from the many remedies I tried and when Doan's Kidney Pills were brought to my attention, I procured a supply at the Cox Drug Store. Before long this remedy completely cured me. I shall always praise Doan's Kidney Pills.

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

CRASH OF ELECTRIC CARS

Panic Ensues and Fifteen Persons Require Services of Doctors

Boston, Dec. 9.—Fifteen persons were injured and a panic was caused among the passengers of two electric cars last night, when an inbound North Carmbridge electric car crashed into an outward bound car at the corner of Massachusetts and Columbus avenues.

Lights were cut off in both cars and there was a sudden silence for a moment, as passengers, numbering 115 in both cars, were thrown from their places into the aisle. Then, as women and men fought to get to the blocked exits, others pinioned beneath a mass of humanity screamed for help.

Windows were broken and through these men scrambled out, while others fought to get to the doors, throwing down weaker men and women and trampling on them in the panic.

Three doctors were hastily summoned and attended to the fifteen patients, who had been taken into a drug store which was converted into a relief hospital. Most of the injuries consisted of bruises and cuts.

HEARINGS ON OLD LINES

House Naval Committee Shows Disregard For Meyer Plan

Washington, Dec. 9.—The attitude of the house committee on naval affairs with reference to the proposed reorganization of the navy by Secretary Meyer is being shown quietly by the program of procedure laid out by the committee.

Hearings have already been begun, but instead of looking to the four naval aides selected by the secretary to inform him of conditions in the navy, the committee will go ahead and hear the heads of the eight bureaus, as of yore. The committee will give hearings as rapidly as possible on the old lines and hopes to have the naval bill ready for the house by Feb. 1.

HEAVY EXPENSES IN STEEL TRIAL

Defendants In Boston's Famous Case Declared Not Guilty

Boston, Dec. 9.—The steel case, estimated to have cost the county of Suffolk in the neighborhood of $25,000 and the defendants $150,000, is a thing of the past. By the verdict of the jury nine individuals, all connected in one capacity or another with some one of the indicted corporations, walked forth from the court room as free men.

Six corporations were also declared guiltless of any conspiracy to cheat or defraud by collusive bids or to have been parties to an illegal monopoly.

Besides the cost to the county, the cost to the men and corporations tried must have been enormous. During the greater part of the trial all the individuals and corporations were represented by counsel, of whom there were twenty-five, all charging fees in proportion to the importance of the case and the wealth of their clients.

DEATH FOR MUTINEERS

Fourteen Filipinos Implicated In Killing of Roy Libby Are to Be Shot

Manila, Dec. 9.—Fourteen of the second company of native constbulary, stationed at Davac, Mindanao, which mutinied on the night of June 6, were yesterday sentenced to death after being convicted of murder.

The murder charge is based on the killing of Roy Libby when the mutineers returned and attacked the town.

The trials were held at Davac, Judge Gale presiding. Twenty-three men mutinied, eight of whom were killed resisting arrest, while one turned state's evidence.

TARIFF BOARD IS IN DANGER

Will Be Ousted If Standpatters Have Their Way

WAR HAS ALREADY BEGUN

Hale Disagrees With Taft as to Latter's Power as Conferred In Recent Legislation—President Asks Congress For Money to Do What Maine Senator Had Forbidden—Matter of Grave Political Concern

Washington, Dec. 9.—President Taft has locked horns directly with Senator Hale of Maine on the tariff question. Hale, as chairman of the the committee on appropriations, is the leader of the senate. He remained in obscurity while Senator Aldrich piloted through the tariff bill last summer, but he intends now to reassert himself and direct the affairs of the upper branch.

The president's discussion of the tariff board in his message bids fair, therefore, to bring about an acute situation, for while the tariff bill was in process, Hale went out of his way to warn the president against construing the law exactly as the president has construed it.

It will be remembered that the conferees struck out of the tariff bill the words: "and information which shall be useful to congress in tariff legislation." This information was understood at the time precisely to be that of comparative costs of production. On Aug. 4 the senate debated the tariff board clause, and Mr. Beveridge then called attention to the broad construction of the law to which Aldrich had already given utterance.

The provision contained in the bill itself is even broader than it was in the senate bill, said Mr. Aldrich. "It allows the president," he continued, "to employ whoever he pleases without limit and to assign such duties to them as he sees fit within the limitation of the maximum and minimum provisions, and to assist the customs officers in the discharge of their duties. Now, these two purposes, especially the latter, cover every conceivable question that is covered by tariff legislation."

Senator Hale combated this construction vehemently. The conferees were not blind and deaf, he said. The senate could have done nothing that showed more clearly the intent of the law than the striking out of the words quoted.

But the president has amplified his authority and has asked congress for a continuing annual appropriation to do just the work which Hale said he should not do. Since the message was read, it has been asserted at the Capitol that congress would refuse to appropriate money for any but the most ordinary expenses of the tariff board.

It is obviously the purpose of the stand-patters to get by the critical first of April as best they can, with or without tariff wars, and then cut the official throats of the tariff board. The president has definitely decided that he will not be a party to this program and he is known to be depending upon public sentiment throughout the country to influence congress to make the tariff board useful, with a view to removing such excuse as may exist in the tariff law for unreasonably high prices. This is the one great passage in the message in which the president strikes a popular chord, and apparently he is willing to take his chances with congress in a struggle over the issue.

The status of the tariff board is a matter of grave political concern, for the work of the board as President Taft has laid it out is the only tangible evidence that the Republican party can offer the country that it cares whether the cost of living is too high or not.

It will be recalled that Senator Hale, in the face of the Mann report that a high duty on print paper was unnecessary, insisted upon a duty of $4 a ton and carried it through. On the floor of the house, Representative Mann pointed out that the great paper companies in Hale's own state were the only ones that refused to reply to the inquiries of his investigating committee.

One of the dominating issues in the next congressional elections undoubtedly is wrapped up in the question which the president has raised in the tariff section of his message. As far as Hale is concerned, his position is made the more clearcut by the action of Mann, a protectionist, in introducing in the house a bill to remove the duty wholly from news print paper, on the ground that it can be made here cheaper than abroad, and therefore the tariff is not needed.

Killed While Target Shooting

Houlton, Me., Dec. 9.—Mabel Russell, 13 years old, living with the family of Charles Lake of Oakfield, died as the result of the accidental discharge of her rifle while she was shooting at a target near the house.

New Yorker Weds Peer's Son

London, Dec. 9.—Miss Caroline de Billier, New York society girl, was married here to Victor Gibson, the youngest son of Lord Ashbourne, formerly lord chancellor of Ireland.

HIGHER FREIGHT RATES

Foreshadowed In Demands of Railroad Employes For Higher Pay

New Haven, Dec. 9. —It is reported in railroad circles here that an increase in freight rates is contemplated by a number of eastern railroads, among them the New Haven, the New York Central, the Lackawanna, the Reading and the Boston and Maine.

That there will be an increase on some commodities on the first of the year is the opinion of a man well acquainted with the situation, and he avers that the demands of the various labor organizations for better wages and more favorable working conditions will be responsible for any changes in the rates charged to shippers in the east.

He points out the fact that the railroads will be compelled to protect themselves as a result of the demands made, for he believes that the railroad employes will have their wages bettered to some extent soon.

BANKER IS PARDONED

Former Cashier In New York Institution to Begin Life Anew

Washington, Dec. 9.—Acting on the personal request of Vice President Sherman, Representative Vreeland of New York and others, President Taft granted a pardon to Frederick R. Green, former cashier of the Fredonia (N. Y.) National bank, which closed its doors in 1905.

Green pleaded guilty of making false reports to the comptroller of the currency, and his sentence for six years to Auburn prison would expire Aug. 13 next.

President Taft usually acts upon pardon cases only as they come from the department of justice, but he made an exception in this case. Green has been offered a responsible position in Kansas City, Kas., and will leave for that place as soon as he is released.

BIG SUGAR FRAUDS KNOWN FOR YEARS

Customs Weigher Apprised His Superiors Long Ago

New York, Dec. 9.—Underweighing sugar and cheating the government of duty is not a new art, according to testimony introduced as the government continued its prosecution of six former employes of the American Sugar Refining company.

James Conlon, a former customs weigher, testified that although he apprised his superiors of the existence of fraud more than ten years ago, nothing was done to punish the guilty persons until after the death of H. O. Havemeyer.

Thomas Kehoe, one of the defendants, was implicated by Conlon's testimony when the latter swore that twice he saw Kehoe manipulating the scales by a special appliance. He reported the matter, but with no results.

HEBREWS' NEW ISRAEL

Seven Million In Russia Are Expected to Migrate to Turkey

Pittsburg, Dec. 9.—Dr. Reuben Brainan of Berlin, one of the most prominent Hebrew scholars and publicists of Europe, in an interview here declared that the Hebrews were about to found a country of their own, and that plans are well under way whereby they will acquire a large tract of land in Turkey.

They are negotiating with the Young Turks for the property. According to Brainan, as soon as negotiations are closed about 7,000,000 Hebrews, now in Russia, will migrate immediately to the new country.

SHELDON INDICTED

Former Head of Phenix Company Is Charged With Grand Larceny

New York, Dec. 9.—The grand jury handed down an indictment charging grand larceny against George P. Sheldon, former president of the Phenix Insurance company.

Though the company is alleged to have lost $1,000,000 to $1,500,000 through misappropriations and speculations, only the specific sum of $15,000 is mentioned in the bill.

The indictment is declared by Sheldon's friends to be against a dying man.

New Industry For New England

Portland, Me., Dec. 9.—A six-story cement building in which linoleum will be manufactured is to be built at Morrill's Corner. The cost of the plant will be $150,000. This enterprise will be an entirely new one for this section of the country, as there is not a single linoleum factory in New England.

Station Agents Under Arrest

Rumford, Me., Dec. 9.—Suspected of thefts that have been going on for several years, J. C. Records, station agent on the Maine Central railroad at Rumford Junction, and E. C. Poland of East Peru were arrested, charged with the larceny of several hundred dollars' worth of goods.

Negro Slayer Hangs Himself

Columbus, O., Dec. 9.—Frank Grimes, a negro sentenced to death for the murder of Blanche McKnight, a white woman, cheated the chair in the county jail by hanging himself in his cell with the aid of a sheet.

No 'Count Wash

A Lazy Darky Who Is Spooned Into Hoeing Taters.

By FRANK H. SWEET.

Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.

"Wash no 'count? Don' say dat, sah," Uncle Mose was wont to plead. "He's jes' projectin'. Boys will projec', yo' know, sah. Dey's fo' all de worl' lak calves an' colts an' kittens. W'en dey's young dey kicks up dere heels; den dey steadies down an' chews dere cuds an' pulls dere loads an' ketches dere mice jes' lak 'sponsible t'ings mus'. Wash he ain' nary bad spot in him, sah. He don't t'ink; dat's all. W'en his heels git plumb steady on de groun' he'll pull his load shore 'nough. Yo'll see, sah."

But in spite of the sanguine expectations of Uncle Mose, who was not Wash's uncle at all, but his grandfather, the boy continued to "projec'." He was now fourteen, and his chief labor seemed to consist in devising ways of eluding chores and school and just punishments. His habitual movements were skulking, and, though his eyes danced fearlessly and his mouth broadened into almost perpetual merriment, he sought rather the solitary paths of the pine woods and Suwanee banks than the more populous lanes and roads of his native Ellaville. There he was apt to be reminded of unfulfilled contracts, stolen melons, decorated doors and fences and of many other matters which he preferred to let sink into forgetfulness. Of his own family Uncle Mose was the only one with whom he condescended to fraternize, and this concession was due as much to the fact that the old man excelled him in his own chosen pursuits of trapping and fishing as to his being openly sympathetic.

There were few spots inside a radius of ten miles with which Uncle Mose was not familiar, and this familiarity was especially comprehensive in regard to the fishing holes of the Suwanee. Fifty years before he had been a slave boy on a neighboring plantation, stealing off to the river on every possible occasion, and this love for the sport had been the one great pleasure of his life, interrupted only through the score of years which followed his emancipation, during which time he was working hard to provide himself with a home and to fit his children for a future which should be worthy of them as free citizens.

But as they grew up and branched out for themselves he returned more and more to the pleasure of his childhood until now there was scarcely an afternoon which was not spent in part upon the Suwanee banks. And with accumulating years and stiffening joints his early wanderings up and down the river had narrowed down to a bank beneath a wide spreading, moss grown tree, from which he could cast a line into water which experience had taught him was congenial to fish. Here after the sun had begun to throw shadows to the east he could generally be found either alone or in company with Wash.

His son Link was of a different nature. He was hardworking, shrewd, more tolerant of faults than of frivolity or carelessness, able to read a little and subscribing for several political papers, narrow in his politics and party and voting at every opportunity and on every possible pretext. He was an example of strong, ambitious manhood weighted down by a lack of knowledge. Between him and Wash there could be only misunderstanding—apprehension and avoidance on the one side, disappointment and upbraiding on the other. But before an open break came there were rumors of war, its declaration, a call for troops, and then before the family realized what was happening Link had volunteered and been accepted, the first to join the immunes from his county.

The day after he left Uncle Mose did not even look toward the river. Wash skulked down and fished under the big tree for awhile, then wandered off into the woods to look at his traps. The next day he went to the big tree again, but apparently did not like fishing alone, for he soon hid his pole and once more wandered off into the woods. And the third day and the fourth were the same, but after eating dinner on the fifth, instead of hurrying out to dig bait, as usual, he looked wistfully and irresolutely at Uncle Mose and when the old man rose and went out followed him to the truck patch behind the cabin.

"Ain' yo' gwine fishin' no mo', gran'pap?" he asked disconsolately.

Uncle Mose leaned upon his hoe handle and looked at him benignantly.

"Not till yo' pap gits back, honey," he answered. "Dar's heaps o' wuk roun' dis place now. Yo' pap been do hit mawnin's an' arter he done git from wuk at de sawmill nights, an' 'cep'n' I tuk his place hit'll shore fall on yo' mammy, an' she hab mo' now den she ought. No, no, honey, yo'll hatter look out fo' de fish an' let de ole man ben' his back ober de taters an' inyuns an' t'ings."

The boy dug his heels into the sand. "I reckon yo' ain' car' fo' fishin' nohow, gran'pap," he said irritably. "If yo' did yo'd fix de wuk some way."

Uncle Mose sank the blade of his hoe among the weeds at his feet.

"I's been fishin' off an' on mo'n fifty yeahs," he said defensively, "an' yo' ain' mo'n ten. Dat means I car' fo' hit five times mo'n yo'. But we mus'n leabe wuk fo' good times, honey. I mout fix de truck patch wuk, lak yo' say, but dar's odder t'ings. I aim to he'p yo' mammy 'bout her chickens an' washin' an' housewuk. She ain' strong lak she mout me."

Wash dug his heels deeper into the sand and sniffed. As he heard it a sudden hardness came into the old man's eyes.

"An' dar's anudder t'ing," he continued, leaning again upon his hoe handle and looking straight at Wash. "I aim to chop an' pile up a heap o' nice wood fo' yo' mammy. She hab to go out un'er de trees mos' ebery day to pick up bits o' stick an' bark an' chips to kin'le her fire, case dey ain' not'in' round de wood pile 'cep'in' big sticks w'ich yo' pap brung an' w'ich ain' chop up. I aim to cut hit all an' pile hit 'ginst de do' whar hit'll be handy fo' yo' mammy. No, no, honey, I cayn't go fishin' nohow. Yo' mus' do de fishin' yo'se'f now."

Wash dropped his gaze to the ground, an unusual thing for him; but, then, the woodcutting was one of the chores he so studiously shirked.

"I's gwine wuk hard w'en I's bigger," he muttered deprecatingly. "My mammy say boys mus' make mos' o' dere playtime. W'en I's a man I's gwine wuk hard lak my pap, an'—an' be a soger," for in spite of their antagonism, Wash regarded his father as embodying all that was manly and heroic.

"Yo'll nebber be lak yo' pap," Uncle Mose said. "He study an' wuk hard w'en he's a boy. Yo' mo' lak ole ragged Jake." Then his gaze dropped in sudden abashed consciousness of having upbraided his favorite, and if the boy had waited a moment longer he would have heard the most abject apology and a contrite "Don' yo' min', honey; hit's jes' de ole man a talkin'. Yo's a good boy, a sho' nough good boy."

But Wash did not hear. He was speeding toward the woods with dim eyes and heaving breast. He like disreputable Jake, the scoff of the entire community! If his father or any of those who were accustomed to upbraid him had said the words he would not have remembered them a minute after they were spoken, but Uncle Mose, who had never scolded him in all his life before and from whom a harsh word could not be wrung except by direful provocation!

The words were true. He knew it even while combating them in impotent anger and wrath. And they stung and lashed him to the big tree, to his traps, to a spot in a dense thicket where he lay for a full hour picking vindictively at the leaves and finally to his bed in the loft. He not to be like his father when everybody said he was growing up big and strong and would some time be his very image! And this was his last thought when, far in the night, he fell asleep with two big tears still undried on his black cheeks.

The next morning Uncle Mose's first thought was of reconciliation with Wash. But the boy was not in his bed nor in the kitchen below, and only when he went to the door and heard a faint click-clicking from the truck patch did he understand that Wash was digging bait for an unusually early start. Shuffling in the direction of the sound, the old man stopped at the corner of the cow shed in sudden incredulous amazement, for there was the boy, not digging bait, as he had supposed, but hoeing potatoes.

Wash looked up with an odd smile on his good natured face.

"Yo' better go he'p mammy wid her chickens, gran'pap," he commented, not even pausing to rest on his hoe handle as he spoke, but working vigorously on. "I finish dese taters."

Then, as the old man opened his mouth without seeming able to make a sound, the boy continued:

"I t'ink 'bout what yo' say, gran'pap, an' I's gwine be lak pap, an' I ain' gwine be lak ole Jake. An' I reckon yo' right 'bout mammy. I ain' nebber notis befo', but dis mawnin' I 'low she do look porely. W'en dese taters is done I's gwine chop dat wood an' do lots odder t'ings. Now yo' better go 'long, gran'pap, case I's in a hurry."

This was the beginning of a big reformation in Wash—a reformation brought about by the force of example. And this is the origin of all reformations. Great military leaders have not said "Go," but "Follow me." The Christian martyrs supported the infant religion by an example that was effective not only 2,000 years ago, but is a shining light to millions of Christians to the present day.

And so it is in our everyday life. Uncle Mose, it is true, spoke to the boy about what he was doing, but only to explain why he did it, that he might make the lesson of his own industry the more effective.

A week later there was not a weed left in the truck patch, not a stick of wood that was uncut and not a chore about the place that was in urgent need of being done.

Uncle Mose was acquiring a chronic habit of rubbing his hands, mammy was smiling to herself almost continually, and Wash grinned even while his hands were being blistered by the unaccustomed tools.

And then one day, at mammy's instigation, Uncle Mose and Wash made a compact. It was to spend every Saturday afternoon under the big tree on the Suwanee.

And what Saturdays they were! Wash has learned that pleasure is mainly a contrast with work. One cannot enjoy rest without being tired. One cannot enjoy idleness without having been busy. So Wash, after a hard week's work, knew the pleasure of indolence.

CHAPTER XII.

MARGARET AND HAGGLETON.

MARGARET LAWRENCE meanwhile was going her way, doing good.

Philip's letters were full, moreover, of admiring praise of this mysterious Mr. Jackson, whom she had vaguely seen that one morning in the Moran home. His letters still were filled with protestations of love, but they were promises also of idleness, of riches, things that she, in her youthful enthusiasm, scorned. Yes, Philip was changing, and not for the better.

It was with happy anticipation, therefore, that she left the "case" which she had successfully nourished back to health and returned to Mrs. Binney's boarding house. She would have time now to take her worldly minded lover in hand and to bring him back to the path of loving service to the poor.

On the doorstep of Mrs. Binney's house she met Gentle, who looked very serious.

"Miss Lawrence," he said rapidly, "will you find Philip at once? There has been an accident in the river. Atkinson, one of the divers, is caught in a wreck, and he is needed. You will find him at the Morans', talking bakeshop to Mr. Jackson, I suppose."

Margaret ran all the way on her mission.

She found Philip in the Morans' rooms in consultation with Mr. Jackson. The elder man considerately turned, giving them an opportunity for a loverlike greeting.

"Philip," she said hastily, "Atkinson has been caught in a wreck. Mr. Gentle sends me to tell you to come at once."

Philip was alert at once. He started for the door.

"Phil," shouted Margaret, running after him, "you are not going into danger?"

"Danger? I am going to get Atkinson out of that wreck."

Haggleton and Margaret looked at each other curiously. They had not met yet and had seen each other only once—on the day of the millionaire's arrival at the tenement, when the two child boarders had been taken to the hospital. Haggleton looked at Margaret and approved of her appearance. She looked like a gentlewoman, every inch of her. But what attitude would she take when she came to learn his true name, still more his relationship to Philip?

He stepped forward.

"My name is Jackson, Miss Lawrence. I am Mr. Ames' partner."

Margaret looked at him intently. Then she backed away from him.

"Jackson!" she exclaimed bitterly. "No, your name is Haggleton. You are John J. Haggleton! I know you for what you are!"

Haggleton searched in his memory. A light began to dawn upon his features, which changed from doubt to certainty, to dismay.

"You are the daughter"— he began.

"Yes, I am the daughter of William Lawrence, the man you ruined and dishonored."

"Business made it unavoidable, Miss Lawrence"—

"Business! Yes, business as you practice it."

"Oh, now, that's going too far! I want to explain to you."

Margaret shook her head.

"I won't listen to you," she said, violently agitated.

"You have strong prejudices, Miss Lawrence."

"Yes, against disloyalty and dishonesty."

Haggleton reflected. The situation dismayed him. Was the ghost of his guilty past, which he had made harmless through Philip's promise never to allow Gentle to tell him of it, to be conjured up against him by this young woman? A second later he was again Haggleton, master of circumstances.

"Suppose I admit that I did your father a wrong. Suppose also that I wish to make amends."

"I don't believe it."

"Suppose I tear down this block, 'lung block'—suppose I tear it down and make a fine playground of it in memory of your father—and call it Lawrence park?"

"Lawrence park?" Margaret's eyes shone with enthusiasm.

"Lawrence park where 'lung block' used to stand," she repeated softly to herself. But her grievance welled up suddenly.

"You know how to tempt me," she said bitterly, "but I could never be friends with you."

"If it isn't friends," he said briefly, "then it is enemies."

"Yes, enemies always! I do not trust you, John J. Haggleton. Why are you living in a tenement under an assumed name? You must have some selfish purpose."

"No; my purpose is not selfish."

"Why do you want to make friends with me?" she continued. "Why do you care what I do?"

Again Haggleton changed his tactics. She was bewildered already.

"I'll tell you frankly," he answered. "I do not want you to influence Philip against me."

The effect was what Haggleton had foreseen. Margaret's thoughts turned from her own grievance to a new and nearer preoccupation.

"Influence Philip against you!" she wondered. "What do you care for Philip? Influence a poor master diver against John J. Haggleton?"

Her glance strayed to Phil's picture on the wall. Something that she had never seen before in it struck her. She remembered what Gentle had told her concerning the mystery of her lover's parentage.

She turned to Haggleton, scrutinized his features, then sank down in a chair.

"Oh," she cried in horror, "you are Philip's father!"

She was overwhelmed.

"Phil," she said, "whom I love and whom I have promised to marry. You are his father, and you ruined mine! It is horrible!"

Haggleton waited a few moments patiently. It was wiser to let these overwhelming impressions make their effect one by one for a little while in her mind than to hustle them out of it, to return later perhaps with tenfold strength. He still held much in reserve. When he judged that the proper moment had come—Margaret had wiped her eyes several times and finally tucked away her handkerchief—he resumed the interview.

"Philip knows nothing of this."

"I will tell him," she said, rising. "I will warn him."

"Warn?"

"You think that this boy has inherited tendencies which you can appeal to. I'll appeal to Philip's better nature."

"Suppose you fail?"

"I cannot fail. I love him."

Haggleton sat down opposite her.

"Let me tell you something, Miss Lawrence," he said very quietly. "I am telling you because you are a woman—a good woman. But, Miss Lawrence"—he raised his voice skillfully to deepen her attention—"it is astonishing how much harm is done in this world by good women."

"What do you mean?" she asked.

"I will show you what I mean right in my own life. You think it has been all hard and cruel, no love in it at all. Just scheming for money, grabbing everything in sight. But who made me that way? A woman—a splendid, high principled woman like you."

"You mean your wife?"

"Yes, my wife," in a very low voice. "My wife," he continued, "did not approve of certain things I did in business, but instead of helping me she left me. She stole away my little boy, my son, and when she took him she took all the love out of my life. Four years old he was when—when she took him away. Such a brave little fellow! He had just had his curls cut off. He used to walk along with me and swing his little cane. Love him! Love him! What plans I made for that boy! What hopes I had for him! And when he got sick—well, never mind, but I love him! He was my son, my only son! You think that I have all I want because I have money. Money! I tell you I want my son, and you want to take him from me. I've got him, and I am going to keep him!"

Haggleton had more to say.

"Do you believe in fair play?" he asked. "Do you know why I did not tell him that I am his father? It is because Gentle said that it wasn't fair to throw my millions in the scale against his ideals."

"Gentle made you promise?"

"Yes. And I did not want to buy a son—I wanted to win his respect and love."

At this moment Gentle entered quietly. Margaret got up. The spell of Haggleton was broken.

"You have aroused Philip's admiration by your conduct of this business," she said with decision. "You can bend every one to your will, but you can't bend mine."

"Gentle," said Haggleton briefly, "I have kept my word. I have not told Philip."

"You knew that he is Philip's father?" asked the girl.

"Yes, Margaret. You believe me to be Philip's friend and yours?"

"Yes, but"—

"Don't tell Philip," repeated the old diver, with increasing seriousness. And he added significantly:

"At least not until I give the word."

"I trust you, Mr. Gentle," she said slowly. "I will not tell Philip."

Then, turning full upon Haggleton, she threw down the gauntlet between them:

"I have promised now, but—the battle is not ended yet."

"The battle!" answered Haggleton. "The battle!" he said again. "I accept your challenge, but you, who love him and whom he loves, remember that he is my son! We are of one flesh, he and I, and that's the elemental fact. You cannot keep us apart!"

He bowed to Margaret and left the room.

The girl at once turned to Gentle. The momentous interview through which she had just passed was forgotten in her anxiety for her lover.

The old diver could give her good news. He had been ordered not to go out with the tub, but to stay on the dock, and had hurried home the moment the news had been signaled across the water that all was well, to tell Margaret and put an end to her suspense. He had not found her there and had gone to Moran's place to look for her, stopping, however, long enough on the way to telephone for particulars if any were yet to be had. He had received them briefly in the laconic language used by all men who have a calling or a profession in common.

Gentle had heard enough to assure Margaret that Philip had made one of the bravest rescues on record, a deed that would be celebrated for many a day wherever divers met together. Calculating daring, a dangerous risk deliberately planned and carried through to the fraction of a minute, superhuman strength—these were the qualities that stood in the narrative unavoidably tangled up in many technicalities.

And Philip was not hurt? Margaret asked again and again. On being informed that he was safe and sound and hoped to see her that evening she hurried away to prepare for his coming.

Gentle, left alone, looked around the room, so cheery now in its neatness and order, yet it felt unaccountably empty.

"Jenny!" he called, but no answer came.

He put on his hat and slowly went out into the street.

Poor Billiards.

"One summer in the country," said a well known amateur billiardist, "another man and I were overtaken by a storm and had to go into a tavern for shelter. The rain fell steadily. We had three or four long hours before us. Time began to hang heavily on our hands.

"'Landlord,' said I, 'do you happen to have a billiard table?'

"'Sure,' said the landlord. 'Sure. Just step this way, gents.'

"He proudly threw open the door of a dark, stuffy room. We saw an antiquated table with a patched cloth, and in the corner was a rack of crooked cues.

"'Any balls?' said I.

"'Sure,' said the landlord, and he unlocked a closet and laid on the table three white balls, all alike—there was no spot, you know.

"'But, see here,' I remonstrated, 'how do you tell these balls apart?'

"'Oh, that's all right,' said he. 'You soon get to know 'em by their shape.'"

—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

To Be Sharp.

The Aryan root "ak" meant "to be sharp," and the idea of sharpness has followed it at least through 10,000 years into all of the family of languages of that tongue. It is quite likely that the property of sharpness was conceived of by these ancestors from handling shells, the first knives that man knew. That cutting edge was referred to by "ak" long before the most primitive people had learned to put an edge on flint. When these Aryans wanted to express the idea of sharpness of mind they used the same word. This root went into the Greek, where it became "akros," meaning pointed. In Sanskrit it is "acre," meaning the same thing. In the Latin we find "acrimonia," signifying sharpness, from which our "acrid" comes. The Latin also has "acer," meaning sharp, and "acus," a needle. In the Anglo-Saxon it became "eag," an edge. So the idea of sharpness runs all the way through, and we have it in our "acid," "acute," "edge" and "ax" as well as in "acrid" and "acumen."—Argonaut.

Salad Rolls.

Materials.—One dozen fresh Parker House rolls, one cupful of cold chicken, one cupful of chopped celery and enough mayonnaise to mix well.

Way of Preparing.—Open the rolls and scoop out a pocket in each. Brush with butter and run in the oven for a few minutes. Cool and fill with a mixture of the other ingredients. Place on a bread plate and garnish with fringed celery.—National Food Magazine.

Some Consolation.

A detective once said it was all wrong to suppose that the professional housebreaker works with coolness and calculation. On the contrary, he usually works in terror and haste, takes too much swag from one room and too little from another and sometimes overlooks the silver in carrying off the electro.—London Saturday Review.

Source of Supply Gone.

"Why don't you bring out an umbrella on a drenching day like this?" inquired a man of a neighbor's son.

"Since father gave up his club he's never brought home any more umbrellas," replied the lad.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

GLIMPSES OF BJORNSON'S LIFE

Famous Norwegian Novelist, Poet and Patriot.

AMUSING INCIDENT IN HIS HOME

How a Young Student and the Novelist's Wife Figured In One of His Favorite Ideas—Greatest Pleasure That His Poetry Ever Gave Him.

Of Bjornstjerne Bjornson, the aged Norwegian novelist, dramatist, poet and patriot, who was born at Kvikne, Osterdalen, Norway, on Dec. 8, 1832, and who was recently stricken with an attack of arterio sclerosis, an interesting anecdote is related by Kristoffer Jansen, the minister-poet, who spent a number of years in the United States.

In the first article he ever published Bjornson announced his firm belief that a new generation of poets would soon arise in Norway. It was one of his favorite ideas, and he reverted to it time and again. One who heard more of it perhaps than anybody else was Miss Karoline Reimers, who in 1858 became Mrs. Bjornson. Shortly after their wedding Bjornson promised his wife jestingly that he would keep her in pocket money by paying her $1 for each new imaginative work by a native writer that took his fancy.

"They will be coming! They will be coming!" he cried triumphantly. "I'll have to work hard to keep my promise."

But they did not come. Months passed, and if Mrs. Bjornson received any pocket money it was not owing to the merit of any native poet or novelist. Bjornson himself was then best known through "Synnove Solbakken," which he had published not long before.

Visit From a Young Poet.

Charmed by this beautiful piece of writing, Kristoffer Jansen, then a young student, made his way to the poet's home at Christiania, carrying in his pocket a roll of poems of his own in manuscript.

Bjornson was lying on his back on a lounge playing with his firstborn, Bjorn.

"Go on," he said, with a gracious nod to the visitor as soon as he had heard the cause and the purpose of the visit.

Young Jansen began to read. Now and then he would look up to see what impression he was making on his listener. As far as he could make out, Bjornson was wholly absorbed in the play with the child. When at last the recitation ended and Jansen lapsed into despairing silence, too awed to venture a question even, Bjornson leaped to his feet, dropped the child into the cradle and rushed out of the room. A moment later he returned, leading his wife by the hand.

"Karoline," he said to her, "I have heard something that I like at last, and here is your first dollar."

Blushed With Delight.

Jansen stared in unfeigned surprise. But the explanation that followed made him blush with pleasure.

"And now you must hear my latest," Bjornson said, taking a manuscript from the drawer of his writing table.

It was "Arne." Jansen listened to the reading of it with bated breath. When the end came, Bjornson demanded:

"Well, what do you think of it?"

Jansen gasped and stammered and blushed. He wanted to say something nice, and he could not find words that seemed good enough. Finally he burst out:

"I—I think Mrs. Bjornson should have another dollar."

Bjornson was once asked to mention the greatest pleasure that his poetry had ever given him. "That," he replied, "was when a delegation of political opponents marched to my house and smashed all my windows, for," he added, "they had no sooner done this and started to march home again than I heard them sing, 'Yes, we love this land of ours.' They had to sing the song of the man whom they had attacked!"

An Air Craft Like a Bird.

David Smith, a farmer from Deweese, Neb., recently gave a contract to W. C. Ahlman, a Norfolk (Neb.) mechanic, to build a new style air craft which Smith has been working on four years and patented a few days ago. The machine is worked by bicycle pedals, and the wings flap up and down.

JOHN BIGELOW'S LIFE STORY.

Noted Journalist Who Recently Celebrated His Ninety-third Birthday.

John Bigelow, the veteran journalist, diplomatist, man of letters, president of the board of trustees of the New York Public library and collector of books, who is enjoying the sunset of life as few men of over ninety do, recently celebrated his ninety-third birthday.

This wonderfully preserved man, who lives in Gramercy park, New York, comes from one of the oldest of the New England families. He was born in Malden, N. Y., Nov. 25, 1817, and is often named as an example of unimpaired bodily and mental vigor.

Graduated from Union college in 1835, he, in the same year, entered the law office of Bushnell & Gaul at Hudson, N. Y., but soon removed to New York city, where he entered the office of the late Judge Bonney. He was admitted to the bar in September, 1839, and devoted much time to literary pursuits.

He was one of the five inspectors of the state prison at Sing Sing from 1845 to 1848 and was the author of all the reports presented to the legislature on this subject during this period. Ten years after he was admitted to the bar and up to 1861 he was associate proprietor and editor of the New York Evening Post. From 1861 to 1864 he was the American consul at Paris. In 1864 he was appointed United States minister to France under Lincoln and served until 1867. During his official residence he discovered conclusive evidence of the connivance of the French government in a plot to furnish the Confederacy with four first class ironclad steamers, and by the wise use of the testimony obtained the plan was thwarted. In 1888 Mr. Bigelow published an account of these transactions under the title "France and the Confederate Navy." He also conducted the negotiations in France which resulted in the expulsion of the French imperial army from the republic of Mexico in 1867.

While he was in France Mr. Bigelow discovered and purchased at great cost the original manuscript of "Benjamin Franklin's Autobiography" and subsequently prepared a connected text of this work, which he afterward extended so as to give a complete "Biography of Franklin by Himself."

From 1870 to 1873 Mr. Bigelow resided with his family in Germany and upon his return in 1874 was made chairman of a committee of the New York state legislature to investigate the management of the canals of the state. In 1875 he was elected secretary of state of New York upon the Democratic ticket. When his term expired he devoted himself to his farm and literary pursuits. Only a short time ago Mr. Bigelow gave his farm of 400 acres at Highland Falls, N. Y., to that town to be used as a watershed.

Mr. Bigelow's first important journalistic work was his commission to inquire into the slave question in the West Indies in 1850. Some of his other works include the lives of Bryant and Tilden, essays on the Haitians, on France and hereditary monarchy, "The Mystery of Sleep" in 1897, and more recently and very appropriately "The Useful Life a Crown to the Simple Life."

EUSAPIA PALLADINO'S POWERS

Tribute Paid the Italian Spiritualistic Medium by Cesare Lombroso.

Dr. Max Nordau, in a letter from Paris commenting on the late Cesare Lombroso's belief in the powers of Eusapia Palladino, the Italian spiritualistic medium, says that Lombroso told him of seeing his dead mother, feeling her caresses and hearing her speech, calling him by the pet name which she gave him as a child and even using the Venetian dialect, which she never employed except when speaking to him, all by the aid of the medium.

In answer to Nordau's arguments and his contention that it was often difficult to differentiate between hallucination and reality, the criminologist, whom the writer speaks of reverently as "friend and master," said: "When I am dead, and I hope that will be soon, I shall return to you. Then you will be cured, you doubting Thomas!"

New World's Power.

Howard Bennett, son of Dr. F. L. Bennett of Beloit, Wis., is said to have discovered a new world's power not unlike the waves of wireless telegraphy, but differing in many essentials from electricity. He is developing machines to utilize this mysterious power, which was discovered by accident. Details of the discovery are being kept secret until patents are secured. Howard Bennett is a sophomore in Beloit college. Those who are acquainted with the discovery say it is one of the wonders of the age.

MODERN HAIR DRESSING

has played havoc with the tresses of the fair sex, and druggists everywhere comment on the fact that they are selling large quantities of sage for making the old-fashioned "sage tea," such as was used by our grandmothers for promoting the growth of their hair and restoring its natural color. The demand for this well-known herb for this purpose has been so great that one manufacturer has taken advantage of the fact, and has placed on the market an ideal "sage tea," containing sulphur, a valuable remedy for dandruff and scalp rashes and irritations. This preparation, which is called Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur, is sold by all leading druggists for 50 cents and $1 a bottle, or will be sent direct by the Wyeth Chemical Company, 74 Cortandt St., New York City, upon receipt of price.

BRIEFS

Miss Mildred Cavanagh has returned from a visit at Brockton.

Mrs. H. D. Cole of Washington street attended this week the marriage of her brother at Baldwin, Maine.

Miss Gertrude Dean of Whitwell street has accepted a position at D. E. Wadsworth's store.

Last night was dramatic night, local amateurs appearing in four or more different halls.

Mrs. Jeremiah Sheehan of 46 Bates avenue died Wednesday, aged 60 years. Funeral services will be held Friday.

Mayor Shea's gain in Ward Six was 56 and not 31. Last year Mr. Stone carried the ward by 13, while this year Mr. Shea carried it by 43.

The Brockton Enterprise says: "Mayor Shea of Quincy triumphed over the attacks made upon him and goes into office again in state, which well suits his Brockton friends."

The Phipps A. A. defeated the Washington A. A. by the score of 13 to 12 and the Federal avenues 15 to 5. Goals were made by Swain, Smith, Byron and Mahoney of the Washington A. A.

George W. Cragg has taken the agency for the Daily Ledgers and they can hereafter be bought at his pharmacy anytime after 4 P. M. Evening patrons will appreciate the convenience.

Charles W. Finnimore, the tramp who made a murderous assault on Wesley Grant of East Milton on April 10 last, was made the defendant in a suit filed by his wife on Wednesday with the clerks of courts of Suffolk county, for divorce. She asks for a divorce under the law which provides for such an action in case a person imprisoned for more than three years.

TEX RICKARD, BIG FIGHT PROMOTER

Westerner's Part In Securing the Jeffries-Johnson Battle.

WELL KNOWN AS A MINER.

Large Open Air Man, Who Likes to Do Big Things In a Quiet, Certain Way. Fight Promoting a Side Issue With Former Cowpuncher.

G. L. (Tex) Rickard of Goldfield, Nev., who, with his partner, Jack Gleason, landed the opportunity to produce the Jeffries-Johnson fight for the heavyweight championship of the world, is not known as a sporting man in the broad sense of the word.

Rickard is no unknown quantity in the country from which he comes. He is identified with some of the best mining interests in the United States, and he has a reputation as a big, out of doors, representative western man. He received his education in the school of experience and developed his character in the romantic life of the frontier.

Cowpuncher In His Youth.

The man who has undertaken to stage the biggest fight in ring history and who also offered $101,000 as a purse, the largest bid for a pugilistic battle in the history of the world, was born in a small Texas town and when only a boy began the life of a cowpuncher in the old gun days. For years Rickard worked on a ranch and wandered along the old cattle trails from the Rio Grande into Wyoming and Montana with the "ten thousand steers a-straying'," but the lure of the north and the quest of gold in Alaska took the young cowpuncher to Nome. There he began to make money and became well known in the rough land of the snows and gold.

Made His Plans Quietly.

He followed the gold rush to Goldfield, Nev., and there he became identified with big interests, and there he took a sudden whim and brought Gans and Battling Nelson together to help a celebration at the request of some business men in the place. The fight proved to be one of the most remarkable ever staged. It brought in about G. L. (TEX) RICKARD.

$63,000. The bid for the Jeffries-Johnson fight was also suggested by a party of business men, one of whom asked Rickard why he did not try to stage the event. Rickard thought it over, and about two months ago he came to the conclusion that he would like to try to get the proposition. He did not do any talking, but made his plans.

Now, Rickard is not a sport follower, but he knows men, and he likes to do big things, so when he made up his mind that he wanted to stage that fight he went after the proposition. Men who know Rickard say that when he goes after a thing he gets it. He announced no previous bids for the bout and went quietly to New York city without mentioning his plans. He has studied the situation and believes that the bid of his combination was successful because of the cash proposition in big terms.

Rickard is about thirty-seven years old, and he looks younger. His hair is dark, and around the keen eyes are the tiny wrinkles made by much sun and wind. He "looks the part" of the open air man who has successfully risen through the dust of the roundups and the riots of snow sequestered mining camps to a place where he can do big things in a quiet, certain way. In the west they know his record and admire the man who, in copartnership with Jack Gleason and possibly another man, has secured the privilege of staging the biggest fight that the ring has ever witnessed.

McKinley Birthplace to Be a Museum.

The birthplace, near Niles, O., of William McKinley, former president of the United States, which for several years has served as a shelter for tramps and is nearly a ruin, has been bought by Miss Lulu E. Mackey of Youngstown, a member of the Trumbull county bar, and will be restored. The entire expense is to be borne by her. Miss Mackey, one of the first women in Ohio to be admitted to the bar for years, has been gathering relics of the McKinleys. The house will be used as a museum.

To Play Billiards on Ships.

Billiards and pool on shipboard are now possible through the recent invention of a self leveling table which accommodates itself to every movement of the vessel.

INDIANAPOLIS MOTOR PLANS.

Many New World's Auto Records to Be Sought Dec. 11.

Official announcement has been made by the managers of the automobile speedway in Indianapolis that on Dec. 11 an attempt will be made to lower all existing track records from half a mile to 1,000 miles and that such famous drivers as Strang, Oldfield and Christie will compete.

When the track, which had not been completed, was christened a few months ago its baptism of blood gave it a stigma which will live long in the memories of the racing men. At that time the track was so unsafe that several very serious accidents happened and the management was criticised all over the country for allowing the drivers to compete. There were several bad holes which caused the cars to jump and skid, and several deaths were caused by the drivers losing control of their cars at these spots.

The management since the unfortunate meet have spared no money and labor to make the track absolutely safe, and they claim now that it is as fast as any in the world and that the records made on the famous Brooklands track in England are in danger. The returning racing men from the Atlanta meet, however, doubt very much if the Indianapolis track is as fast as the speedway at Atlanta. Those well acquainted with both tracks give the preference to the southern race course for speed. They point out the fact that the best that Robertson or Strang could do with their 200 horsepower Fiat was ninety-five miles an hour on the Atlanta track, while on the Brooklands track the same car traveled more than 108 miles an hour, and they say the Atlanta track is the best in this country.

INDOOR TENNIS PLANS.

Dates Fixed For Competition—National Championship to Start Feb. 22.

At the lawn tennis meeting held recently in New York the Indoor Athletic association decided upon the following tournament fixtures:

Eleventh annual national indoor championship for men—Tuesday, Feb. 22, and following days.

Fourth annual national indoor championship for women—Tuesday, March 15, and following days.

Seventh regiment championship in singles and doubles—Saturday, Jan. 1, and following days.

Fifth annual Seventh regiment-Yale team match—Saturday, Jan. 22 or 29.

Other collegiate team matches, especially with Columbia and Harvard and the annual match with the Boston Cadet corps, are being arranged subject to Captain Schuyler's approval.

The dates for tournaments show two important changes, as the regimental championship does not begin Christmas day, as in previous years, but on New Year's day. The women's championship is also put over into March instead of being decided early in February before the men's tournament. Frederick B. Alexander and Harold H. Hackett, the outdoor national doubles champions and holders of the indoor honors in 1906, 1907 and 1908, have signified their intention of again entering for the championship. Theodore Roosevelt Pell and Wylie C. Grant won the championship last February in Alexander's absence upon the Davis international cup team.

FITZ TO FIGHT AGAIN.

Has Been Matched to Meet Lang In Australia, Dec. 27.

Bob Fitzsimmons, the veteran heavyweight pugilist, and Bill Lang have agreed to fight in Australia on Dec. 27 for the championship of Australia, now held by Lang.

Lang won this title by defeating Bill Squires at Melbourne on Oct. 25. Squires was knocked out in the twenty-eighth round.

Hans Wagner to Go on Stage.

Hans Wagner and John ("Dots") Miller of the Pirates have accepted an offer to go on the stage. The two members of the world's champions will receive $500 a week for a little sketch with a vaudeville company and will start on the trip in the near future.

Navy Cut of Regatta.

The athletic committee of the United States Naval academy has recommended to Superintendent Boyer that no Annapolis crew be sent to the Poughkeepsie (N. Y.) regattas hereafter.

FUTURE SPORT EVENTS

Cornell alumni field fund is now $70,000, and an effort will be made to reach the $100,000 by Jan. 1.

Beloit college of Wisconsin is planning to hold an intercollegiate wrestling match there in January.

The New York State Fish, Game and Forest league will hold its annual session in Syracuse Dec. 9 and 10. There are eighty clubs in the league.

Central Canadian Ice Racing association annual horse races will occur Jan. 29 to Feb. 5 at Ottawa River Junction. Many horses from the United States will compete.

The old Dutch bowling team of Louisville made the first entry for the tenth annual tourney of the American bowling congress, to be held in Detroit Feb. 26 to March 15 next.

All arrangements have been completed for a ten round fight between "Cyclone Johnny" Thompson of Sycamore, Ill., and "Fighting Dick" Hyland of San Francisco before the Empire Athletic club, Kansas City, Mo., Dec. 13.

ARRESTED IN BROOKLYN

Wanted for Assault on George Germain

Word was received from Brooklyn, N. Y., Wednesday night, that Phillip Pitts, aged 26 years, who is wanted by the Quincy police for assault on George Germain on Town river last August, had been placed under arrest in that city. Inspector Goodhue, who had charge of the case, learned that Pitts was employed in an iron foundry in Brooklyn, N. Y., and sent the police of that city a description and warrant.

Immediately upon receipt of the information of the arrest of Pitts requisition papers were issued, and Chief Burrell and Inspector Goodhue went to Brooklyn, N. Y., to bring the man back to Quincy.

The alleged assault took place on the night of Aug. 4. Germain, who lived in a shanty near Johnson's lumber wharf, was called to the door about 10 o'clock that night by four men, who commenced to beat him. As he fell, the men ran toward Washington street. His cries brought help and the police and Dr. Bushnell were notified. Later, three men were arrested, and one of them turned State's evidence and told of Pitts' part in the assault. It is alleged that Pitts immediately left town and his whereabouts was unknown until located in Brooklyn, N. Y.

BASKET BALL.

The Houghs Neck Independents had another defeat registered against them Wednesday night, when the Excelsus club of Wollaston won 27 to 12. The Houghs Neck team, although playing on their own floor, seemed lost in the fast company of the lighter Wollaston team, whose pass work and shooting was excellent. Billy Manning, as usual, was a whole lot and received a great hand from the crowd. Next Wednesday night the Independents will line up against the Quincy Wanderers at Pandora hall, and a close game is expected.

ORDERING SUPPLIES by TELEPHONE

ABOUT the first of December the mills factories, and machine-shops are working overtime turning out spring orders, while the wholesale and retail stores are "up to their necks" in the Christmas rush.

It is time when seconds mean dollars and nobody is in a mood for delay.

If anything breaks or goes wrong, new parts or more goods are needed, the quickest method of accomplishment is by TELEPHONE.

If a merchant finds himself "short" on a certain line he not only can re-order, but agree upon price, and delivery by a few second's use of the telephone.

Whether the factory is in New York, Cleveland, Chicago or St. Louis, it can be reached in a few moments by the Long Distance Bell Telephone lines.

WORK OF THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

Boston Teacher and Others Speak at Reception of the First Church Sunday School

A very pleasing reception was held by the Sunday School of the First church Thursday evening in the church chapel. The reception was devoid of formality, and therefore very enjoyable. From 7.30 to 8.30 the members of the school and friends passed a pleasant hour in greeting old friends and making new aquaintances.

During the reception there were piano solos by Miss Ruth Penniman and Miss Minnie Hardwick. The friends were welcomed by Charles H. Johnson superintendent of the Sunday school. He said that he was glad to see so many present to meet the teachers and the pastor. Mrs. Laurance H. Sturtevant sang a group of songs with Mrs. Paul R. Blackmur as accompanist.

The speaker of the evening was Louis A. Nash, parish assistant at the Church of the Disciples, Boston. Mr. Nash said that often there was a lack of information on the part of the church as to what the Sunday School was doing. These meetings bring the church and Sunday school together and there ought to be more of them, so that each could see what the other was doing.

He spoke of the work that the Sunday School was doing and the need of impressing ourselves with its overwhelming value. We have all got to get a living. The public schools do these things. Where are we to cultivate the feeling of reverence and worship except in the Sunday School. When we neglect the Sunday School we are neglecting a most important thing. It builds up the attitude of mind that must build up the churches. The Sunday School needs to be encouraged and built up in every way that it in turn may build up the church. It must be done in a business-like positive way. The church ought to reach out into society and help every good thought in the community. The Sunday School should in their penny collection plan to do some definite thing. He believed in encouraging them to do so. They should have regular exercises and teach the spirit of devotion, and we need to teach the children activity.

Supt. Johnson said the Sunday School collections were accumulated and at the end of the season the school voted what should be done with the money contributed. That they had a charity fund connected with the school and he told how this fund had been used at Thanksgiving in giving baskets to deserving needy people.

Rev. Charles B. Ames, the assistant pastor of the church, spoke of the needs of the Sunday school. We want the interest of the parish and friends in the Sunday School. We want you to interest the children. Parents can do a great deal in guiding the attitude of children. Have them look at it as if it were not a disagreeable duty, but as on obligation. Parents must look to their children for the attitude and spirit as to what it should be in the church.

The Sunday school is an institution to help children for a life that is an uplifting spirit. How the trust in God carries a man through the reverses and difficulties of life. Help us to bring the children together on a week day to practice singing the music of the Sunday School. All can sing, it is only a matter of practice.

We have a good corps of teachers. They are able and hard working. Yet we need teachers for every class who can go out and do the work for the class that is outside of theirs This may not be possible without paid teachers, but he did not advocate payment.

He also spoke of how difficult it was to do good work with so many classes in one room. A teacher to do even satisfactory work with a class should have suitable accommodations. We ought to be proud of the work of our school under its present conditions. At some future day we may have a parish house.

Miss Lillian A. Akeroyd then sang a group of songs with William E. Weston as accompanist.

Supt. Johnson said a word urging a more active interest in the church, after which there was a social hour during which light refreshments were served by the young ladies of Mr. Plummer's and Miss Marie Bass' classes.

The committee in charge consisted of Supt. Charles H. Johnson, Arthur W. Hall, Mrs. Perry L. wton and Miss Sophia French.

NEW STATION WANTED

Also Many Other Improvemen s At West Quincy

An enthusiastic meeting of the West Quincy Improvement Association was held Thursday evening, President Stephen B. Little presiding. The meeting was devoted largely to a discussion of the needs of that section of the city.

The committee on street railway made its report on the conference with the City Council committee and officials of the street railway. This report, however, was but a preliminary one, as it was simply the opening step.

It was announced that the New York, New Haven & Hartford railroad had filed a petition with the Secretary of State to build a line of railroad from the Shawmut branch to connect with the Granite branch at East Milton. If this is done it will abolish a bad grade crossing and eliminate one of the obstacles to extending the street railway tracks from East Milton to connect with the Adams street line of the Elevated at Minot street. The benefits that would result from a line running from Willard street through Robertson and Beale streets to connect with the line on Farrington street, Wollaston, were also discussed.

Along this same line, a new depot at West Quincy and a new station on the Granite branch at Robertson street were discussed.

Another matter was the desirability of getting new business enterprises to locate in West Quincy. It was pointed out that there was plenty of available land for manufacturing industries in West Quincy and an organized effort will be made to get new business enterprises to locate here.

The matter of a banquet was brought up and it was thought best to postpone this for the present.

The association now has a membership of fifty, several being admitted at this meeting. It is hoped an effort will be made to get every man in West Quincy to affiliate himself with the association.

ALL BOYS INVITED.

The meeting for younger boys planned for Saturday morning at the Y. M. C. A. is unusually strong. Stereopticon and story of "Ted or What became of Hooking Jack" is the attraction. Every boy that was present last year at the story of "Bill the Hobo" will remember the enjoyable morning they spent there and will be on hand for this meeting. Every boy in Quincy is invited.

☞ We have had to ask our patrons for a little more time the past week in getting out printing matter in our job department but can now keep abreast of the rush as three extra printers have been added to the force. It seems to be a case of hustle at the Ledger office all the time, business is so good along all lines.

MERCHANTS' ASSOCIATION

Temporary Organization Formed last Night

Quincy business men representing nearly every line assembled at the Johnson building Thursday evening to consider the advisability of organizing a Merchants Association. All the store men seemed to feel the necessity of such an organization, and the meeting was quite enthusiastic. Questions affecting the merchants were informally discussed.

EBEN W. SHEPPARD

A temporary organization was effected as follows:

Chairman—Eben W. Sheppard.

Secretary—R. E. Foy.

Treasurer—D. E. Wadsworth.

Committee on Organization—W. G. Shaw, W. G. Crowell, T. L. Williams, J. Peterson, William Cashman, H. Everett Crane, James McConnell and A. L. Whiton.

KNIGHTS OF MALTA.

The convocation of John Adams commandery Knights of Malta on Thursday evening was one of the best and most interesting in the history of the order in Quincy. Besides the conferring of the blue degree on new members, and the taking in of applications, there was present a large delegation from Mount Herman commandery of Whitman, consisting of Sir Knight Commander J. M. Tyler, who gave a splendid talk on the religious side of Malta; Past Commander Charles Cole, who told of Malta as a protector; Past Commander Justin Thayer who spoke eloquently on the Bible and Malta; Past Commander Allen Harman who talked on good citizenship. Capt. Gen. Flag's topic, which he proved by his talk to thoroughly understand was Brotherhood. Sir Knights C. W. Hawes, Frederick Churchill and Bryant were glad they had decided to come.

Deputy Grand Commander John Bamford delivered a message from the grand commander, which alone well repaid the companions for leaving their firesides.

Monday December 20th John Adams Commandery as a body will visit St. Johns Commandery, Brockton.

☞ Christmas advertisers are asked to get their copy in the afternoon previous to the date they wish it inserted so that it may received careful attention in the set up and placing. Small ads received up to noon.

PLANS FOR THE LAUNCHING TOMORROW

The Herman Frasch to be Put Over at the Fore River Shipyard at 9.45

The Herman Frasch, a steel sulphur vessel built by the Fore River Ship Building Co., for the Union Sulphur Co., of New York, will be launched at the works Saturday morning at 9.45. The launching will be a private one and the yards will not be open to the public. It will however be witnessed by a small party of invited guests of the Sulphur Co. This party will arrive on a special car from New York today. They will remain in Boston tonight, and will come to the Fore River Saturday morning in special cars which will be run over the Fore River track to the yard.

The launching will take place at 9.45 and the vessel will be christened by Master Herman Frasch Whiton, grandson of Herman Frasch, for whom the vessel is named.

This will be the first time that a vessel has been christened by a boy at the Fore River Yard. After the launching the guests will view the yard, and a lunch will be served in the mould loft. The special cars will then be run back to Boston and attached to a New York train.

S. S. HERMAN FRASCH.

The Herman Frasch is a single screw steamship constructed of mild steel to the highest class in the American Bureau of Shipping and British Corporation Registry. The vessel is of the single deck type constructed with Simpson patent topside tanks forming three large self-trimming cargo holds, each operated by twin hatchways having the DeRussett patent covers.

The after part is built up to form a long poop with Liverpool house on top in which are berthed the engineer officers and their assistants. A short bridge with bridge house is arranged forward of amidships with quarters for the captain, navigating officers, saloon, chart room, pilot house, etc., while right forward vessel is built up to form a topgallant forecastle with anchor handling appliances.

The Herman Frasch has a straight stem and semi- elliptical stern, has the machinery arranged right aft, and is rigged with three pole masts from the tops of the forward two of which there is rigged a wireless telegraphy outfit.

The vessel has been designed specially for the carriage and operation of bulk freight expeditiously and for this purpose is fitted with kingposts operating twin booms on which is carried the Spencer-Miller patent marine transfer capable of discharging the cargo at a rate of over 300 tons per hour.

The machinery consists in a set of triple expansion surface condensing engines supplied with steam at 180 lbs. pressure by three single ended marine type Scotch boilers, the installation being capable of developing sufficient power to propel the vessel loaded at sea at a mean speed of ten and one half knots per hour.

The Herman Frasch has been constructed throughout in an exceptionally substantial manner and will form a very notable addition to the coastwise fleet of special freight carriers initiated by the Fore River Shipbuilding Company.

PROPOSALS for COAL

SUPPER AND SOCIAL

At the Wollaston Congregational Church

A supper and social was held in the vestry of the Wollaston Congregational church on Thursday evening. The entertainment in charge of the pastor, Rev. E. A. Chase, consisted of readings and musical selections.

Mrs. George T. Taylor in a most pleasing manner read "A modern husking," an original composition, and a selection from the "Birds' Christmas Carol."

Mr. Balfour in violin selections accompanied on the piano by his sister, Miss Balfour, was well received, as were the vocal solos by Mr. Van Buskirk accompanied by his wife.

Among those serving were: Mrs. E. A. Chase Mrs. Harry M. Thomas, Mrs. Charles Olney, Mrs. R. B. Locke, Miss Hannah Farwell, Mrs. L. L. Cleveland, Mrs. E. E. Jameson, Mrs. J. H. Lewis and Mrs. Amos T. Leavitt.

The new steamer is another thing of which the city may be proud.

A six-page Daily Ledger now and then, so that the eight-page paper may be appreciated more.

Just at present the man with a furnace on his hands is interested in coal lands nearer home than Alaska.

Mr. Roosevelt is safe, but there is a suspicion that something terrible happened to the elephant that had the audacity to chase him.

The numerous hammers New York has gotten out of William Loeb, Jr., have not prevented him from wielding the official axe on sugar thieves.

It is about time to convince the Central American dictator that he belongs to a picturesque but unpleasant past.

Mr. Bryan will make a "try" for the Senate, says headlines. Must be anxious to get rid of his profits from the commoner and his lecture tours.

Champagne will be advanced 50 cents per quart. The common people will appreciate what that means when they remember that 50 cents is about the price of one dozen eggs.

It is by no means certain however, that Mr. Bryan will make prohibition his paramount issue in 1912. There is plenty of time for him to try out several paramount issues between this time and that.

The four plays presented in one evening this week by local talent in four different halls would almost indicate that Quincy was a great show town. Certainly there was some very clever acting.

The defeated Republican candidate for Mayor should not take all the credit for awakening of civic interest. The union Thanksgiving service, the address of Judge Avery, and the other Sunday evening services at Bethany church have all been along that line and accomplished much good.

Senator Hultman has already been suggested as the next Republican candidate for Mayor. There would be something doing with "Gene" in the field. Mayor Shea has already defeated Republicans from Wards Three, Two and Five, and it may be necessary next year to nominate a Ward Four man, possibly "Councilman" Sandberg, the ex-Representative.

A walk through Quincy's shopping district at night is a real pleasure the Christmas decorations and merchandise all having a festive air that induces one to step inside to see what other' attractions are offered. Most of the stores are christmasy with decorations of red and green and the stock, even the most common place, is arranged so attractively that it is no hardship to part with ones money.

There is a cheery air these cool days among the shop keepers as well as the buyers for somehow frosty weather seems more like Christmas time and reminds one it is time to shop. Trade has picked up this week and will go with a swing until after Christmas. Local merchants report a quiet fall but indications now point to a large Christmas business.

President Taft's order amplifying the present requirements for admission into the diplomatic service and making examinations compulsory will go far toward completing the good work of establishing merit as the sole basis for diplomatic appointments. The consular service was put some years ago on a basis of permanent tenure, appointments being made to the lower classes after examinations and promotions to fill vacancies being determined by efficiency records. What Secretary Knox calls "the remarkable growth of the political and commercial relations of the United States and the increasing difficulties of the problems growing out of these relations" forced an abandonment of the spoils system in appointments to consulates. By executive orders and legislation the principle of appointments for fitness was introduced and the service finally taken out of politics by the act of April 5, 1906, followed by President Roosevelt's orders. The new principle was also applied in part to diplomatic nominations and Secretary Root issued an order which provided examinations for entrance into the lower diplomatic grades. President Taft's order extends the scope of the merit plan. It prescribes more subjects for examination, adds an oral and a physical examination and provides for promotion in the diplomatic service by which the consul of lowest grade can raise himself by efficiency to the rank of minister. The old system of distributing diplomatic appointments as political perquisites has been displaced and the entire service is certain to show great improvement.

NEW DISTRICT ATTORNEY.

Gov. Draper has nominated Albert F. Barker of Brockton for district attorney in the Southeastern district, to succeed Thomas Grover of Canton, resigned. The district includes Norfolk and Plymouth counties.

Mr. Barker is the present assistant district attorney. He has been a resident of Brockton many years. He served in the House in 1894-5 and in the Senate in 1896-7 from the First Plymouth senatorial district. He was on the committees on judiciary, mercantile affairs, taxation, probate and insolvency, constitutional amendments and election laws. He is married and lives on North Ash street. He studied law evenings and later in the office of the late Judge B. W. Harris and of Judge Robert O. Harris when the latter was district-attorney. He is a member of various fraternal societies and vice-president of the Brockton Cricket Club. Mr. Barker had the almost unanimous indorsement of the bar of Norfolk and Plymouth counties.

—London has a trackless trolley.

—The Boston & Maine railroad has voted $3,000,000 for improvements.

—Buenos Aires has authorized the construction of an electric subway under the city.

—Cincinnati boasts the only church on wheels. It is a large electric bus which is loaded with singers and speakers and invades the slums every Sunday.

—The development of the water powers in California has helped boom the state by bringing in new industries and helping old industries with plenty of cheap electric power available.

CHRONIC EXCITEMENT IN ENGLAND

Mrs. Alden Ward Speaks at Women's Clubhouse on Current Events in Great Britain.

To a large and very much interested audience at the Women's clubhouse Thursday afternoon, Mrs. Herbert J. Gurney, the club's president, introduced Mrs. May Alden Ward, who gave her second lecture in the series on current events. Mrs. Ward held the closest attention of her audience, and her charming, informal way of lecturing greatly added to the interest of her subject.

She said that the subject of the afternoon was "England," which, of course, meant the budget at the present time. The Englishman had always been looked upon as not easily roused but lately event after event had kept him in a state of chronic excitement.

First,— about the army. This had been aroused by a play presented sometime ago depicting how very unprepared England was for a sudden invasion; how little defense she had.

Second—Germany's naval power was growing, so that England would lose her two-power standard, as it is called. This standard is one that England has always maintained and means that her navy should always be equal to any two other countries' united and must also be 10 percent stronger. So when Germany increased her navy, England immediately ordered more super-dreadnoughts, much more formidable than Germany's dreadnoughts.

The third cause for excitement and anxiety was the advent of the airship from France. Mrs. Ward said it was a very fortunate thing it was a French and not a German airship, for England was jealous of Germany's power and inventions whereas she was on very friendly terms with France. This aerial invasion brought out the fact, with great horror to the Englishman, that his home was no longer an island with natural defenses. She then had to discover some deadly devise to destroy a possible army of airships.

The next thing to stir up enthusiasm was the report of the Royal commission which emphasized the weak system of the laws governing the poor. This report showed that the $60,000,000 spent for relief was wasted, on account of this weakness. The most striking statement this commission, made, Mrs. Ward said, was that the average working man was deteriorating physically. For instance, the standards of strength, height, etc., for enlistment have been necessarily lowered three times in the last few years. The reason for this is that they live in the crowded city in tenements and unhealthy districts, and cannot go into the country if they desire, for the land is owned by a few rich men, and is kept for their personal pleasure, such as parks, hunting grounds and so on. This all showed how urgent was the need of a social reform and new laws.

Mrs. Ward then told of the budget, which she named the war budget; war against the laws governing the poor and the taxation. She told what the budget really is,—a financial statement giving an estimate of the expenses for the coming year, how to obtain and how to expend the money. This budget is made out by the exchequer, in this instance it was Lloyd George's duty. Mrs. Ward gave a most interesting account of his early life, training, education and finally of his being admitted to the bar, and the things he accomplished to make him famous. He always made himself popular with the working people.

Lloyd George, in this budget aimed to better the poor laws and taxation. In the budget he provided for a graduated income tax; that is a man with a large income is taxed accordingly, and he also provided that a man with an income within a certain limit should have an abatement of $50 on every child under 16 years. The budget also provided for a graduated inheritance tax and death tax. Some one was heard to remark of these provisions that they encouraged birth, discouraged death and made the life between unsupportable.

The next thing the budget attacks is the public drinking house, the saloon. Bill after bill had passed the House of Commons but was defeated in the House of Lords. These bills were not of a practical nature. They revoked a few licenses each year but it would take 14 years to reduce the number even two-thirds. The budget puts a heavy tax on saloons thus making it impossible for any but the very prosperous to exist.

Next Mr. George made a luxury tax; this also being graduated; for instance an auto was taxed according to its horsepower.

Then Mr. George took up the land question. He provided for a tax on land which gained greatly in value without the least effort on the part of the owner. For instance, a railroad might go through and greatly raise the value and then the owner would gain. This gain Mr. George thought should be shared with the government. He also fixed a special tax on undeveloped land; a dog in the manger should pay for his manger.

Mrs. Ward here gave some very interesting statistics saying that four-fifths of the land was in the hands of a very few. Of the 32,000,000 people of England 31,000,000 had no land that is 85 percent of the people were without land and as a result there were many idlers.

The next thing to be considered was the revaluation of the land. The budget provided for a commission of experts to revalue the land, which has not been done for 200 years. Think of paying taxes in London on land according to the value estimate of $1692! As in the case of the saloons, bills had passed the Commons on revaluation, but as may readily be seen, failed in the House of Lords.

Another land trouble in England is, that London is owned by a few wealthy men, who lease the land to merchants but will not sell. These merchants, when their lease expires, are entirely at the mercy of the land owner, for with the building and business built up on a certain street it would be impossible to move. In one case a merchant paid $1,500 a year for his land and, when his lease expired, the landowner demanded $15,000. That was all right to the merchant, but then the owner demanded a bonus of $250,000 for a renewal of the lease.

Last April the budget made its initial appearance in the House of Commons. At this meeting it was merely read and from that time until Nov. 3 when it was again read, the struggle was on in earnest and all summer it raged. On Friday, Nov. 5, it was put to vote in the House of Commons and the vote stood 379 in favor and 149 against.

It then went to the Lords. In this house there are 616 members but only three constitute a quorum and scarcely ever were there more than thirty present at any meeting. On this occasion, however, five hundred peers were in their seats before the votes were cast. For over 200 years no budget had been rejected, but this time it was defeated 350 to 75. Mrs. Ward told many interesting incidents about the struggle before and after the voting, and said that a very great crisis was now at hand.

It was a fight between the Liberalists and the Conservatives. In either case England would have a change. With the Conservatives, protective tariff and the endorsement of the Lords with the Liberalists social reforms, reforms in the Lords, and so on.

It will be most interesting, Mrs. Ward said in closing, to watch the results of all this.

Nancy A. Herrick, being duly sworn, deposes and says: When I was a school girl I had a head of heavy, long, dark brown hair, that was so plentiful, rich and glossy, that it was the envy of many of my young schoolmates, and attracted the attention and remarks of strangers. After I was married and as I grew older, my hair commenced to come out just a little at first, but gradually as time passed it came out more and more, and began to turn gray. I was induced by many good reports heard of Sage and Sulphur, to try a bottle. My hair was quite gray and thin on top when I commenced using Sage and Sulphur, and you may imagine my satisfaction when I found that it was fast coming back to its natural condition, becoming thicker, darker, smoother and glossier than it had been for a long time. I continued the use of Sage and Sulphur and my hair is now in a splendid condition, as heavy and as dark and smooth as when I was a girl of sixteen. From my experience I believe it is one's own fault if they lose their hair, or let it get gray or harsh. It is now four years since I commenced using Sage and Sulphur, and still use it, and my hair still keeps thick, dark, smooth and glossy.

BRIEFS

First skating of the season.

Have you located Oak harbor, the new building boom of Quincy?

A divorce was granted on Thursday in the Norfolk Superior court to Pasquale Ristalo of Quincy from Shurlie E. Ristalo.

The inauguration day of the new city government will come early this years,—Monday, Jan. 3.

Recent arrivals from Finland report three to four feet of snow in that country when they left.

An account of the trustees of Thayer Academy recently allowed at Probate court shows balance of the principal to be $434,845.27.

When Albert F. Barker of Brockton is confirmed as district attorney, he will be called upon to appoint an assistant from Norfolk county.

There will be an important meeting of the members of the Washington Street Congregational church and society tonight in the vestry at 8.15.

Charitable Tens Circle of King's Daughters have a Christmas sale tomorrow afternoon and evening at the home of Mrs. J. Henry Emery, Adams street.

Miss Mary Meby, for many years a missionary among the emigrants at Ellis island, New York city, will speak this evening at the Swedish Baptist church.

Another daring highway robbery took place in Dewey square, Boston, about 5 o'clock Thursday evening, George L. Ross being held up by five men and relieved of his pocket book.

Frank Fessenden Crane who is representing the City of Quincy at the River and Harbor Congress in Washton has been elected a member of the resolutions committee at Thursday's session.

Col. Henry L. Kincaide attended on Thursday evening the annual banquet of the Massachusetts Volunteer Militia held in Boston. About 250 commissioned officers past and present were there.

The next regular meeting of W. R. C. 103 will be held Tuesday afternoon for the election of officers. In the evening a complimentary supper and entertainment will be given Post 88, G. A. R.

$10,000 FOR MASONIC HOME.

At the annual communication of the grand lodge, A. F. and A. M., held at Masonic Temple, Boston, on Wednesday $10,000 was voted toward the new Masonic home, which is to be erected near Worcester. Representatives from 201 lodges were present and the hall was crowded.

In the report of Grand Secretary Davis it was announced that the membership in the State is about 56,000 and the increase during the past 12 months nearly 1800. The deaths in the same period numbered 890.

Grand Master Flanders was unanimously elected for a second term.

☞ A landlord with an economical turn of mind when his tenants moved out put up a sign in the window announcing the house was to let and sat down to wait for new tenants. Another landlord, a wiser one, rushed to the newspaper office and advertised his house and had tenants ready to move in as soon as house was vacant. The ad cost him only a small amount and he lost no rent. The economical landlord is still looking for tenants and losing rent every day. Which landlord are you?

☞ The Red Cross stamp is your Christmas message to all the world that you love your fellow man.

JOHNNIE

A Story of a City Girl In the Country.

By LEE C. HARBY

Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.

She came from New York, and she had been told that she would die of ennui at the farm. But she did not mind, because she loved the friends who lived there, and, besides, she was weak and ailing and needed the warm, sweet out of doors of the south to help her bear the trial of invalidism and to reconcile her to the use of her abhorred crutches.

In the country around were many farmers native to the soil—honest, democratic, illiterate. Not a man of them but considered himself just as good as any one else in the whole world. They cared little for money, recognized no difference in classes, knew nothing of culture and but little of refinement. They were stalwart and brave and held as an article of faith that all women were to be protected and cared for.

Johnnie was a farmer's son and added to his inborn and inherited traits a certain individual coxcombry of dress, evinced in his corduroy trousers, his short box coat of tan cloth, worn over a full, unstarched white shirt belted in about his trim waist; his gauntleted red tan gloves and a partridge feather stuck through the band of his soft felt hat. This costume he donned when going to "the borough," as they called the little town near by, but when coming to the farm, where he "helped" to cut hay, dig sweet potatoes and do other such things, he wore any old clothes, with neither collar nor tie—indeed, he was often lacking in these essentials of civilization even when clad in his very best.

Johnnie was present when the girl first arrived, and his heart had swelled with pity for the helplessness that was so apparent. She was dainty and fair, and he thought her far more beautiful than any one he had ever seen before. Her friend, with all her womanly attractions, suffered, in his opinion, by the contrast, and this he did not hesitate to express frankly, saying:

"Miss Daisy, you're mighty purty, but you can't hold a candle to that little girl from New York."

It was all a source of constant fun to the home family, but they were careful not to say or do anything that would wound the man by hurting his self love. Instead they treated him according to his own standard, which only made his admiration more apparent and outspoken.

When the girl was taken so ill her admirer was wretched indeed. He could not see her, but every morning he came and interviewed her friends and with bold awkwardness would send a message of hope for her recovery. Generally he brought a bird for her breakfast, saying with his inimitable drawl:

"I come to brung this for the little girl, an' I trus' she is gettin' well."

It was not long before the glorious southern winter brought color to the pale cheeks, rounded their outlines and imparted strength to the weakened frame, for she would sit for hours out in the sunshine, stretched off in a roomy steamer chair. Meanwhile Johnnie passed back and forth attending to his duties or stopped and talked in his long, slow way, trying to find out what other service he might be able to render her. One day he told her in his quaint phraseology:

"I sho' am proud you be gettin' better, for sometimes I thought you was a-dyin', but next time you would look up and laugh—just as happy. I was pitiful in my heart of you."

The girl grew well rapidly, and the family rejoiced. Johnnie was gayly sympathetic and still brought her squirrels and birds so the strength of the game food should build her up. The fields were full of birds, and his capacious pockets served as game bags. Often drawing one from their depths, he would present it to her, saying, with a broad smile:

"I brung you a turckledove," and then laugh aloud with delight when he saw her interest and pleasure.

Johnnie's sister was to be married, and all at the farm were invited. The girl and her friend and the friend's mother went, amused and pleased in anticipation of the novel experience. Johnnie met them, radiant in holiday attire, and presented them duly to his whole family, laying the hospitalities of their home at the feet of the visitors.

Around the girl the admiration of the entire assemblage centered. She eclipsed in interest the attendants, the groom, the bride herself. The father declared her to be "the purtiest girl I ever seed," while the mother, sisters and various women who were present gazed at her in dumb admiration. Not so the little nine-year-old brother—cute, curly haired and unafraid. Accustomed to frankly speak his mind, he planted himself firmly in front of her, his hands upon his hips, and gravely announced:

"You sho'ly is purty—the purtiest lady that's ever been an' come about here."

The girl used her camera and perpetuated the wedding scene, receiving ecstatic thanks from her admirer and all who belonged to him. Indeed, the rough farmhouse well deserved being photographed, for it had been turned, within and without, into a bower of rustic beauty in honor of the occasion. It was wreathed with graceful gray moss and garlanded with evergreens, and the glowing crimson berries of holly and bramble vine mixed with the snowy waxen clusters of the native mistletoe. It evinced taste and an innate sense of the beautiful and artistic quite unlooked for among this class, but the great, wide chimney, with its roaring light wood fire, threw its dancing golden radiance over decorations as beautiful as any bride could desire.

To the girl fresh from a great city and its conventions everything was new, interesting, charming, and Johnnie's sister sang his praises right earnestly:

"Johnnie's always thinkin' after mammy an' me. He's sho'ly a good boy. He never drinks nothin', an' he don't smoke, an' he don't chew none, an' he never goes out nowhere 'less we says we don't want him at home. Johnnie 'll do mos' any kin' of work so it helps 'long mammy an' me, an' I always says that when a boy is good to his own people he'll sho'ly be good to his wife."

The friend heard the conversation, understood and smiled. Johnnie was uncouth and ignorant, but he was sufficiently the lover to endeavor to turn everything to his advantage.

Meanwhile a comfortable residence upon another holding was being erected for the family at the farm, and into this they, with their guest, soon moved. She could walk a little now without her crutches, and Johnnie came and planted trees and shrubbery while she looked on and directed. Every one teased the girl about the countryman's devotion, but she smiled on him kindly and made him happy by her interest in his simple talk, while almost imperceptibly some of his rough edges were smoothed away.

Soon came the spring and the wild flowers and the joyous gathering of luscious berries, and then in the height of all this beauty the girl had to return to her city home. Johnnie grieved. He soon ceased coming to the new farm, and it was not long before his odd ways and his frankly expressed admiration for their erstwhile guest became only an amusing memory.

Three years passed, and the girl in her northern home knew many changes from health to sickness, but at length the Divine Love listened to her prayers and healed her, and in the fullness of her joy and in her pride of new found strength and ability she came again for a little visit to her southern friends.

Johnnie heard of her arrival and beamed with happiness. His heart had remained true to its idol, and he hastened to renew his allegiance. The girl, though, became shy of him now—he seemed too deeply in earnest.

"Little girl," he said, "I sho' am glad in my heart to see you and proud all through to watch you walk so nimble."

She smiled at the phrasing, but felt that it would never do to trifle with a true affection, no matter how lowly the station of the man by whom it was honestly offered. So she drew somewhat aloof in her manner, but he grew only the more devoted. He was her humble slave. He tried to fulfill her wishes before she could utter them. He would walk miles to do her errands or bring her bundles. His constant services spoke more than words, but he often assured her that:

"You be the pleasingest girl that ever come out of New York."

It was difficult for him to realize that she really needed no assistance now. He was ready to lend his strong arms to carry her over every rough place that met her feet, reminding her that:

"The last time I never could permit you to walk there—no, nev-er, nev-er!"

It was very touching sometimes and very amusing always. And the little girl and her friend were full of youth's high spirits, fun and laughter.

So the weeks went by—all too rapidly—and at last the end came.

The day before the departure of the girl Johnnie had labored hard and seemed to find constant movement and work necessary for ease of mind. He had strapped the trunk and locked her valise and in his rough way had done everything of which he could think which might add to her comfort. The girl was very shy when with him and tried to keep her friend ever present, feeling that some confession of affection impended and being very sorry and pitiful for the pain she might be obliged to inflict. At last by some inadvertent chance they were left alone together.

Johnnie stopped in drawing the case over her umbrella and, looking at her, asked earnestly:

"Does your heart hurt you about going, little girl?"

"I am sorry to leave my friends, Johnnie."

"Are you sho' to come back again?"

"Yes, I hope so. I will surely come some time."

He thought a moment. Silently, "Will it be next year, little girl?"

"I cannot tell. It is possible. I shall try."

Johnnie rested his hands on the top of the rolled umbrella and said slowly:

"When you come back, little girl, I will be ready. An' will you marry me?" And he leaned forward eagerly in his pleading.

The girl gave a little cry of dismay, shook her head and clasped her hands, pleading gently:

"Oh, Johnnie, don't! Don't look that way! I can't, you know; indeed I cannot, and I do hate to hurt you so!" And the brown eyes filled with tears.

The nature of the man showed itself equal to the occasion, hurt as he was, and his face was a-quiver with feeling. He thought only of her, and with that innate chivalry which will always try to spare a woman pain he said:

"Never mind, little girl; never mind. I can bear it, but if I die tonight or if I live a thousand years I always will love you, little girl."

VARIES IN QUANTITY.

A Cord of Wood Is a Rather Uncertain Proposition.

ODD FACTS ABOUT ITS BULK.

There Are Many Different Conditions That Affect the Measurement of the Pile—The Interesting Result of an Experimental Test.

When is a cord not a cord?

To the farmer harvesting his small wood lot and to the man laying in logs for the large fireplace of his country or seaside home, to the paper manufacturer buying pulp wood and to the proprietor of the ordinary city wood yard, to all of these men this question has an important financial meaning.

Queer to say and contrary to the belief of most people, there are many times when a cord is less than a cord and many conditions when it is more. School arithmetics say that a cord of wood is 128 cubic feet, or the contents of a pile eight feet long, four feet high and four feet wide. Wood is marketed on this basis. A pile whose length, breadth and height multiplied together gives this number of cubic feet fills this requirement, no matter whether the sticks are long or short, straight or crooked, round or split, unless there is an understanding to the contrary. Nevertheless, a cord, though it comes up to legal measurements, is an uncertain quantity, even when the seller is honest and the buyer satisfied.

A lumberman may have a tract of pulp wood which he sells to a paper mill at $5 a cord for as many cords as it will make. It is in the contract that he shall cut and stack it. He cuts it in twelve foot lengths, and when the job is complete it measures 200 cords, and he receives $1,000 for it. Would he have made or lost by cutting four foot lengths instead of twelve?

He would have lost in the first place from the additional labor required to cut four foot wood, but his principal loss would have resulted from a greatly diminished number of cubic feet, due to the fact that short sticks lie closer together than large.

Measurements and experimental tests have been made to ascertain exactly how much actual wood is in cords of different lengths, sizes, shapes and species.

Had the 200 cords of twelve foot wood been cut in four foot lengths there would have been only 176 cords, and the owner would have received for it $880 instead of $1,000. It was, therefore, clearly to his advantage to cut twelve foot lengths, but it would have been to the buyer's advantage to have it cut in four foot lengths. He would have received the same actual quantity of wood for $120 less.

It also makes considerable difference to the seller whether wood is chopped or sawed. If chopped, the chips are lost. Where the logs are large this loss amounts to no small total. In a cord of four foot wood, with sticks six inches in diameter, the chip loss is from 6 to 8 per cent, and, of course, the shorter the sticks are cut the greater the loss. If the wood is sawed the sawdust loss is scarcely the half of 1 per cent.

The difference due to spaces between the sticks, of course, depends very much on the shape and size of the sticks. Straight, smooth sticks lie close together, and a cord contains more wood and less air. For given lengths sticks of soft woods are usually straighter and smoother and when stacked lie closer together. But whatever the kind, cords of long sticks are pretty sure to contain more empty space than cords made of short pieces. Likewise cords of split wood contain less than cords of round sticks. The finer the wood is split the more it makes; hence wood dealers are often willing to sell kindlings, all sawed and split, for the same price per cord as unsplit wood. They get back the cost of labor in the increased bulk.

A cord (128 cubic feet) of four foot hardwood usually contains about eighty-three cubic feet of solid wood, a cord of three foot wood averages eighty-three and one-half feet, of two foot wood eighty-four feet and of one foot wood eighty-five feet. The conifers, soft woods, contain ninety to ninety-six cubic feet. Thus the purchaser receives on an average about two-thirds of a cord of real wood and one-third of a cord of spaces.

In some countries wood is bought by weight, and the buyer comes more nearly getting what he bargains for, but even then he may miss it if he receives green wood when he wants dry. According to timber testing engineers of the United States forest service, wood may lose half or more its green weight in seasoning. Cedar for lead pencils is bought by weight in this country. The pieces are so small and of such irregular size that they cannot conveniently be stacked and measured as cordwood.

The bulk of nearly all woods decreases as seasoning goes on. A hundred cords green will make from eighty-nine to ninety-three cords when dry. This is a factor of no small importance to dealers who handle large quantities.

Wood lot owners and farmers who have small forest tracts from which they expect to sell cord wood are no less interested than contractors who buy and sell large quantities. It will stand them in hand to know how much difference it makes whether wood is cut long or short, chopped or sawed, whether the sticks are round or split, whether large or small and whether the measurements are to be made while the wood is green or after it is seasoned.

When Valor Balks.

A couple of Kansas men were talking of fearlessness the other day. "All this talk," said one of them, "reminds me of a peace officer I knew a number of years ago in western Kansas. This officer was entirely fearless—in fact, the kind of chap who would have charged hades with a single bucket of water. To look down into the barrel of a gun in the other fellow's hand was as placidly accepted an affair for him as to light his pipe. He was sent for one day.

"'What's the matter?' he asked.

"'Cowboy in that room,' said a citizen, designating the place. 'He's wild and dangerous. He's locked himself in, and we're afraid he'll break out and do us harm.'

"So this officer opened the door of the room and looked in. The cowboy had a six shooter in one hand and a stick of dynamite in the other and calmly remarked that he would turn them both loose in case the officer came into the room. The officer considered the thing for a minute. Then he backed away and as he did so remarked:

"'Let him sleep it off. They is times when a man who ain't afraid is a blind fool.'"—Kansas City Journal.

Too Attentive.

"People who write begging letters are entirely too persistent," said a charity official. "They remind me of a summer resort episode. A young man went there for his two weeks' vacation. He put up at a cottage. He paid about $9 a week. Well, when he came to depart this young man said to the boarding mistress:

"'Madam, you have been most attentive to me during my stay here.'

"'Thank you, sir; thank you very much,' said the lady.

"'Yes,' continued the young man, 'you have been most attentive, and not only you, but everybody—everybody in the house, if I may say so—has been most perseverigly attentive to me day and night, and, madam, to show my appreciation I am going to offer you a small present.'

"'How very kind!' said the landlady, and a bright, expectant smile lit up her face. Then the young man thrust into her extended hand a packet of insect powder and retired hastily."

Puzzling Orchid Imitations.

Orchid imitations are a puzzle to flower scholars. The whole appearance of the flower is suggestive of some insect, sometimes to quite a remarkable degree. It does not seem easy to find any real purpose that could be served by this resemblance, yet no one imagines that it can be accidental. Any one who knew of the bee orchid, a native of Europe, and came upon it for the first time would at once recognize it. It seems to be a large, velvety brown backed bee variegated with yellow. The two petals might serve well for the wings of the insect. In the center of the lip of the fly orchid there is a small bluish spot like the body of a fly. The two lateral petals are slender and curiously like the antennae of an insect. The whole illusion is complete and suggests to the casual glance that a few flies are hanging on the stem of some plant which has cast its flowers.—Chicago Tribune.

Why She Posed.

As a New York photographer bowed a sallow, tottering woman of middle age out of his studio he closed the door gently and turned to a waiting customer.

"That beats the Dutch," said he. "There's a woman who has been in bed two weeks and whose doctor supposes she is there at this moment. She is convinced that she is near death, and as she hasn't had any picture of herself taken since she was a child she got out of bed despite a friend's protest, dressed and came here to sit to me in order that she may leave a photograph to her husband, who is a traveling man and now in the far west.

"When a woman will she will. But that's a queer gamble with the big shadow, all right."—New York Globe.

Ours and Theirs.

"A play on names unconsciously perpetrated by my youngest son was very funny," said a Flatbush man yesterday. "We live next door to a family named Feitenour, and the other night while my family was busy reading in the library we heard a racket on the back porch. My son went out to investigate, and on his return my wife, always inquisitive, asked what had caused the noise.

"'Nothin' but a couple of cats,' Jim told her, and then I heard her ask, 'Did you see whose they were?'

"'Yes; one was ours and the other was Feitenour's.'"—New York Press.

Knew What Was Wanted.

Miserly—So that woman doctor charged you $2 a visit. Well, what did she say? His Wife—Said I stayed indoors too much. Here's her prescription. Miserly (reading it)—"For external use only. One nice walking dress; one new hat; one pair of gloves to match. Apply every afternoon between 3 and 5."—Boston Transcript.

THE VIRGINIA, SIXTH VESSEL TO BEAR THE NAME.

The battleship Virginia, launched at Newport News April 28, 1904, is 435 feet in length and has a displacement of 15,320 tons. There have been six Virginias in commission, the first a ship of twenty-eight guns built in 1776 and captured two years later by a British vessel in Chesapeake bay. Two of these Virginias were in the Confederate navy. The third Virginia was in her prime at the breaking out of the civil war, and her name was changed to Vermont. One of the Confederate Virginias was the Merrimac converted into an ironclad and rechristened. The other was an ironclad built at Richmond.

SAVING TIME by TELEPHONE

THE OTHER NIGHT a man rushed into the North Station just in time to see the last car of the Montreal flier disappear over the drawbridge.

"I must be in Montreal tomorrow morning. What can I do?" he asked.

"Telephone," was the reply.

He did; and saved himself thousands of dollars. His voice was there when the meeting was called and that was all that was necessary.

Again the axiom:

TIME IS MONEY.

And to save time: USE THE TELEPHONE.

BROWNSVILLE CASE UP AGAIN

Court of Inquiry Said to Have Obtained New Evidence

SHOOTERS BEHIND BARRACKS

Discoveries Made by Certain Members of Military Court Said to Be Susceptible of Entire Proof—Demand For Abolition of Negro Troops, Provided For by Law, May Be Made by Southern Delegations In Congress

Washington, Dec. 10.—Conclusive evidence is said to have been obtained by the military court of inquiry into the "shooting up" of Brownsville, Tex., that members of the Twenty-Fifth infantry, colored, who were within the fort, fired on the town at the time their companions were racing through the streets of the Texas town, shooting right and left. This evidence, it is reported, is considered conclusive.

None of the court of inquiry would discuss the matter, but it is hinted that a demand for the abolition of negro troops, who are provided for by law, will be made by the southern delegations in congress. Thus a renewal of the bitter debate which marked the final days of the Roosevelt administration is threatened.

The evidence discovered by the officers who compose the court is said to be susceptible of entire proof. Certain members, it is reported, made personal examination of buildings across the road from the fort in Brownsville. They discovered bullet holes in the sides of three houses. Continuing their investigations, they discovered the bullets, which were of the regulation army pattern.

Following back the line of fire, as shown by the track of the bullets, the marksmen, they found, could have been nowhere else than within the barracks.

The congressional defenders of the negro infantrymen maintained that the only firing in the town was done by men of the Twenty-Fifth who had broken parole, and that former President Roosevelt, in discharging two companies without individual military trial, worked severe injustice on both the companies and the regiment.

It is understood that the court, which is now here and has practically concluded its examination of the evidence it had obtained, will permit such discharged members of the regiment as care to appear before it and testify. The hearings will be held here.

BOARDING SCHOOL BURNED

Young Women Have to Depend Upon Hospitality of Townsfolk

West Harwich, Mass., Dec. 10.—Forty young women, pupils at the Sea Pines boarding school here, were forced to forsake the pleasures of a birthday party for a temporarily cold and shelterless place of safety out of doors, retreating from a fire which destroyed the school and outbuildings last night.

No one of the girls, none of whom is over her teens, was hurt. Rev. Thomas Bickford, master of the school, secured shelter for them in the homes of the townsfolk.

The loss will be about $25,000, including that on the personal belongings of the pupils. The school building was of recent erection.

NICARAGUA IS WORRYING

Zelaya Said to Have Decided to Give Up the Presidency

Managua, Dec. 10.—It is authoritatively stated here that Zelaya will surrender the presidency within three weeks. The intentions of the United States are giving the Nicaraguan government considerable anxiety and the administration is puzzled as to what to do because of the uncertainty of the American government's next move.

There are no military preparations discernable here and at Corinto all is quiet. The captain of the U. S. gunboat Vicksburg, which is now at Corinto, has received no instructions from Washington.

Five Perish In Lake Wreck

Buffalo, Dec. 10.—The big freighter W. C. Richardson of Cleveland, bound from Duluth to Buffalo, with a cargo of flaxseed, foundered when she was within half a mile of the harbor entrance. Five of the crew perished. The remainder, numbering fourteen, were rescued by the crew of the propeller William A. Paine.

A $500,000 Estate For Yale

New Haven, Dec. 10.—By the will of the late Charles H. Farnum, Jr., an estate estimated at about $500,000 is left to Yale university to be used for buildings for the Sheffield Scientific school. The widow will have life use of the property and on her death the university will get it absolutely.

Record Flight In Bi-Plane

Paris, Dec. 10.—Maurice Farman made what is claimed to be a cross-country flight in a straight line of record length. Ascending at a suburb of Versailles in a bi-plane of his own construction, Farman flew to Chartres, a distance of forty-four miles, in fifty-three minutes.

CULBERSON'S SUCCESSOR

Washington, Dec. 10.—In caucus the Democratic senators elected Senator Hernando De Soto Money of Mississippi as minority leader of the senate to succeed Senator Culberson of Texas, whose resignation was presented yesterday.

SENATOR MONEY

As Money's term will expire March 3, 1911, and John S. Williams has been elected to succeed him, the election of Money can have no broad significance as to the future policy of the Democratic party. Money is one of the last of the "Democrats of the old school," like Daniel of Virginia.

VESSEL AND CARGO GO TO THE BOTTOM

Dozen Seamen on the Johanna Are Probably Drowned

New York, Dec. 10.—The British ship Johanna, loaded with a $250,000 cargo of sugar from Iloilo, Philippine islands, for Philadelphia, and carrying a crew of twenty-five men, half of whom may have perished, sank at sea off Santo Domingo, according to a cable message received here from that island by the agents.

The message came from Captain Nickerson of the Johanna, who only announced that he had saved himself after his ship had foundered and that his starboard watch was safe.

When the captain's meagre message was received in cipher it was interpreted to mean that there was no doubt of the safety of at least half of the crew.

The Johanna was built in 1891 and her tonnage was 1756. The vessel was 238 feet long and 22 feet deep, and her beam measurement was 37 feet.

Many People Are Found to Be Wrongfully Using Red Cross Stamps

Washington, Dec. 10.—Thousands of letters bearing Red Cross stamps are being sent to the dead letter office or held for postage.

Notwithstanding the plain instructions issued in connection with the sale of the Red Cross stamps, great numbers of letters are being mailed bearing these stamps in lieu of regular postage.

Red Cross stamps are not postage stamps and letters, or other mailable matter bearing these stamps alone, must be treated as unpaid matter. The addressee is notified to remit postage, and if it is not received the letter or other matter is sent to the dead letter office.

GREAT STRIKE NOT DESIRED

Railroad Employes Want Peaceful Adjustment of Affairs

MOVEMENT FOR HIGHER PAY

It Covers a Vast Number of Details and Was Intended to Have Been Kept Secret—Representatives of Big Labor Organizations Find Plans Upset by Premature Publication of Details—Railroads In Difficult Position

New York, Dec. 10.—It will not be at all surprising if the topic of major importance to the railroad world during the coming winter will be that of wage adjustments with the several classes of railway employes.

Although the engineers have not been heard from as yet, the plan of the conductors', firemen's and trainmen's organizations to make definite demands with the New Year serves to indicate that the movement for higher wages is widespread enough to include all classes of operatives before it is through.

The conferences that are now being held here every few days among the higher officers of the trunk line roads show the recognition that is given to the gravity of the situation by the railroads themselves, and on top of this, news is received from time to time of the granting of increases to certain classes of employes by some of the roads.

The representatives of the Order of Railway Conductors and of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen hereabouts are considerably perturbed over the premature publication of the substance of the demands which those two organizations are planning to submit on Jan. 3 to thirty-two railroads in the territory covered by the Eastern association of operatives' organizations.

It had been intended to keep the nature of the demands entirely secret while the various locals were engaged in voting on their terms, so that they should come upon the managers of the roads with additional force because of their comprehensiveness. The demands relate to both wage schedules and conditions of service and cover a vast number of details, as to basis of payment, length of working day and the like, which would require an explanatory chart in order to be intelligible to the average individual.

From the complicated nature of the demands a good many observers gather that the conductors and trainmen want to get started a prolonged arbitration with the managers of the roads, so that one condition may be offset against another and in the end, by a purely trading process, a wage increase be gained that the railroads would not be likely to grant if it were broached as an offhand proposition.

Certainly no one could expect the roads or the operatives to come to an open break such as precedes a strike with a program of this kind before them, at least until weeks and possibly months had been spent in threshing out the conditions actually presented by the demands of the men. Hence the impression is strong that a general strike is not desired by the men, else the demands would have been brief, simple and readily understandable to the public as well as the railroads.

It is, of course, especially needful to have the pending questions settled by arbitration where the territory is so vast and so important from a business standpoint as the eastern district of the conductors' and trainmen's associations. This territory takes in everything east of Chicago and north of the line of the Chesapeake and Ohio road, thus including all of New England, with its myriad industries dependent upon railroad accommodations, and the great industrial states of New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan and Indiana.

One can with difficulty picture the extent of the business disturbance that would follow any important general strike on the railroads in this territory and the hardship to those who depend upon its industries for their livelihood. The mere matter of railroad men being out of work would appear insignificant beside the unemployment of industrial workers following any tie-up on all the roads where the Order of Railway Conductors and the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen maintain their organization.

The later news that the Brotherhood of Railway Firemen and Enginemen is also in process of submitting similar demands for wage increases, serves to emphasize the importance of the situation to the railroads. The demands of the firemen, so far as the layman can judge of them, are not quite so drastic as those of the conductors and trainmen, but they, in themselves, will give the railroad managers plenty to think about, for many of the conditions, notably those affecting hours of work and terms of employment will, if acceded to, involve a substantial recasting of present operating regulations.

Blackburn Leaves Canal Board

Washington, Dec. 10.—Former Senator J. C. S. Blackburn has resigned as a member of the Isthmian canal commission and his resignation has been accepted by President Taft.

ARMY RIDING TEST

Surgeon General Torney Does Not Agree With the Roosevelt Idea

Washington, Dec. 10.—Making a direct hit at the annual Roosevelt physical tests for army officers, Surgeon General Torney says in his annual report that it is believed that the present test not only fails in the object sought—"a physical condition which would enable them to be always fit for active field service"—but may result in serious injury to elderly officers. The defect of the requirement, as it appears to Torney, is that it requires officers to be fit only once a year. He wants them to be fit all the time.

General Torney would induce field officers to ride regularly by having the government provide mounts and orderlies for them, wherever stationed. He deems it unjust to require officers not with troops to take regular rides during the year. He advocates that the test ride be not required of those serving in the tropics or those who have reached the age of 62 years.

ALLEGED MILK TRUST

Probe Begun to Decide If Monopoly Exists In New York

New York, Dec. 10.—Another so-called trust inquiry was begun in New York by William Grant, designated by the attorney general of this state to decide whether a monopoly exists which controls the price of milk in the greater city.

With the opening of the investigation the petition of the attorney general became public, giving the names of the firms alleged to be in the combine.

Collectively, they are the Consolidated Milk exchange and individually the Borden's Condensed Milk company, the Sheffield Farms-Stawson-Decker company and the Mutual Milk and Cream company.

EARLY'S TROUBLES NOT YET ENDED

"Leper" Finds It Hard to Get Out of Washington

Washington, Dec. 10.—Obstacles seem to pile up ahead of John R. Early, "the leper," as fast as his counsel can break them down. Early expected to leave Washington yesterday a free man to go to the Rockefeller Institute of Medical Research in New York for examination.

This arrangement was made by his counsel with the health authorities and Surgeon General Wyman of the public health and marine hospital service issued a permit for Early's transportation to New York. But a new obstruction bobbed up in the rates for Early's transportation.

The Pennsylvania road decided to furnish a baggage car to Early for $113. This, the railroad claims, is the regular rate for a special car, and the law prohibits Early's transportation in any other.

Early yesterday drew all his back pension, $196.80, which is all the money he has, and he doesn't want to pay nearly all of it to get to New York. Early is still quarantined.

MacVeagh Finds No Sugar Frauds In Boston Custom House

Boston, Dec. 10.—Secretary of the Treasury MacVeagh called on Collector of Customs Lyman yesterday and gladdened his heart by declaring:

"Boston is not in the same class with New York by any means. Your city is in a much better condition in respect to her customs. This port has not been connected in any way with the sugar frauds yet. So far the frauds do not appear to have reached here."

He left a good word for Surveyor McCarthy to hear: "No removals in the surveyor's office were under consideration."

Cut of Million Dollars' Worth Is Recommended by Admiral Cowles

Washington, Dec. 10.—A million-dollar cut in the appropriations for supply of coal for the navy department was recommended to the house naval affairs committee by Admiral Cowles, chief of the bureau of equipment of the navy.

This means a corresponding curtailment of the activity of the vessels in pursuance of the general policy of reducing all government expenditures to a minimum.

Danes Inclined to Think There Is No Truth In Them

REGARDED WITH SUSPICION

Come Just as Experts of University of Copenhagen Are About to Examine Polar Records of Brooklyn Explorer—His Friends See Effort of Supporters of Peary to Forestall Victorious Verdict From Scientists

Copenhagen, Dec. 10.—Dr. Torp, rector of the University of Copenhagen, said last night that the charges published in the New York Times against Dr. Frederick A. Cook are based on pure fiction. Nevertheless, he added, he would accept the offer to examine the documents prepared by Messrs. Loose and Dunkle which The Times has agreed to send to Copenhagen.

Other scientists here are inclined to regard the New York charges with suspicion, especially as the charges are made immediately before the university experts are about to begin examination of Cook's records.

Some scientists do not hesitate to say that Cook's accusers are fakirs. They lay emphasis on the warning of Cook's friends that every effort was being made by Cook's enemies to read his records in order to dispute them before the Copenhagen experts might see them. They point out that the charges were made at the moment when prejudice or suspicion instilled in the minds of the university judges might do Cook the greatest injury.

Friends of Cook who are the most outspoken go even so far as to charge that the New York statements are a desperate last effort on the part of Commander Peary's supporters to forestall a victorious verdict for Cook from the Danish scientists.

Dr. Carl Burrau, the noted astronomer, says the Loose-Dunkle statements are so improbable that they strengthen confidence in Cook. In an interview Burrau said:

"Passages in the story telegraphed here give me the impression that the matter is thoroughly untrustworthy. It will, however, be easy for the university to determine the truth or otherwise of the charges."

Walter Lonsdale, secretary to Cook, who brought the explorer's records to Copenhagen, also declared that the accusations published in New York and London against Cook were totally unfounded. He said that the papers delivered to the University of Copenhagen contained the original observations made by Cook during the expedition, without alterations.

Mr. Lonsdale said further that the explorer's report was founded on these, and dictated by Cook to him, no other person having anything to do with it. Loose and Dunkle, Lonsdale added, were guests at the Waldorf-Astoria during Cook's stay there, but the explorer's acquaintance with them was slight.

Commodore Novgaard, the explorer, and Professor Olufsen, secretary of the Danish Geographical society, also discredit the accusations against Cook.

The National Tidende in an editorial says: "It is natural that calumnies should increase when Dr. Cook's papers are on the eve of examination, the object of his accusers being to influence the committee."

ASSASSINATION OF ITO

Moving Picture Will Figure In Trial of Japanese Diplomat's Slayer

Victoria, B. C., Dec. 10.—A moving picture of the assassination of Prince Ito at Harbin is to be used in the trial of the Corean assassin, according to advices brought by the steamer Kaga Maru.

A Russian photographer had prepared to make moving pictures of the meeting of Prince Ito and Minister Kokovistoff and caught the assassination scene on his films.

Japanese officials obtained a film 500 feet long, showing every detail of the tragedy. This will be exhibited at the trial.

Has a Million Dollar Cargo

Boston, Dec. 10.—The German turret steamer Katterturm arrived here from Calcutta and Colombo. In one section of the vessel's hold 10,120 chests of tea were stowed. This shipment alone is worth $400,000. Other consignments were jute, myrobolams, goatskins and other merchandise, valued in all at nearly $1,000,000.

Both Sides Claim Gains

St. Paul, Dec. 10.—The switchmen's strike in the twin cities is practically at a standstill. The strikers still insist that they have the traffic of the railroads tied up, while the railroad officials are equally earnest in declaring they are gaining on the strikers every day.

Herring Find New Grounds

St. John's, Dec. 10.—The herring at Bay of Islands have migrated 300 miles to St. Mary's, Placentia and Fortune bays, and a complete failure of the fishery at Bay of Islands for the next ten or even twenty years is predicted.

RUSSIA MAY WITHDRAW

Not Concerned In Administration of Affairs In Manchuria

St. Petersburg, Dec. 10.—The detailed protest of China against the Russian memorandum, sent to the powers in October, has been received here and shows that the Chinese government declares specifically that the administration of affairs at Harbin and other points in Manchuria does not concern Russia.

The protest also calls attention to the fact that the agreement of 1896 between China and the Russo-Chinese bank creating the Chinese Eastern railway, as well as the Harbin agreement of last May, yielded no administrative rights to Russia. On the contrary, the contract of 1896 intrusted the defense of the railroad to China.

It is thought that the protest may be a preliminary to a demand by China for the withdrawal of the Russian railroad guards in Manchuria. M. Kokovsoff, the Russian minister of finance, has long urged such a withdrawal which would save the government $5,000,000 annually, but the war and foreign office have objected.

RUIZ IS REARRESTED

To Be Extradited Because of Participation In Mexican Revolution

San Antonio, Tex., Dec. 10.—Inez Ruiz, the Mexican revolutionist who was recently discharged here after a hearing before Commissioner Scott for want of sufficient evidence to support a charge of inciting a revolution in Mexico, was rearrested at the instance, it is said, of Attorney General Wickersham, pending extradition.

It is alleged that Ruiz participated in the Garza revolution twelve years ago. At that time he was captured, but escaped into this country.

BANK EXAMINER TRUE TO HIS TRUST

Sends a Banker to Prison and Marries His Niece

Pittsburg, Dec. 10.—The marriage of Margaret M. Reinhart of Waynesburg to John H. Strawn, formerly receiver for the Farmers and Drovers' National bank of Waynesburg, is announced.

Miss Reinhart is a niece of J. F. Rinehart, convicted cashier of the wrecked bank, who is now doing fifteen years in Riverside penitentiary for wrecking the bank to the tune of almost $2,000,000.

The fact that the names are not spelled alike is explained by the fact that the forefathers of each disagreed as to the spelling.

The young woman who is now Mrs. Strawn, together with other relatives, did all in their power to clear the bank cashier, but it was the testimony of Strawn which sent Rinehart to his sentence.

In Waynesburg they are now telling how the little girl relative of the bank cashier learned to love the big receiver, who, though admiring her, would not swerve from his duty and went on the stand and told the tale which sent the cashier to Riverside.

PURSUIT WILL CONTINUE

Government Wants to Get "Man Higher Up" In the Sugar Frauds

New York, Dec. 10.—Pursuit of the man higher up in the short-weight frauds for which six employes of the American Sugar Refining company are now on trial will not end when the government's case goes to the jury, but will be continued, it is said, before the December term of the federal grand jury.

Evidence in the present trial has not brought out as yet the responsibility of any of the executive heads of the company, and other tactics will be tried.

POSED AS ARCHDUKE

Jewelry Thief Admits That Accusations Against Him Are True

Paris, Dec. 10.—The trial of Gubata and his wife, who were arrested for fraud after they had obtained jewelry under the names of Count and Countess Gubata, opened yesterday, but was put over a week.

Gubata admitted the accusations against him, and said that he deliberately prepared documents to help him pose as an Austrian archduke. The woman insisted upon her innocence.

French Archbishop Sued

Paris, Dec. 10.—The judge of the civil court has cited Mgr. Amiette, archbishop of Paris, to appear before him to answer suits brought by the authors of text-books which have been interdicted by the church. Each of the plaintiffs asks $2000 damages.

$1,000,000 Hotel Fire

Kalamazoo, Mich., Dec. 10.—One man was burned to death and property worth $1,000,000 was destroyed when the Burdick hotel building burned. Few of the 200 guests of the hotel escaped without risking their lives and nearly all lost their possessions.

King of Norway In England

London, Dec. 10.—King Haakon of Norway arrived at Buckingham palace last evening. He will accompany Queen Maud and the crown prince back to Norway. They expect to leave England on Dec. 16.

CHAPTER XIII.
THE MASTER DIVER.

PHILIP had hastened to the scene of the accident. As they steamed along on the tug one of the men explained what had happened. A barge loaded with copper ore had been run into by a ferryboat early that morning and sunk in fifty feet of water off Eighteenth street.

Atkinson had gone down to put chains under the barge so they could get her up. Four times he had signaled them to lift, and four times they had tried and failed. He had been down over three hours!

Philip shuddered. "In fifty feet of water!" He knew that two hours at such a depth was a full day's work for the strongest diver with the brain throbbing under an air pressure of many tons.

"Come," he cried as they drew up to an ugly wrecking scow anchored in midstream—"come, get the suit on me quick!" Three of the crew worked swiftly and silently dressing him, for no diver can dress himself.

"Go into the cabin and fetch me my knife," Philip said to one of the men.

Slowly he lifted his heavy feet over the side and, standing on the ladder bent forward on the deck, face down, as a man would lay his neck on the block. The helpers made fast around his waist the hundred pound belt of lead that would presently sink him to the bottom, and under his arms they fixed the life line noose. Then they brought the copper helmet with its three goggle eyes and screwed it fast to the collar, leaving the face glass out for a last word.

"Here's your knife," said the helper, holding out a leathern sheath to Philip.

"Look sharp now," he ordered. "And when you get the signal to lift, lift fast. Ready!"

As he spoke two men began turning at a wheezing air pump, while a third screwed on the face glass which cuts off a diver from the outer world.

with LOCAL APPLICATIONS, as they cannot reach the seat of the disease. Catarrh is a blood or constitutional disease, and in order to cure it you must take internal remedies. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, and acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces. Hall's Catarrh Cure is not a quack medicine. It was prescribed by one of the best physicians in this country for years and is a regular prescription. It is composed of the best tonics known, combined with the best blood purifiers, acting directly on the mucous surfaces. The perfect combination of the two ingredients is what produces such wonderful results in curing Catarrh. Send for testimonials free.

He sank with a roar in his ears, sank with his total weight of nearly 400 pounds, and presently landed safe on the deck of the sunken barge. He groped along the deck, searching for the hole in the barge's side.

Ah, here it was! No wonder she sank quickly! Side and deck ripped open to her middle. He made out a line of silver bubbles yonder, steadily ascending. Atkinson must be there, down on the bottom.

Philip lowered himself over the side and sank until his iron feet touched the river bed. Then carefully he made his way toward Atkinson and in a moment saw what had happened. There was much soft mud in the river here, and the barge, heavily laden, had sunk deep in it. A risky job of tunneling, this—a very risky job!

Ah, there was Atkinson now, half sitting, half lying, against a mud bank! But he did not move! Stepping forward, Philip took the hand in encouraging grasp as if to say, "Old comrade, I'm here!" A faint pressure was returned, but Atkinson lay quite still.

Atkinson's life line ran up free, but his hose, the precious way of air and life, was caught under a shattered timber of the barge, which must have lurched over suddenly as Atkinson tunneled under it. And in turning it had caught the rubber pipe before the old diver could escape, and now the end of the timber, hooked over the hose, was imbedded in the mud and the hose was held in a massive V that pressed down upon it with the whole weight of the barge and its load. He felt Atkinson's hand drawing him closer, and, bending over, he heard this message tapped on his copper helmet in the Morse alphabet: "Wife—children—love."

Heavens! The man was dying!

He forced back the tight rubber wristbands and felt for the pulse. There was a feeble fluttering, a spark of life, still.

What could he do? Surely he must save this man!

Then in a flash he recalled the theory that if a diver in trouble like this were to cut his hose and instantly press his thumb over the opening he might live on the air inside his suit until they could lift him to the surface with the life line and get his helmet off.

He remembered hearing the question argued and doubt expressed whether a diver would be able to cut his own hose, for the diver himself might have trouble in getting at it. But this case was different. He could get at Atkinson's hose well enough.

The master diver drew his knife and, bracing himself firmly with Atkinson's hose held tight between his knees, made ready to cut.

But wait! Where were the life lines? He must be quick with the signals to lift after the thing was done! Ah! There they were swaying beside him, two good ropes reaching up through the yellow water, his own and Atkinson's. Three quick jerks on each, and the boys overhead would do the rest.

As Philip gripped his knife again a feeling of revulsion overcame him. After all, he could not do this thing. That hose was a living thing, life and breath to his comrade. To cut it was to bring Atkinson instantly face to face with horrible death. And perhaps there was some other way.

Perhaps if he waited— Then there came to him the ghastly faces of divers he had seen taken from the suits when there had been too much waiting, of divers who had perished miserably in some such plight as this. No; he must act and not delay. He must take the responsibility as a father takes it sometimes at the bedside of a sick child. This was the right thing, the only thing, and—

With a strong, quick stroke he severed the hose. Then instantly he stopped the hole with his left thumb and gave three quick pulls on the life lines, and the next second the two divers were rising to the surface.

And all might have gone well had not the men who were lifting Philip pulled faster than the other two, so that presently he found himself rising above Atkinson.

Philip seized Atkinson's life line with his right hand and clung to it desperately, while with his left he held the hose. He could just reach down to it and no more. And presently, as the men above worked in madder haste, he felt Atkinson's life line sagging above him and knew by the sudden strain that he was holding the man's entire weight, suit and all, with his unaided right hand.

He could not help with his left hand because he dared not move it from the hose. He could not signal the men even if they would have understood him, for both hands were occupied. And with all the love in the world he could not support this load many seconds. It was beyond his strength—beyond the strength of any man.

Now they must be halfway up. He would hold on a little longer, and then—and then came a great roaring in his ears and blackness in his eyes, and the hose was torn from his nerveless hand. He had failed in his effort. Atkinson must die, and in the agony of this thought he lost consciousness.

* * * * * * * *

The next thing Philip knew he was lying on one of the bunks of the wrecking scow and the company's doctor was bending over him. He opened his eyes weakly.

It all came back to Philip, and he started up in alarm.

"Where's Atkinson?" he cried.

"Here I am, Phil," answered a cheery voice from the bunk opposite, and, looking over, he saw the rugged face of his saved comrade.

"Ah!" sighed the young man and sank back in contentment.

NO MORE GRAY HAIR.

It is easier to preserve the color of the hair than to restore it, although it is possible to do both. Our grandmothers understood the secret. They made and used a "sage tea," and their dark, glossy hair long after middle life was due to this fact. Our mothers have gray hair before they are fifty, but they are beginning to appreciate the wisdom of our grandmothers in using "sage tea" for their hair, and are fast following suit. The present generation has the advantage of the past in that it can get a ready to use preparation called Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur. As a scalp tonic and color restorer, this preparation is vastly superior to the ordinary "sage tea" made by our grandmothers, and it can be bought for 50 cents and $1 a bottle at almost any first-class drug store, or will be sent direct by the Wyeth Chemical Company, 74 Cortlandt St., New York City, upon receipt of price.

BASKET BALL AT MILTON

High School Five Defeat Hyde Park High.

Milton High opened its basket ball season on Tuesday at Cunningham gymnasium in fine style by applying the brush to Hyde Park High so that the final score read 19 to 12 in Miltionally strong game in the pivot ton's favor. Carson played an exceposition, and H. Stuart did his share at right forward. The passing and shooting of the Milton team was of the highest order. Their weak point came in blocking. For the losers, Mulhearn and Sanger excelled.

The Milton team includes H. and W. Stuart, Sangster or Carson, Reid and O'Connell.

Manager Thomas C. O'Hare has arranged the following schedule:

Dec. 14—Reading at Milton.
Dec. 21—Rockland at Milton.
Dec. 28—Bridgewater Normal at Milton.
Jan. 1—Canton at Canton.
Jan. 4—Boston College at Boston.
Jan. 8—Rockland at Rockland.
Jan. 14—Quincy at Quincy.
Jan. 18—Canton at Canton.
Jan. 28—Boston College at Milton.
Jan. 31—Reading at Reading.
Feb. 8—University Prep. School at Milton.
Feb. 18—Winthrop at Winthrop.
Feb. 26—Bridegwater Norma l at Bridgewater.
March 1—Quincy at Milton.
March 5—Allen school at West Newton.
March 8—Winthrop at Milton.

All of the games at Milton will be played in the Cunningham gymnasium at 3 in the afternoon.

MAKARIA SPORTS.

At a recent meeting of the Makaria class of Bethany church plans for the coming winter were made. Four bowling teams have been organized with the following captains:—T. King, Nicol, Eggleston and Penley and they will bowl matches for the championship of the class during the coming winter. A hockey team under the leadership of Jimmy Michael will begin business as soon as there is ice on which to play.

Plans were begun for a field day to be held next spring for the members of the class. It is planned to run the first ball game of the season part of the day and devote the balance of the time to field events. This is something never before attempted by the class but they have some good men showings. This field day will be in charge of Charles Ganzel and C. W. and should make some interesting Gifford of the Y. M. C. A.

Y. M. C. A. BASKET BALL.

The Y. M. C. A. gym will be the scene of two hot basket ball games Saturday night when the first team will line up against the Brockton Independents, and the second team will have as opponents the Fore River Apprentices. The games begin at 8 o'clock.

TRACK MEET.

A meeting of the candidates for the track meet was held at the Y. M. C. A. building Thursday evening. Perley Griffin was elected captain and R. A. Stearns manager of the team. A closed indoor meet has been planned to take place soon.

KENNEL SHOW.

The anual bench show of the New England Kennel club will open in Boston Feb. 22.

RECOUNT PROBABLE.

While no petition has yet been filed with the Registrars of Voters for a recount it is probable that one will be filed today. The time expires tonight. The recount will be asked by Harry G. Studley, who was defeated by Edward P. Histen for Councilman from Ward Two by seven votes. The claim will probably be made that the ballot box mutilated some of the ballots and that these were not counted. It seems that the box did mutilate some of the ballots. The mutilation, however, did not destroy the ballot as all it did was to punch holes through the part where the names were printed.

Should the required number petition for the recount the Registrars of Voters will hold it Monday evening.

AWLEY TO LEAD CHICAGO.

Sturdy Halfback Chosen Captain of 1910 Football Squad.

William L. Crawley, for two years right halfback of the Maroons, was recently elected captain of the 1910 eleven to succeed Pat Page. Only one man Rogers, was in the field against the successful candidate. Crawley was elected on the first ballot.

Crawley, who was the almost unanimous choice of football critics for the all western team this year, is a track athlete as well. He captured the high hurdle event in the conference meet last June and was the greatest individual point winner in the west. Although weighing 178 pounds, he can register eleven feet in the pole vault, five feet nine inches in the high jump, forty-one feet in the shot put and twenty-one feet in the broad jump He is a crack low hurdler as well.

The new leader is built perfectly for a halfback and in the last four games of the season made the best use of his speed and strength. Against Cornell and Wisconsin he was chiefly instrumental in making the touchdown that saved the Maroons from defeat, while his terrific line bucking in the Minnesota game resulted in a Chicago score and saved the Midwaylites from a shutout.

Early in the season Crawley was criticised for not playing with the proper spirit, but he hushed his critics by coming through with a whirlwind finish. His runs from punt formations gave him a chance to work up speed and force that made him a hard man to stop. On helping the man with the ball he always was a success and proved a strong man on defense. Coach Stagg considers Crawley the best halfback in the conference.

NEW WATER POLO RULES.

Effort to Be Made to Inject Features of Water Socker In Game.

Although the change has not yet been made by the Intercollegiate Swimming association, it is likely that the game of water polo will be altered so as to take on some of the features of socker water polo. The chief change being considered is to permit the scoring of goals by throwing the ball at the board. This is a distinct socker water polo feature. In addition to this method of making points the old system of making goals by touching the board will be retained, so that the game will combine the features of both styles. Socker water polo is the British version of the game.

MARKS DARTMOUTH'S CAPTAIN

Star Fullback Selected as Lead of 1910 Hanover Gridiron Men.

John Marks, '11, of Minneapolis, Minn., has been elected captain of the Dartmouth football team for next year. Marks is considered by eastern and western critics as one of the best fullbacks, both on the offensive and defensive, playing the game. He has been on the team the last three years he has been in college, proving a sensation each season.

Newark's Six Day Bike Race.

Newark, N. J., is going to have a six day bicycle race. It will be the first in the history of the sport there, but as Newark is a great cycle racing town, evidenced by the crowds that turn out to the summer sprint meets there, it will very likely prove a success. It will be held in the Essex armory from Jan. 25 to 30 inclusive.

CURRENT SPORT NOTES

Pacific coast teams are playing polo.

Columbia university has a walking squad.

Boston is to have a big checker league.

Yale's new swimming pool holds 160,000 gallons of water.

Harvard's varsity football players may join the socker eleven.

Johnny Evers, the Chicago National star second baseman, may be asked to coach the Williams college nine.

Harvard may send an eight oared shell crew to row against either Oxford or Cambridge next summer in England.

The Cochran cruising and schooner yacht will be of Scotch steel throughout, with a ninety-six foot water line, and will compete in the German and English regattas next year.

Entertaining and Hospitality.

I have no sympathy with the tired murmur of the straining women who speak of entertaining as "a duty to society." We all have duties to society, but entertaining is not one of them. There is no more obligation for a woman to entertain than there is for a man to swap horses with a neighbor. The conditions as they now exist are identical. The neighbor may desire to swap his horse, but no man feels bound on that account to exchange his own for it against his wish. Since I have recognized the market value of my own horse and how much I am always expected to give "to boot," I never swap.

The real and usually neglected duty to society is hospitality, and that has an important distinction from entertaining. It is hospitality only when the entertainment is without hope of reward. The moment the host hopes to receive in exchange even a good opinion, a little affection or admiration it ceases to be hospitality and becomes entertaining. The foundation of hospitality must be perfect unselfishness.

The question left us to solve in individual cases is, Which will give the most satisfaction as society is now organized?—Ethel Davis in "Dishonesty and Caste."

Time at the North Pole.

At the north pole time is nothing, and if one were residing at the north pole it would be unnecessary to wind one's watch. You are always at 12 o'clock and can't walk out of the hotel without walking south. All times of day meet at the pole as the meeting place of all the meridians. A man sitting with the invisible mathematical point right under him would be in all twenty-four hours at once, or a twenty-four hour watch placed on the pole could be made to point to the correct time in every part of the world. There used to be something of an approximation to this in the extreme north of Norway, where the degrees of longitude squeeze in, until recent days. Captains of Norwegian coasting schooners will tell you how inconvenient it was to change between the time of Holland at Bergen and that of Crete at the North cape while correct local time was maintained. General Norwegian time became indispensable.

A Traveler's Tale.

The passengers were beguiling the journey with pleasant conversation. One man in particular, who had the look of a traveler, told of long sojourns in foreign lands and kept them all interested with his anecdotes. "Yes, gentlemen," said he, "there is nothing like travel to expand the mind. Now, I don't suppose, for instance, that many of you have ever seen a beet root putting on a waistcoat?" His fellow passengers stared in surprise. "No; we certainly have not!" "Or a lettuce donning a pair of trousers?" "No!" "Or a spring onion fixing on its tie and collar!" "No, not even that!" "Well, gentlemen," said the traveler as the train drew up at the terminus and he prepared to alight, "you may believe me or not, as you like, but several times in my travels I have seen not only a beet root or a lettuce or an onion but a whole salad dressing!"—London Mail.

Paupers' Paradise.

The authorities of Samoa, the little island upon which Robert Louis Stevenson lived and died, provide board and lodging absolutely free to strangers who are unable or unwilling to pay for their keep. Every village on the island has a guest house, called a "faletale," and here the tourist is invited to come and be fed, lodged and entertained without any payment whatever.

The officials of the town of Klingenberg-on-the-Main, in Bavaria, are exceptionally generous, for they not only provide free beds and free board to poor people, but give away big puddings every year end to all who ask for them. Klingenberg owns several pottery clay pits that bring in so much money to the town coffers that they pay all the town expenses and leave a good round sum over, which is distributed to charity. Klingenberg is one of the few places where taxes are unknown.

Her Logic.

A United States senator in one of his campaigns told this story to illustrate the logic of an opponent: Did you ever hear about the young woman in Fort Dodge? One spring morning she sat on the piazza of her pretty little home sewing a button on her husband's coat. The husband himself appeared, and she said fretfully: "It's a perfect shame the careless way the tailor sewed this button on. This is the fifth time I've had to sew it on again for you."

"Sparks."

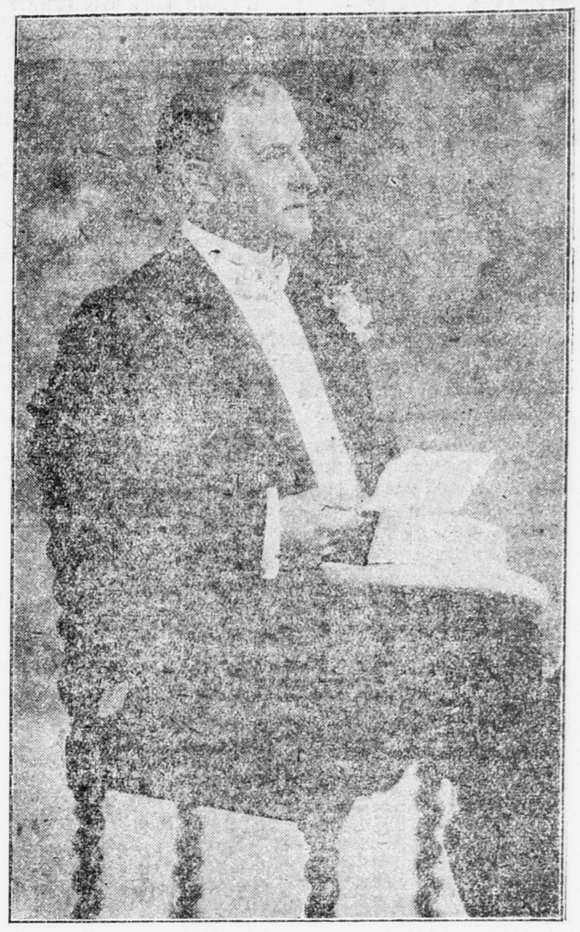
"I wonder," said young Mr. Staylate, hunting around for subject matter of conversation, "why they used to call beaus 'sparks.'"



"Perhaps," replied the suffering maiden, deftly showing a yawn in the act of apparently concealing it, "it was because sometimes they went out."—San Francisco Chronicle.

No Jewish Lullabies.

It is remarkable that, notwithstanding the love and devotion of a Jewish mother, there seems to be no trace of a real Jewish lullaby. Those known are of a recent origin.—American Hebrew.

Her Gamble.

"Did you ever gamble, ma?"
"Only once, my son."
"And when was that?"
"When I married your father."—Princeton Gazette.

ROBERT HILLIARD
In "A Fool There Was," the Hollis Street Theatre.

BOSTON AMUSEMENTS

Hollis Street Theatre.

"A Fool There Was," with Robert Hilliard as the star, will be seen at the Hollis Street theatre, Monday, ec. 13. It is the production of that skilful and expert manager, Frederic Thompson, whose offerings are significantly successful. It created a great stir in New York last spring and crowded the Liberty theatre there for several months. Porter Emerson Browne, a Massachusetts author and popular magazine writer vitalizes in "A Fool There Was," Sir Philip Burne-Jones' famous picture of the vampire woman and her dead dupe, which inspired Kipling to write his poem of the fool who loved "a rag, and a bone and a hank of hair." The story reverses the familiar triangle of two men and a woman and gathers force from the struggle of two women for a man. The latter is a polished man of the world, big financially, socially and diplomatically. He is ordered to Europe on a government mission and is at first revealed at his charming home at Larchmont, with his wife, child, sister-in-law and bosom friend. The story develops with cyclonic force. It is the old, old story of the man who goes to destruction, and yet the play has its comedy and dainty sentiment and witty epigrams. It is deeply symbolic of the opposing forces of good and evil that tear a human heart and torture the soul. Wednesday and Saturday matinees will be given. Seats are selling now for the Christmas performances.

Keith's Theatre.

Eleanor Gordon received tremendous receptions on her return to Boston last week at Keith's theatre, and she has been fortunate in securing a play that is worthy of her talent as an actress. In fact, so great has been her success that it has been decided to hold her over for another week as an extra feature of another one of those big bills that are attracting such large audiences to Keith's this season. This one will go from drama to grand opera, the latter being represented by what is probably the most ambitious company that vaudeville has ever had. This is Lovenberg's Operatic Festival in a beautifully spectacular production called "Gipsy Life" and "A Carnival in Venice." The company is one of the largest ever appearing in vaudeville and the singers are all people of reputation. Another feature of more than ordinary interest will be the re-appearance here of those famous comedians, Howard & North, who will present their new sketch called "Back to Wellington," which has been making one of the biggest hits of any rural sketch that has been offered in vaudeville in recent years.

Boston Theatre.

"The Circus Man" has struck a lively gait at the Boston theatre where Jaclyn Arbuckle and the large company supporting him in Klaw & Erlanger's meritorious production have been attracting large audiences. Rarely has a more amusing and interesting group of characters been seen in a play and the comedy is certain to make warm friends among playgoers fond of simple, unsophisticated human nature, humorous, pathetic, dramatic. Tears and smiles alternate in this refreshing story of people "Way Down East." Mr. Day, author of "Squire Phin," knows the people of Maine as no other writer does and he has succeeded in transplanting them, through Eugene W. Presbrey, to the stage in admirable fashion. Nearly all the characters are people whom Mr. Day has actually known. "The Circus Man" is a play that grips and convinces and sustains the interest during all of its five acts. Mr. Arbuckle as "Fighting Hime" Look has never during his long years on the stage had a better part or one in which he appears to such splendid advantage. The character has more rich, red blood, more of the depth and breadth of human passion, more of sympathy, more of the blending of comedy and tragedy than any role written into a modern play of late years.

Elmendorf—Dalmatia.

In concluding his season's series of travel talks at Tremont Temple next Friday evening, Dec. 17 and Saturday afternoon, Dec. 18, Dwight L. Elmendorf will take for his subject the little known country "Dalmatia." This delightful little country with its island studded coast, its mediaevel cities, and its stirring history promises to make this lecture one of sharp contrast with those already given describing "the gateways of the East." Mr. Elmendorf will first introduce his audience to Fiume at the north of the Adriatic sea, and will then continue his tour south to the capital of the country, Zara. Following his visit to this city Mr. Elmendorf will show the result of his visits to Sebenico, Trau, Spalato, Salono, Ragusa, Curzola, Cattaro and Cottinje. The latter city is said to be one of the most picturesque in the world being described as an oasis in a desert of rock. The series of lectures ending with this unique subject has proved the most successful ever given by Mr. Elmendorf in Boston.

Americana Music Hall.

The success of Julian Eltinge at the American Music hall this week was such that the management wisely decided to hold him over for another week. Never before has Eltinge received the demonstration in Boston that he has during this present engagement. His new songs and his latest sensational "Cobra Dance" have added wonderfully to his act. His costumes are of the same stunning variety that characterized his former visit and his work shows a better finish all through. The Four Mortons, that family of fun makers will next week make a strong bid for headline honors. This is undoubtedly the greatest family of entertainers on the stage. Father, mother, son and daughter are all comedians to their finger tips and every one of them is an exceptionally fine dancer. Nellie Wallace England's premier eccentric comedienne will be a pleasing number for her style of material and her method of delivering it never fails to keep the audience in roars.

EVENING STUDENT KILLED AT DEPOT

Charles Olsen While Fooling With Classmates Was Struck by an Inward Train

Was Learning Machinist Trade and Resided with His Parents at Montclair----Body was Horribly Mangled.

Charles Olsen, the 16-year old son of Lars Olsen of 30 John street, Montclair, was instantly killed at the Quincy depot by the 9.16 inward train last night. Olsen, who is employed in Boston learning the machinest trade, attended the city evening school at the Adams building, and it was there he spent the evening. He left the school in time to take the 9.16 train for home.

With him were Horatio Deans, of 93 Safford street, Wollaston, Irving Christenson and Thomas Deloranzo of Atlantic. The boys arrived at the depot shortly before the train was due and stood on the platform.

The Deans boy tells Officer Bishop that the other three were fooling about the platform. He says that Deloranzo pushed Olson onto the track. The latter ran back onto the platform. Then Deloranzo made as though to kick Olsen. At this moment the train was pulling into the depot, but was evidently nearer than they thought. Olsen started to dodge the kick, and was struck by the platform of the forward car and rolled under it, the wheels passing over his head. He was mangled in a horrible manner.

The train was nearly at a stop so that it did not proceed far. The body was pulled from beneath the train and taken to the baggage room and Medical Examiner Jones summoned.

In the meantime the remaining boys took the train for home, the Deans boy going directly to the Olsen boy's home to notify his parents.

Meanwhile the authorities were trying to find out who the unfortunate victim was. On his person was a ticket to Norfolk Downs, and a discharge card from the Massachusetts General hospital, dated Sept. 16, upon which was the name Charles Olsen. At the Hospital it was learned that the boy had been treated as an out-patient for a broken hand.

After Dr. Jones viewed the body it was taken in charge of Undertaker Hall. Up to 10.30 but little had been learned as to the identity of the victim, until the 10.49 outward train arrived, upon which came the boy's father and the Deans boy. It was then that the story of the accident was told Officer Bishop by the Deans boy.

Standing near the boys when the accident happened were two young ladies, Kittie Cullinen and Rose Connelley. Their version is that the boys stood near the edge of the platofrm. They saw Olsen go toward the track and then jump back the next instant he was beneath the wheels of the car.

THE BARRE BANQUET

Granite Manufacturers Review Work of Year

John C. Murray, president of the Granite Manufacturers' Association of Quincy, was one of the guests this week at the annual banquet of the Barre association, attended by 200 or more.

President William Marr presided at the business meeting. The Barre Daily Times says:

After short remarks had been made by Robert D. Smith of Boston, secretary of the N. G. M. A., and John C. Murray, president of the Quincy, Mass., association, the meeting adjourned to the banquet hall. The guests present from distant cities besides Secretary Smith and President Murray, were: Seward W. Jones of Boston, president of the National Association of Granite Industries of the United States; F. M. Schlimgen of Madison, Wisconsin, a member of the executive committee of the National Retail Monumental Dealers' association; C. E. Tayntor of New York, F. R. Stewart, chairman of the executive committee of the National R. M. D. association, of Mannington, West Virginia; and A. M. Hunt, editor of "Granite, Marble and Bronze." Manufacturers were present from all the towns included in this association, including Northfield, Waterbury, Montpelier, East Barre and Williamstown.

It was 9 o'clock before all had taken their places at the banquet tables, and 11 o'clock before all had had their fill of the excellent bill of fare, as served by Caterer W. H. Snow, proprietor of the City hotel. Riley's orchestra of five pieces played during the banquet.

When the cigars were finally passed, president Marr rapped for order. He said that of that the manufacturers had accomplished in the past few years, the patent case, which the association carried through the courts and finally got a decision that was very largely in the association's favor, means a great deal of good to the members of the association. Another thing that the association has accomplished that is of still more importance is the securing of a reduction in freight rates, he said; and for what we have been able to accomplish in this line, Seward W. Jones deserves a great deal of credit and praise.

Still another thing that the association is doing, with beneficial results for the association, is the claim department. By this department, matters have been justly settled in a way that costs the granite man nothing, whereas, if they had had to work alone, it would have cost them a great deal of money. "I believe," he said, "that coming together as we have tonight will achieve a great deal of good. Let us stand together firmly, maintaining our rights as an association, but still be ready at all times to give a square deal."

The toastmaster, Hugh J. M. Jones, then being introduced, said that he considered it a great honor to preside over this gathering. "When I came to Barre about 22 years ago," he said, "the place was then a little country village; but now it is the third, if not the second, city in the state."

City Clerk Mackay was the first speaker called upon, and he responded to the toast, "Our City."

C. E. Tayntor of New York, a former Barre granite man, was the next speaker, and the toast assigned to him was

MAUSOLEUMS."

When his firm left Barre 10 years ago, he said, there was one mausoleum sold where there are 10 being sold today. The trend of trade now, he said, is toward the mausoleums in place of the large monuments. Mr. Tayntor stated that he had patented seven different styles of mausoleums, after years of study on them, with an effort to eliminate the "leaky roof," which has always been a great fault with mausoleums. He had at last invented one with a single roof, that, he claimed, eliminated all possibility

THE HERMAN FRASCH SUCCESSFULLY LAUNCHED

Officials and Friends of Union Sulphur Company Among the Guests

Elaborate Banquet Served After the Launching in Mould Loft at the Fore River Shipyard----List of Guests

Most elaboate in every way were the ceremonies attending the launching of the steamship Herman Frasch at the works of the Fore River Ship Building Co., this morning. The guests included officials and friends of the Union Sulphur Co., of New York, for whom the vessel was built and a few of the officials of the Fore River Co.

The guests of the Sulphur company arrived from New York yesterday, and passed the night in Boston. They came to the Fore River work on a special car attached to the 8.45 train which arrived at the works shortly after 9 o'clock. They were immediately escorted to the launching stand, that had been erected at the bow of the vessel. The launching stand was gayly decorated with the national colors and the scene at the launch was an unusually pretty one. The sponsor of the vessel was Herman Frasch Whiton, a grandson of Herman Frasch for whom the vessel was named. The christening of a vessel by a boy was in itself a unique feature.

Preparations for the launch were begun immediately on the arrival of the launching party, and at 9.45 word was given to saw away the sole pieces, the last blocks which held the vessel on the ways. Standing at the bow was Master Herman, his hands firmly grasped about a bottle of Mumm's extra dry champagn with which the vessel was to be christened. This was suspended from the bow of the vessel by a streamer of tri-colored ribbon. As she began to move, Master Herman struck her steel sides a blow with the bottle, which was inclosed in a mesh, and cried out "I christen thee Herman Frasch." As soon as the bottle broke the ribbon was cut so that it fell in a shower at the boy's feet.

The launch was a success in every way, the boat taking the water gracefully. Tugs immediately came alongside and towed her to the fitting out dock. The guests were then taken on a sightseeing trip about the yards, which ended at the entrance to the mould loft where a lunch was served. The lunch was the most elaborate and expensive affair ever served at any of the launchings at the Fore River yards.

The tables, which occupied the whole of the mould loft, were laid out to represent a propeller. In the centre was a round table, representing the hub of the propeller. This was ten feet in diameter. Extending from this were three tables 32 feet long representing the blades. These blade tables were 4 feet wide at the hub, and 8 feet at the end. The seats for the guests were arranged along the blades place cards being at each plate.

In the centre of the hub was a mound five feet in diameter made of ferns, laurel yellow chrysanthemums and poinsettia. Leading from this to the sides of the hub were ferns and passion flowers. Along the length of the blades were small flowers and ferns. At the end of each blade was a smaller mound of yellow chrysanthemums and poinsettia from which ran trailers of passion flowers. The colors of the company are sulphur yellow and flaring red and the decorations were with a view of carrying out this color scheme. The decorations of the mould loft were yellow and red streamers running in one direction, and the code flags in the opposite direction.

On one end of the mould loft was a large flag with a sulphur background on which was a red devil, the Sulphur Co., flag. At each plat was an elaborate menu card, on one side of which was a picture of the vessel launched. There was also at each plate unique favors containing salted nuts. Those of the ladies represented poinsettias and those of the gentlemen primrosas. Each lady was given a poinsettia bloom while the gentlemen wore violet boutonniere. The menu of the lunch was as follows:

Oyster Stew, en-tasse,
Celery Olives Salted Nuts
Baked Sword Fish with Potatoes.
Lobster, a la Newburg, in ramequins
Chicken Salad
Cold Vermont Turkey Cranberry Sauce
Cold Virginia Ham Cold Tongue
French Ice Cream
Coffee and Confections
Roquefort and Camabert Cheese
Toasted Crackers
Paul Roget & Mumms Extra Dry Champagne
Appolonris Water
Ginger Ale, Cigars and Cigarettes

As the guests entered the mould loft they were handed a diagram of the table upon which their seats were indicated.

Immediately after the lunch the special car was taken for Boston where it was attached to the 2 o'clock train for New York. The guests at the lunch included the following:

LUNATIC SHOT AND KILLED

Rounded Up By a Posse After Murdering an Ohio Sheriff

Shreve, O., Dec. 11.—After murdering Sheriff Jacob Bell of Holmes county, running wild for forty-eight hours and terrorizing the countryside, O. E. Boley, an escaped patient from the Masillon state hospital for the insane, was shot down and captured on the farm of R. S. Wells last night.

Trailed by posses, Boley ran into and out of traps all day long, standing off his pursuers with his shotgun, escaping them by fleetness of foot. He died shortly after being captured.

Boley ran amuck Wednesday night, staying all night in a farmer's house, and shot Bell early the next morning when the sheriff came to get him. He hid through the day, staying at another farmhouse Thursday night and yesterday, returning to the first one and burning the mattress on which the sheriff died. He then fled, with the posse in pursuit.

BEER FOR VETERANS

More Sobriety and More Church Going When They Get Beverage

Washington, Dec. 11.—The abolition of beer halls at the national soldiers' homes did not make for sobriety and religious observance among the veterans, according to the report of the inspector, submitted to congress by the secretary of war. The report says that there were 126 more trials for drunkenness in the various homes in 1909 than there were in 1906, when the beer halls prevailed, or nearly 32 percent.

"Evidently suppression of beer halls at homes has not tended to promote sobriety, but the contrary," says the inspector.

Neither did the veterans go to church more frequently or regularly than when the intoxicating beverages were easily accessible. In 1906, says the report, the religious attendance was 23.58 percent and in 1909 it was but 17.97.

LEAVES FOR HAPPY HUNTING GROUNDS

Red Cloud, Famous Sioux Chief, Led an Awful Massacre

Washington, Dec. 11.—Red Cloud, the famous old Sioux Indian chief, is dead. He was 86 years old and for the past twenty-five years had lived at the Pine Ridge agency.

Red Cloud first came into prominence as the leader of the red men in the Fetterman massacre in Wyoming. That tragedy occurred Dec. 22, 1866, near Fort Phil Kearney. A detail of soldiers was sent to gather wood on the Little Piney, a stream running past the fort. The soldiers had reached a point about two miles from the fort when suddenly they were attacked by Indians. Reinforcements went to their rescue and they were safely brought into the fort.

General Carrington resolved to chastise the offending savages. He sent out 100 men in command of Captain Fetterman. The cunning savages led Fetterman and his men to a high ridge, and there, secreting themselves on either side of it, formed an ambuscade.

The soldiers had got about half-way down the ridge when suddenly Red Cloud rose up on one side of them with some 2000 braves, and on the other side Red Leaf rose up with an equal number. The command was taken completely by surprise and the attack was terrible in its ferocity. Not a man escaped.

Red Cloud continued a disturbing factor on the frontier until about a quarter of a century ago, when he signed a treaty of peace.

THE SWITCHMENS' STRIKE

Gompers Promises Support of American Federation of Labor

Cincinnati, Dec. 11.—The American Federation of Labor wil support the railroad switchmen who are on strike in the northwest to the extent of its powers, according to an announcement made by President Gompers of the federation, after a talk with President Hawley of the Switchmen's Union of North America.

This is said to mean that if the railroads do not concede the demands of the strikers, the trouble may spread until it involves other railroad unions connected with the American Federation of Labor.

Ocean-Going Tug Sinks

Portsmouth, N. H., Dec. 11.—The big ocean-going tug Portland ran ashore on Stone's Beach, York harbor. After her crew had been taken off and carried to the mainland, two miles distant, the wreck floated off at high tide, drifted 200 yards out to sea and sank in forty feet of water.

Zeppelin Sent to Hospital

Stuttgart, Dec. 11.—Count Zeppelin, the aviator, is showing bad effects from a small operation performed for relief from an ulcer on the neck. The surgeon has caused the removal of the count to a hospital.

Mills For Governor of New Mexico

Washington, Dec. 11.—The president sent to the senate the names of William J. Mills and William H. Pope, both of New Mexico, to be governor and chief justice, respectively, of that territory.

TRAFFIC IN WHITE SLAVES

Its Extent Is Characterized as Country Wide

CONGRESS RECEIVES REPORT

Innocent Immigrant Girls Shown to Have Been Forced Into Life of Shame—Frequently Brought Into United States Disguised as Wives or Sisters of Procurers—Immigration Commission's Recommendations

Washington, Dec. 11.—All but incredibly revolting are the disclosures as to an international system of traffic in the enforced and the voluntary degradation of men and women, contained in the report on the so-called "white slave trade" submitted to congress by the United States immigration commission.

Shocking as is the account of voluntary shame given in the report, immensely more so is the setting forth of well-attested facts as to the compulsory consignment of innocent immigrant girls into white slavery.

Much of the subject matter of the report was covered by the commission in its 1400-page preliminary report published and widely discussed a year ago. Yesterday's report is briefer, containing but sixty pages, and a large part of it is unsuitable for newspaper publication.

The report begins with an introduction explaining the nature and terminology of the "white slave" traffic, and concludes with a summary of the effects, moral and physical, especially upon the victims, and a series of recommendations, mostly of an administrative character.

The commission says that the effect of the importation of immoral women into this country is one of increased degradation and death for the women and of contamination and corruption.

The commission, in describing the manner of its investigations, recounts the experiences of many of its agents. In some cases they were attacked and beaten, and actual murder was narrowly averted.

No statistics are given in the report, though the extent of the "white slave traffic" is characterized as country-wide. Most of the women, it is said, come by way of New York, San Francisco and Seattle, although many are coming lately by way of Canada. Frequently they are brought into the United States disguised as wives or sisters of their procurers and so pass the immigration officials.

The exploitation of these women after their arrival in the United States is characterized in the report as "most pitiful for the women and most brutal on the part of the men."

The importations come from all countries. France leads and the Chinese and Japanese make up the majority of those coming by way of the Pacific coast. Most of the procurers are of foreign birth. The "market" price varies from $300 to $1000 for each alien woman. Sometimes they are not sold outright, but their procurers continue to live from their earnings after their arrival here.

The commission recommends chiefly that efforts be made through government agents abroad and on board steamships to prevent the importation of women to this country; that more assiduous efforts be made in the United States to arrest women known to be engaged in immoral practices, and to deport all possible; that the limit of three years after landing within which such persons may be successfully prosecuted be removed; that any deported persons returning to this country be imprisoned; that the keepers of immoral houses in which alien women are found be subject to deportation, and that the state and municipal governments be urged to cooperate to stamp out the evil.

Adams Estate Loses Money

New York, Dec. 11.—The estate of the late Al Adams, the so-called "Policy King," loses $200,000 by a decision of Vice Chancellor Garrison in New Jersey. He ruled that claims against a defunct brokerage concern are invalid in that they were incurred in bucket-shop operations. Claims aggregating approximately $700,000 are thus rejected.

Cummings Released on Bail

Boston, Dec. 11.—Charles S. Cummings, the note broker indicted on charges of conspiracy and uttering in the Framingham forged paper case, was released from Cambridge jail, where he has been confined since Nov. 9, as his brother, Benjamin Cummings, and Adelaide White furnished $20,000 bonds.

Big Four Woman Indicted Again

Cincinnati, Dec. 11.—The grand jury has returned a third indictment against Mrs. Jeannette S. Ford on a charge of blackmail, in connection with the $640,000 shortage in the accounts of Charles L. Warriner, treasurer of the Big Four railroad.

Man Found Dead Standing Erect

Laconia, N. H., Dec. 11.—Charles A. Jewett, a master painter, was found dead standing up in his shop. His brother found him clutching the doorknob and perfectly erect, but lifeless. Jewett was 57 years old.

WAITED FOR HER SHOES

Fireman Saves Life of Modest Girl Who Is Overcome by Smoke

Boston, Dec. 11.—Miss Evelyn Palmer, a southern girl studying in Boston, refused to leave her room at 11 Irvington street yesterady afternoon while the building was on fire below until she could find her shoes. She inhaled smoke while hunting for them, and fainted.

Many girls attending Boston schools live in the house, but by the time the fire had gained considerable headway all were thought to be safely out until Miss Rose McSweeney told the firemen that she was afraid her roommate, Evelyn Palmer, was resting in her room.

Fireman Cremin dashed up the stairs and banged on the door until he woke the girl up. She refused to leave until she had dressed for the street, and he waited in the hall until the smoke became so dense that he could scarcely see the door. Then he threw the door open and found the girl lying on the floor. He picked her up and groped his way down the stairs just before they toppled inwards. Both Miss Palmer and Miss McSweeney come from Nashville.

SAVANNAH NEGROES ARE ROUNDED UP

Fiendish Triple Crime Results In Wholesale Arrests

Savannah, Ga., Dec. 11.—Mrs. Eliza Gribble, aged 70 years, and her daughter, Mrs. Carrie Ohlander, were found dead in their home here, while Mrs. Maggie Hunter, aged 32, found just inside the front door of the house, is dying. Physicians say that Mrs. Ohlander was the victim of a criminal attack before she was killed.

One hundred and fifty negroes, caught in the meshes of the police dragnet through a negro section of the city, are prisoners, the theory of the police being that a negro, having planned an attack upon Mrs. Ohlander, was compelled to commit the other crimes to escape.

The police believe that a negro, using an axe, beat Mrs. Gribble to death, struck down Mrs. Hunter, and after attacking Mrs. Ohlander beat in her skull.

MADRIZ HIS SUCCESSOR

Zelaya Believed to Be Planning to Retire as Nicaragua's President

Washington, Dec. 11.—Evidence is multiplying that Zelaya intends to retire from the presidency of Nicaragua. Reports to that effect are general throughout that country, and the American consular officers seem to give credence to them.

The latest scrap of news from Nicaragua states that Jose Madriz is being talked of as Zelaya's successor. In the absence of definite information on this point it is assumed that this suggestion comes from Zelaya's friends, and for that reason, as well as others, his selection would be far from satisfactory to this government.

HOME RULE FOR IRELAND

Asquith Makes Definite Promise In Outlining Program of Liberals

London, Dec. 11.—Self-government for Ireland was laid down as the chief feature of the Liberal program by Premier Asquith last night. This policy was enunciated in a speech before a monster meeting in Albert hall.

The premier repeated what had been said by other ministers, that if it was returned to power the government would demand the limitation of the power of the house of lords, and then he went a step further and pledged the Liberal government to self-government for Ireland.

Balfour Out of Campaign

London, Dec. 11.—With the great political campaign just opening, Arthur J. Balfour, the Conservative leader, has been ordered by his physicians to remain in bed. He is seriously ill.

Queer Claret.

A party of miners calling at an inn in Llangollen during the absence of the landlord were shown into the best room, which, on his return, caused him to remonstrate. His wife, however, explained that a lot of money had been spent and that seven bottles of claret had already been drunk.

"Claret!" said he. "Why, I sold the last bottle the other day. You've been giving 'em catchup."—From "Random Recollections of a Commercial Traveler."

Perseverance.

Perseverance is more prevailing than violence, and many things which cannot be overcome when they are together yield themselves up when taken little by little.—Plutarch.

Late repentance is seldom true, but true repentance is never too late.—Venuing.

A Surprise For the Hunters.

"If the lair of a leopard is known," says a writer in the Wide World Magazine, "stones will generally dislodge the lurker. I recall one occasion when a leopard was supposed to be located in a cave near camp. The guns were placed around in positions commanding the exit, and a few stones were then thrown in. There was no result at first, but as more and larger stones crashed in there came a faint humming and then a roar like the sea under the cliffs. In a moment the air above the cave's entrance grew dark with—bees! As one man sportsmen and gun bearers fled for the camp. A few were slightly stung before they could reach their tents and pull the flaps over the entrances, which the bees for some time besieged. Incredible though it may sound, it is the truth that, although the camp was full of native servants, horses, etc., none of those who had remained behind and were not concerned in the attack on the bees' cave were stung. It was a considerable time before the bees beat a retreat, but during all the time that they stayed in the camp it was the tents of their aggressors exclusively round which they angrily buzzed."

The Crab In the Whale's Ear.

When the whales were still frequent along the lines of passenger travel across the Atlantic nothing was more common than to see the great beasts hurling their bulk clean out of the waves and, after a flight through the air, falling back into the sea with an enormous splash, a spectacle never failing of interest to the ocean tourist, but not due to any sportive disposition on the part of the leviathan of the deep—quite the contrary. The breaching of the whale is no fun for the beast. It is a frantic effort to rid himself of the torture of earache. There is a marine crustacean which pesters whales to the verge of endurance, and there seems reason to believe that some whales have been driven insane by these tiny parasites. It is a crab of about the size of that which is found in the oyster. When it lodges on the whale it infests the inner surface of the eyelids and the ear. By swift rushes on the surface the whale is able to clear its eyes, but the crab in the inner ear cannot be dislodged by any such means.

"Ox Eyes" For Two.

The drawback of fancy names for dishes is their tendency to be deficient in prosaic information. Would you order "angels on horseback," for instance, if you did not know what sort of thing it was? And to appeal to the waiter to interpret is humiliating. A correspondent recalls his own fate in the matter of "ochsenaugen" (ox eyes). Having repeatedly seen them on the menu among the pudding class during a tour in Germany, he and his wife eventually ordered them. "Two portions?" asked the woman waiter. "Oh, yes, two portions." It proved that two portions of ox eyes meant six fried eggs—as the final course of a hearty meal. And, as the wife had the moral courage to refuse to eat more than one, the cowardly husband, unwilling to give away that he had not known what he was ordering, had to worry down the five others.

A Startling Hat.

A lady's hat which would no doubt create as great a sensation today as it did at the time of its first appearance in 1352 was that worn by Blanche de Bourbon, queen of Castile, wife of Peter the Cruel. It cost £35 and was made in Paris. The hat itself was composed of de chypre and relieved with great pearls, garnets and enamel work. Children, carved in the whitest of ivory, were depicted picking acorns of pearls from the oak and scattering them to the swine below. Birds were singing in the trees, and at the foot were bees stealing honey from the flowers springing up from the verdure.

Fresh Air For Sleeping.

A person requires twenty cubic inches of fresh air at each respiration, or on an average of 400 per minute, and in ten hours' sleep he consumes 130 cubic feet of air. The air of a bedroom ten feet square, having its doors and windows closed and occupied by one person, would become unfit for respiration in four hours. In the case of two occupants the time would, of course, be reduced to two hours.—New York American.

Points on the Market.

Old Gentleman (in broker's office)—Now, what do you think I might buy? Broker—You ought to have some Chartered. Old Gentleman—Why, I was only thinking coming up in the train that I ought to sell some Chartered. Broker (who wants a commission)—Well, that's not a bad idea, either.—London Financial Times.

A Dried Up Spring.

Editor—I understand, Mr. Pennyman, that you have married. Pennyman (sadly)—Yes. Editor—That will perhaps infuse new life in your mother-in-law jokes, eh? Pennyman (more sadly)—Alas, that is a thing of the past. The mother-in-law is no longer a joke with me.—Brooklyn Life.

An Appreciated Kindness.

"Mr. Growell," began the visitor, "I don't want to disturb you"—

"Very considerate of you to come in here just to tell me that," said the busy man. "I appreciate it, sir. Good day!"—New York Journal.

Easy Money.

Hard Featured Woman—So you had money once, had you? May I ask you how you made your first thousand dollars? Tuffold Knutt (wiping his eye with his coat sleeve)—Ma'am, I drempt it!—Chicago Tribune.

Lodge Urges Extension of the Guano Act of 1856

COAL DEPOSITS FAR NORTH

Proposed Legislation Would Aid Bay State Men In Plans to Develop Unclaimed Territory In Spitzbergen Islands—Present Law Cannot Be Continued to Imply Seizure of Territory Which Capitalists Are After

Washington, Dec. 11.—Senator Lodge introduced a bill which involves a delicate international question, affecting the right of capitalists to exploit natural resources in territory over which no country exercises jurisdiction. John M. Longyear of Brookline, Mass., Frederick Ayer of Lowell, Mass., and other capitalists are desirous of developing certain coal deposits in the Spitzbergen islands, which are claimed by no country.

The only suggestion of law covering such a situation is found in the guano act of 1856, which provides that whenever any citizen of the United States discovers a deposit of guano on any island, rock or key not within the lawful jurisdiction of any other government and not occupied by citizens of any other government and takes peaceable possession thereof and occupies the same, such island, rock or key, may at the discretion of the president be considered as appertaining to the United States.

Such a law was found effective and adequate in its application to guano deposits, which usually are found upon rocky islands of no intrinsic value, but the law obviously does not apply to coal lands and could hardly be construed to imply any considerable seizure of territory.

As a means of approaching this new question, Senator Lodge therefore moves to amend the guano act by making it apply to "coal or other minerals" and enlarging its scope by extending it to "any portion" of the land involved.

In his annual message, President Taft dealt at some length with the anomalous position of the Spitzbergen islands, and stated that the United States government, in view of proofs filed with it in 1906, had accepted under reservation the invitation of Norway to participate in an international conference relating to the islands.

These proofs showed the American possession, occupation and working of certain coal-bearing lands in Spitzbergen and the reservation prescribed that the question of altering the status of the islands and countries belonging to no particular state and as equally open to the citizens and subjects of all states should be raised.

The Lodge amendment if adopted would tend to confirm the rights of Longyear and Ayer and their associates in the coal lands already occupied.

RACED TO THEIR DEATH

Probable Fate of Five Seamen Missing From Gunboat Marietta

Washington, Dec. 11.—So intent on winning a boat race with the crew of the ship's gig were the five men in the whaleboat of the U. S. S. Marietta that they sailed with all their might to their own death.

That appears from the written report received by the navy department on the disappearanceof the five men of the Marietta while off Port Limon on Nov. 26.

The report says that the two boat crews requested permission to sail a race around Grape Cay. The boats disappeared around the point, both crews fighting for victory. When they did not return search was made. The gig's crew was found along the coast. Nothing has been heard from the whaleboat, and the opinion is expressed that the men went to the bottom of the Carribean in a gale.

GIVEN JAIL SENTENCES

Ten Beverly Men Punished For Illegal Registration and Perjury

Haverhill, Mass., Dec. 11.—Sentences of ten days each in the house of correction were given ten of the eleven defendants tried on charges of illegal registration and perjury in connection with the recent election, at which the city changed from "wet" to "dry." The remaining case was continued.

The defendants all appealed and were held in $300 each.

Gets Seven Cents Commission

Washington, Dec. 11.—A grand total of 7 cents is registered up to the collector of customs at Annapolis, Md., as commission on the customs at his port, in a statement of emoluments in the customs service transmitted to the house by the treasury department. This amount is supplemental to the collector's regular salary.

Bombs Found on Czar's Yacht

Berlin, Dec. 11.—The St. Petersburg correspondent of The Vossische Zeitung says that two bombs have been found on the Russian imperial yacht Standart. Several arrests in connection with the supposed plot to blow up the yacht have been made.

OFFICIALS' REPORT DELAYED

Peace Has Not Yet Been Declared In the Ludlow Strike

Ludlow, Mass., Dec. 11.—The absence of Agent Stevens in Boston to confer with the Ludlow associates' officials there regarding the arbitration step taken by the Polish strikers, prevented a reply to the overtures of the state board of arbitration.

The strikers in mass meeting ratified the action of the leaders in turning their affairs over to the conciliation board, but in view of the delay in the company's reply no report was made.

The strikers are confident that they will be back to work Monday morning, but whether this confidence is warranted only Stevens and the company's officials know.

It is understood here that the company's reply will be sent here from Boston by the arbitration board, who will inform both the Central Labor union committee and the strike leaders. It is expected that the investigations of the board of arbitration will take up considerable time.

ICE TRUST CONVICTED

Maximum Sentence of $5000 Fine Imposed on New York Concern

New York, Dec. 11.—The American Ice company, one of the great corporations which lives by dealing in the necessaries of life, was found guilty in the state supreme court of restricting competition and attempting to create a monopoly of the sale of ice.

When the foreman of the jury announced the verdict the court immediately imposed the maximum senence of $5000 fine.

A formal motion to set aside the verdict as not justified by the evidence, and a request for a certificate of reasonable doubt, were both refused, but Justice Wheeler granted a motion for a stay of execution, pending the preparation of an appeal.

RIVETS IN ARMOR STRAINED IN CRASH

Battleships Collide While Engaged In Tactical Exercises

Washington, Dec. 11.—The battleships Georgia and Nebraska collided while engaged in tactical exercises off the Virginia capes. The effects of the collision were not serious, and the two ships were able to return to Hampton Roads.

This information came to the navy department from Rear Admiral Schroeder, commander of the fleet.

Further than describing the effects of the collision as "slight" the navy department had no information to give in regard to the damage suffered by the vessels. It was learned, however, that the collision was severe enough to strain the rivets of the armor of the vessels. A court of inquiry will probably be appointed immediately to ascertain the responsibility for the accident.

WITNESSES ARE MISSING

Inquiry Into Mine Disaster Halts Until They Can Be Produced

Cherry, Ills., Dec. 11.—Inquiry by the coroner's jury into the causes of the St. Paul mine disaster came to an abrupt close without a verdict being reached or any steps being made to fix responsibility for the attending loss of life.

The jury announced that it would not return a verdict until Alexander Rosenjack and Robert Dean, the missing witnesses, have either been found or the county officials show evidences of a genuine desire to find them.

It was agreed to adjourn until Dec. 20, to give the county officials an opportunity to search further for the missing witnesses.

ALLEGED THEFT OF $3800

Assisant Cashier of Express Company Is Held In $6500 Bail

Boston, Dec. 11.—Charged with the larceny of $3800, Joseph F. Minon, 30 years old, assistant cashier of the New York and Boston Dispatch Express company, was arrested late last night at his summer home in Cochituate. On arraignment in the Natick police court Minon was bailed by friends, his bond being set at $6500.

The complaint against Minon was made by Frank W. Knowlton, who is attorney for the express company, who said the officials of the express company believe the alleged thefts will total $10,000.

APPOINTMENTS ARE HELD UP

Senate Financial Committee Opens War on MacVeagh

ADVOCATE OF LOW TARIFF

Has Also Aroused Antagonism by Collecting Statistics and Information Which Helped Insurgents—Matters Complicated by Fact That He Is a Democrat—Bay State Senators Not Consulted In Curtis Case

Washington, Dec. 11.—The war of the Aldrich-Hale-Cannon element of the Republican party against all suggestions of tariff revision has been carried into the finance committee of the senate. Senator Aldrich and his sympathizers held up the nominations of Royall E. Cabell to be commissioner of internal revenue, and James F. Curtis, to be assistan secretary of the treasury.

The reason for this action was that the finance committee had declared positively against Secretary of the Treasury MacVeagh because of his low tariff views. MacVeagh is to be punished for intimating in his recent speech at Boston that the Republican party is now a low tariff party, and that the new tariff law, while not satisfactory, is only an incident and will not permanently block progress toward realization of the party's purpose.

That speech aroused the greatest hostility towards the secretary among the people who have taken up the cudgels to defend the Aldrich-Payne measure against all attacks. MacVeagh, even before that address, did not stand well with the high tariff element in the senate and house, because during the tariff session last spring he repeatedly indicated sympathy with the purposes of the low tariff people.

Some of the work of the treasury department in getting together statistics and information which helped the insurgents aroused the antagonism of the finance committee, and they have not required much further provocation to induce trouble.

The trouble broke out yesterday when protest was entered in the committee on finance against confirming the nominations of Cabell and Curtis. The nominations were sent to a subcommittee with the very definite understanding that they might remain there a long time. When it became known that this action had been taken there was much surprise and inquiry following as to how the president would feel about this apparent attack on a member of his cabinet.

The Massachusetts senators did not get a chance to pass on the case of Curtis, whom MacVeagh chose without consulting them. That was a serious enough offense, but it was complicated because MacVeagh is a Democrat anyhow, and his Democratic opinions on the tariff have become offensive to the extreme tariff wing of the Republicans.

Along with all this, there has been severe criticism of the administration of the treasury under MacVeagh. It has been alleged that he was not selecting the right kind of seasoned and experienced men for the big places, and that Curtis is one of the poorly qualified people he has taken. Personal reasons, incident to the fact that Curtis has been for years a friend of MacVeagh, are alleged to have had most to do with the choice.

The case of Curtis is referred to a sub-committee consisting of Senators Lodge and Penrose. Lodge favors the confirmation of Curtis and had no part in the raising of any point against him.

The nomination of George H. Doty to be assistant treasurer at Boston was approved. Doty was selected for the office by the Massachusetts senators, while the nomination of Curtis was made known to them on the morning it was announced by MacVeagh. They accepted the situation gracefully, however, and would have urged confirmation yesterday had not opposition developed throughout the committee on general principles and included Commissioner of International Revenue Cabell.

Morse Granted Ten Days' Stay

New York, Dec. 11.—In the United States circuit court Judge Noyes granted a stay of ten days to Charles W. Morse, the convicted banker, facing a term of fifteen years in prison for misappropriation of national bank funds, and referred the motion for a new trial for Morse to Judge Hough, who originally tried the case.

Senator Raines Near Death

Canandaigua, N. Y., Dec. 11.—Senator John Raines became decidedly worse last evening, so much so that serious apprehension was caused as to the outcome of his illness, peritonitis. One of Raines' two physicians is quoted as having said that his chance of recovery was slight.

Roosevelt's Big Bag

Nairobi, B. E. A., Dec. 11.—Theodore Roosevelt is expected here tomorrow for a round of entertainment. His hunting trip has resulted in the accumulation of 6683 animals and birds of all sizes. Roosevelt will be the guest of honor at several banquets next week.

Some Curious Weathercocks.

The weathercock had its origin at a very early date. Marcus Virtruvius Pollia, a noted Roman architect and engineer, who was born about 80 B. C., in his works calls a vane a triton, probably because in his time it had the form of a triton. The usual form on towers, castles and secular buildings was that of a banner, but on ecclesiastical buildings it was a representation of the male of the barnyard fowl. There have been other forms of vane. The one over St. Peter's, Cornhill, London, is in the shape of a key; that over St. Mildreth's church is a gilt ship under full sail. The grasshopper of the Royal Exchange, London, is the vane that formerly surmounted the former exchange. The dragon on the spire of Bow church, Cheapside, is another celebrated vane. One of Mother Shipton's prophecies was that when the dragon of Bow church and the grasshopper of the Royal Exchange should meet the streets of London would be deluged with blood. In what way they should meet the old dame did not explain, but it is known that at one time these two vanes were side by side in the yard of a stonemason in Old Street road, yet there was no shedding of blood.—London Answers.

Foote and the Lawyers.

Being on an excursion into his native county, Samuel Foote happened to meet with a simple minded farmer, who, having just buried a rich relation, who was an attorney, was full of complaints about the great expense of a country funeral, instancing the amount he had spent on scarfs, hatbands, carriages, etc.

"Why," asked Foote, "do you mean to say that you bury your attorneys in this part of the country?"

"To be sure," said the puzzled farmer. "What else should we do?"

"Oh, we never do that in London."

"Really! What, then, do you do with them?"

"Why, when one happens to die we lay him out in a room by himself overnight, lock the door, open the window, and in the morning he is gone."

"Extraordinary!" cried the other in amazement. "What becomes of him?"

"Oh, that we can't exactly tell," replied Foote solemnly. "All we know is there's a strong smell of brimstone in the rooms the next morning."—"Wits, Beaux and Beauties of the Georgian Era."

The Breeches Bible.

One of the books which a bibliomaniac handles reverently is the famous Geneva Bible, better known as the "Breeches Bible." This name is due to the rendering of Genesis iii. 7, where Adam and Eve are said to have "sewed fig tree leaves together and made themselves breeches." This had been the reading of the first English Bible, Wycliffe's version, but later translators had substituted the word "apron" for "breeches," and the Geneva Bible reverted to the original. The fact that only one edition of the Geneva version contained this sentence makes the limited number more precious to the book gatherer. The title page of this edition announces that it was "imprinted at London by the deputies of the queene's most excellent majestie" in 1599. The first edition appeared in 1560, and for sixty years this was the favorite Bible with the people, who reluctantly laid it aside for the authorized version in 1611.

The Same Dimensions.

The bride to be had the air of one who is unreconciled to the existing state of affairs. "Can't we take a wedding trip, as we planned?" she asked plaintively.

"Not just now," said the young man, "on account of my partner's illness."

"I thought it would be such fun, taking that six days' journey in the cars!" she sighed.

"Well, now, see here," said the young man. "If we take the flat I looked at yesterday it'll be just the same as living in the parlor car stateroom, except that the scenery won't change."—Youth's Companion.

The Book For Him.

There was a backward student at Baliol who for failure to pass an examination in Greek was "sent down." His mother went to see the master, Dr. Jowett, and explained to him what an excellent lad her son was. "It is a hard experience for him, this disgrace," said the old lady, "but he will have the consolation of religion, and there is always one book to which he can turn." Jowett eyed her a moment and then answered: "Yes, madam, the Greek grammar. Good morning."

The Judge's Slip.

A judge once made the following charge to a jury: "You have heard the evidence. The indictment charges the prisoner with stealing a jackass. This offense seems to be becoming a common one, and the time has come when it must be stopped or none of us will be safe!"

The Test.

Successful launchings have been so numerous at the famous Quincy shipyard that one never anticipates anythin different nowadays. But isn't it remarkable that all are so successful. The launch of the Herman Frasch today was the 58th of the Fore River Company in ten years.

Why not use the Red Cross stamp on the flap of the envelope as a seal or ornament instead of on the address side and thus avoid confusing the post office clerk? Thousands of letters have already reached the dead letter office at Washington because of misunderstanding the use of the Red Cross stamps. This stamp will not carry a letter or parcel the regular stamp being necessary also.

Quincy people are indebted to Mrs Ward for her comprehensive talk on England under the topic of "Current Events" before the Quincy Women's Club this week. It was very instructive, and set forth the conditions in that country much better than we ever heard them outlined before. People of the United States may profit by keeping posted on affairs in England where there seems to be a general awakening.

The petition of the N. Y., N. H. & H. R. R. to connect the Granite and Shawmut branches should be granted early in the session of the new Legislature, that some of the trains between Braintree and Boston may be diverted from the main line while the grade crossings are being eliminated. Quincy will not lose any service eventually as a belt line will probably be operated to include all the Dorchester and Quincy stations on the main line and the two branches.

Our conservative old city is indeed being "painted red." The gay color is flaming in every business house of importance in the city, burning into the minds and hearts of our people its message of "Peace on earth, Good Will to man." Peace to the despairing people suffering from the dread desease of tuberculosis, for they know today that with a great Good Will the strong and well are working for their casement and cure. May the Red Cross stamp go with the name of our city of Quincy to the uttermost parts of the earth.

In Bridgeport, Conn., this week two babies were burned and another child saved with difficulty from a burning house, the children being left in the house while both parents were away earning money for the support of the little family. This sad occurrence illustrates forcibly the need of a day nursery and it is just this work of saving and helping working mothers that the Quincy Day Nursery association is and has been endeavoring to do for several years. We are glad their work is being understood and appreciated by the public which now lends a helping hand when appealed to. Imagine what it would mean to a mother to return from a hard day's work to find not only her home burned but her little ones also. Surely there is need for a day nursery in every locality.

Don't be negligent about having the water shut off from your outside faucets and unoccupied houses. The weather is liable to swap around freezing cold, and a burst in the pipes is apt to do a lot of damage and cause a plumber's bill of no small proportions.

POND HOME.

The Christmas festival at The King's Daughters and Sons' Home for the Aged in Norfolk County will be held on Monday afternoon Dec. 27th at the home in Pondville, with a Christmas tree and entertainment; friends interested in this good work in our County are cordially invited to be present on this occasion and help to make a "Merry Christmas" for the members of the Pond Home family.

May we suggest that your list of Christmas remembrances shall include a gift for the Home? A check sent to the Treasurer Mrs. Abbie F. Fenno, 538 Hancock street, Wollaston, Mass., would be most gratefully appreciated by the trustees, and we feel sure would bring real Christmas joy to the donor as well as cheer to the Home and those upon whom the care of the Home revolves.

May all who send a Christmas offering to the Home truly find "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

BRIEFS

The Whatsoever Circle, King's Daughters will hold their next meeting Dec. 13th at 8 P. M. with Miss Foster, Safford street.

An interesting meeting of the Quincy Historical Society has been planned for next Tuesday evening, when Mrs. Elizabeth H. Alden will read a paper on "Old Quincy" and Emery L. Crane will illustrate "Windmills" by use of the stereopticon.

Rev. Henry Evan Cotton, D. D., of Baltimore, has promised to preach the sermon at the consecration services of St. Chrysostom's church. Dr. Cotton started the church in Wollaston coming down from Quincy to administer the rites of the church until the organization was able to get a priest. It is in recognition of his great service to the parish that he has been asked to preach the sermon February 22.

A large number of the friends of Miss Annie O'Brien tendered her a surprise party last evening at Electa hall, and presented her with a handsome signet ring. Dancing was enjoyed from 8 till 12, and refreshments served. The presentation speech was made by Miss Ella McDonald, who was chairman of the arrangements committee. The balance of the committee were: Thomas O'Brien, Abbie Pelhine and Robert Peterson.

Secretary Gay of this city was one of the speakers yesterday at the all-day conference under the auspices of the immigrant department of the State Y. M. C. A. held in Boston.

PHILERGIANS.

The Philergians met in Cochato hall, Tuesday, Dec. 7, the president Mrs. Susan J. Avery in the chair. There was a large number of club members and guests present, this meeting being open to the public. Notice was given of a conference on food sanitation to be held Jan. 5 in Chauncy hall building, Boston.

Mrs. Avery announced that a class in household management now numbered 54 and the lessons would be given in January.

Mrs. Avery spoke of the Red Cross stamps for sale on the exchange table, saying that as we, in Braintree are doing some work against tuberculosis, 75 per cent of the receipts from the sale could be reserved for this work. Mrs. Granville Tinkham has kindly taken charge of this work and has placed the Red Cross stamps in the following shops: Mr. Vinton's, Mr. Cass', Mr. Marcus Arnold's, of Braintree and Mr. Torrey's of South Braintree.

The program of the afternoon was arranged by the social service committee, Mrs. Benjamin Loring chairman.

Dr. Henry L. Dearing the first speaker, called attention to the fact that the town owns two or more tents, with broad floors, and is having the old pest house put into a condition so that tuberculosis patients may be cared for there. He then, with the aid of a map, outlined the plans for connecting the Metropolitan system of sewerage and the great need for so doing, if our water supply is to be used much longer.

Judge Albert E. Avery followed on the same subject, hoping by interesting the women, that something might be accomplished.

Miss Ellen Emerson of the Massachusetts General hospital and granddaughter of Ralph Waldo Emerson, spoke on the work that can be done in suburban towns, in the way of tuberculosis classes, showing people how to keep well and get well. Women's clubs often aid by providing a district nurse, and keeping surgical supplies on hand, to be loaned to poor patients.

Dr. John A. Gordon of Quincy and Dr. J. W. Watson of South Braintree also spoke on Tuberculosis and what might be done in Braintree. Dr. Watson corrected the statement in regard to the number of cases of tuberculosis in Braintree stating that only eight are known and some of these had come from other places. A rising vote of thanks was given the speakers. Among the guests of the afternoon were many doctors of the town and other gentlemen. Tea was served by the Hospitality committee.

Announcement was made that those wishing to visit Mrs. Gardner's palace might give their names to Mrs. C. A. Bill, 91 Hollis avenue, who will arrange for another trip at the first opportunity. Also those wishing to join one of the other trips to the Art Museum might give their names to Mrs. Gordon Keating, 132 Cedar street.

CAVANAGH WILL.

The will of John Cavanagh late of Braintree will be contested. William H. Cavanagh of Boston and Mary E. Moynihan of Braintree have taken an appeal from the allowance by Judge Flint in the Norfolk probate court, Nov. 10.

The appellants allege that the will was not duly executed, that he was of unsound mind and that he was induced to execute the will by the undue influence of his children, Agnes Gavin of Braintree and John T. Cavanagh of Quincy, and his wife, Annie M. Cavanagh, either one or all of them. The entire $50,000 estate by his will, dated June 8, was left in trust for the benefit of his wife for her life.

Barre Banquet

of its ever leaking; and out of 20 mausoleums he sold in one cemetery last year, he erected 19 of them of this one-roof style.

The toastmaster next called upon Hermon D. Hopkins of Montpelier, who gave a reading in the French dialect in his inimitable manner.

"The National Association" was then responded to by Seward W. Jones, who is a member of the Jones Brothers Granite company. The association was formed, he said, for the mutual benefit of its members, considering labor matters or any other things that would be of benefit to the trade. We have an information bureau, he said, that is one of the best features of the organization. The bureau is in the hands of our secretary, and we have the best method of obtaining information that is in existence.

FREIGHT RATES.

"Our greatest success as an association has been in what we have accomplished in getting reduction of freight rates and a claim system established, that has relieved us of a burden that we have been carrying for a great many years. In regard to freight rates, he said that the two roads leading out of Barre were the worst railroads the association has had to contend with, and today their rates are high, as compared with other roads. The Rutland road has a tariff rate from Rutland to Boston on marble of carload lots or less, with no restrictive values, of 18 cents; while from Barre to Boston the rate is 20 cents for carload lots, and 25 cents for less than carload lots. From Portland, Me., to New York, the rate is 16 cents, while from Barre it is 20 cents.

These two roads leading out of Barre, said he, had been continuously fighting the association in its efforts for rate reduction and have sent representatives to all of the meetings, to lobby against the association. It would seem, he declared, that these two roads had forgotten that the days of "the public be damned" have passed and do not realize that the public can step to the front and force them into their proper places. We have established a system in several states where we can get our claims paid in a few weeks; but with the two roads here, it takes from six months to six years to collect a claim.

The Barre association, the speaker maintained, should get after these conditions and have some law passed by the legislature, whereby the association can get what they are striving for and is due them.

THE RETAILERS.

F. R. Stewart of the Retail Dealer's association spoke next, and he brought a warm greeting from his association to the Barre association. The retailers, he said, stand for anything that will benefit the trade in general, and he wanted the manufacturers to understand that the retailers were with them and ready to co-operate with them on general grounds for the mutual benefit of all. If there are any disreputable ones in the retailers' association, we want to get them out, and we know that there are none in the manufacturers' association. We cannot hope for anything in single or divided effort, and we are ready to meet you.

NOT FOR FUN.

Henry C. Whitaker, one of the editors of "Rock Products," was called upon, and he stated that he had always considered that great good could be accomplished by the getting together of the manufacturers and the dealers. He declared, also, that it was time that a system was devised to raise the price, and put a stop to cutting of monuments for the fun of it.

F. M. Schlimgen of the national retail dealers' executive committee, line as the previous speaker, and he thought a great deal could be accomplished that would be of mutual benwho followed, spoke along the same efit, by the sending of delegates to the meetings of the different associations.

The last speaker was J. M. Boutwell of the Quarry Owners' association, who gave a very interesting account of the earliest history of the quarries and of the manner in which the stones were transported before the railroad was built onto the hill. He said that every member of the granite trades owes a great debt of gratitude to D. R. Sortwell the man who built the Barre railroad and made it possible to transport the best granite on earth to any place on earth.

The affair was in charge of William Marr, president, William Barclay, first vice-president, T. E. Callahan, second vice-president, C. H. Wishart, secretary, and George Robins, treasurer.

SOUTH BRAINTREE.

Mrs. George Dyer of Dorchester has been making an extended visit with Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Dyer of Hancock street.

Hon. Charles C. Mellen was the speaker at the regular monthly meeting and dinner of the Men's club of the South Methodist Episcopal church, last Wednesday evening. The affair was in charge of an able committee consisting of Ellis Dyer, L. W. Thayer, Dr. John W. Watson, H. T. Cushman and S. B. Gammons, and the club manifested its appreciation by a unanimous vote of thanks. The committee received valuable assistance from A. H. Clark who prepared an excellent fish chowder. The usual reception was held at 6.45 and the supper was served shortly after 7, Rev. C. F. Hill Crathern invoking the divine blessing.

The weekly whist parties given by the local shoe workers union continue to be very popular and are well attended. Last Wednesday evening the union rooms were filled with whist devotees and ten tables were necessary to accommodate the lovers of the game. Mrs. Willis Cottrell captured the first souvenir for ladies, and Miss Mary Burns the second. For the gentlemen, Alton Oliver was first and Edward Hall a close second, while the consolation fell to Willis Cottrell.

BRIEFS.

The monthly meeting of the Granite City club will be held tonight.

No snow yet, although for several days it has looked as though it would snow very soon.

Frequent rehearsals are held by the chorus who are to sing in the opera Chimes of Normandy which is to be presented by the Knights of Columbus early in January.

There will not be any meeting of the City Council on Monday evening, but a meeting will be held Tuesday evening to canvass the returns of the recent election. Any business, however, will be in order at the meeting.

A surprise party was tendered Dennis Ford Friday evening at his home on Rail street. He was presented a sweater which he will find useful during the cold weather. The evening was spent dancing, singing and playing games of all kinds.

THE WAY OUT of a SOCIAL DILEMMA

PEOPLE like to get together in a social way after the day's duties are performed. Society is not found in any one class of people or in any one place.

Sometimes these social pleasures take the form of a dinner or dance or a party of a more or less formal nature; sometimes, on the spur of the moment, a party is formed and people just get together to have a good time in any way they please.

If it's to be a large function, it calls the caterer, the carriage agent, the florist or the grocer; if it's just a little informal gathering, it gets the crowd together and saves disappointments.

If you're away from home, the Long Distance Bell lines will always straighten out your social entanglements.

WHAT WOMEN ARE DOING

A Wife Helps Her Husband Win the Mayoralty Race—Awards to Faithful House Servants. Unique Confederate Wedding.

MRS. SAMUEL LEWIS SHANK is known in Indianapolis as "the best friend of the next mayor" of that city. And the next mayor is her husband. He was elected on the Republican ticket Nov. 2. During the campaign Mrs. Shank accompanied her husband in an automobile to all places where he spoke. She did this regardless of the weather. Mrs. Shank is not classified as a suffragist. She was enthusiastic for her husband's success, and she showed it by her work. She "electioneered" for him in a manner that won the good opinion of the opposition party and in a way that in nowise encroached upon her social prerogatives. Whether Mrs. Shank's work as a campaigner will be a precedent for other wives whose husbands may be candidates remains to be seen, but it is admitted in Indianapolis that Candidate Shank received more votes on account of his wife's interest in his behalf than would have been the case if she had stayed at home. When the count was over and it was found that Mr. Shank had been elected his friends went in a body to the Shank home to extend their congratulations. It was noticed at first that Mrs. Shank was not present, and the crowd insisted that she should appear, which she did, for the crowd did not hesitate to assert that she was a part of the victory and deserved the same congratulations that had been given to her husband. Mrs. Shank as a hostess was exceedingly gracious. She is of the middle aged class and is popular in Indianapolis society.

Once a year the officers and members of the German Housewives' society of New York city get together and hold a little "coffee" for the members, and the servants that have been furnished by the society receive honorary awards of merit. This year twenty-five girls of all nationalities received that golden bee pin which is a recognition of the fact that the recipient has done faithful work in one household for two years. Eight girls each received a gold ring with a monogram of the society engraved on it as a reward for three years' service. Two girls who had served six years in the same family received a gold bracelet each.

With the church draped in Confederate colors, the bride and bridegroom dressed in Confederate gray and the minister and ushers, Confederate veterans, in full uniform, a unique wedding was recently solemnized at the Second Baptist church in Atlanta, Ga. The bride was Miss Lodi Will Byrd, and the bridegroom was George E. Morgan, both members of old families that had representatives in the Confederate army. Confederate airs were played on the organ, and "Dixie" was rendered as the wedding party left the church. Six veterans of the Confederacy in uniform acted as ushers, and General A. J. West in a Confederate uniform gave away the bride. The bride's attendants were also gowned in gray.

The Daughters of the Confederacy have purchased the house in which "Stonewall" Jackson died. Four acres of the ground surrounding the house were also purchased. The property is twelve miles southwest of Fredricksburg, Va. The house will be kept in repair and the ground converted into a park.

Among government officials in this country the percentage of women earning $1,000 a year and over is greater than that of men. MARY DALE.

SANTA AND THE LITTLE MOUSE.

By FRANCIS TAYLOR.
[Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.]

One Christmas eve when Santa Claus
Came to a certain house
To fill the children's stockings there
He found a little mouse.

"A merry Christmas, little friend,"
Said Santa, good and kind.
"The same to you, sir," said the mouse.
"I thought you wouldn't mind

"If I should stay awake tonight
And watch you for awhile."
"You're very welcome, little mouse,"
Said Santa, with a smile.

And then he filled the stockings up
Before the mouse could wink—
From toe to top, from top to toe,
There wasn't left a chink.

"Now, they won't hold another thing,"
Said Santa Claus, with pride.
A twinkle came in mouse's eyes,
But humbly he replied:

"It's not polite to contradict.
Your pardon I implore.
But in the fullest stocking there
I could put one thing more."

"Oh, ho," laughed Santa, "silly mouse!
Don't I know how to pack?
By filling stockings all these years
I should have learned the knack."

And then he took the stocking down
From where it hung so high
And said: "Now put in one thing more.
I give you leave to try."

The mousie chuckled to himself,
And then he softly stole
Right to the stocking's crowded toe
And gnawed a little hole.

"Now, if you please, good Santa Claus,
I've put in one thing more,
For you will own that little hole
Was not in there before."

How Santa Claus did laugh and laugh!
And then he gayly spoke,
"Well, you shall have a Christmas cheese
For that nice little joke."

THE DEAR OLD TREE.

By FRANK H. SWEET.

There's a dear old tree, an evergreen tree,
And it blossoms once a year.
'Tis loaded with fruit from top to root,
And it brings to all good cheer.

For its blossoms bright are small candles white,
And its fruit is dolls and toys,
And they all are free for both you and me
If we're good little girls and boys.

The Christmas Manger.

In France may be almost universally seen representations of the manger in which Christ was born, with figures of Mary, Joseph and the child Jesus, and cattle feeding near by.

Christmas Presents FOR MOTHER

The searcher after Christmas novelties will find nothing more charming than the doll workbags and dainty little gifts made from silks and old world brocades. These novelties unmistakably proclaim their Parisian origin, and, like most importations from the French capital, they are expensive. But from a description of some of these charming trifles their home manufacture is not difficult. Most attractive is a doll workbag. The head of a pretty wax doll, the size of which depends, of course, upon the size of the workbag you wish to make, is purchased. A quaint coal scuttle bonnet of flowered silk is fashioned for the doll's head, which ties in a full bow under the chin. Pieces of buckram standing out to form shoulders is next arranged about the doll's neck, and over this is fitted an old fashioned fichu of silk edged with puffings of the same. This dressed up head forms the top of the bag, the bag itself being a scanty skirt of silk trimmed with flounces in 1830 style. At the top of the skirt is the usual drawstring, which is run through the top of the doll's head and forms a sliding scale in which the bag is opened or closed.

A New Laundry Bag.

Here is a laundry bag that cannot elusively conceal in its depths any small article. This new bag is very simple in construction. It is a square of a yard or more of any material that is strong enough for the purpose. Bright cretonne is very good. This square is hemmed and each corner turned back half an inch. On each of the blunted corners thus made is sewed a loop of tape four inches long. Smaller bags can be made in the same way.

Silk Flower Vase.

Vases covered with brocaded silk are the newest things out for holding flowers, and the idea is to have three of these holders arranged together. These vases are constructed from testing tubes that are used for chemical experiments, and in the present instance the large ones about twelve inches high are pressed into service. About the three tubes is pasted handsome brocaded silk, or plain fabric may be used, studded with sequins and embroidered with tiny designs in ribbon flowers. The fabric is applied with photographer's paste and finished top and bottom with dull gold braid. The illustration shows how the tubes are arranged. A gold cord is put around them in such a way as to make a good balance, and an extra quantity is reserved for hanging the vases.

SILK FLOWER HOLDER.

The Doll Blotter.

Reminiscent of days long ago is a little "lady" fashioned from cardboard whose prosaic mission is to serve as a blotter. The face and figure are painted in water colors, the pannier-like drapery being made of purple blotting paper fastened with tiny brass headed tacks. This decorative desk adjunct costs $1.50.

A Viceroy's Plain Living.

In Miss Juliet Bredon's book about her uncle, Sir Robert Hart, the "grand old man of China," for many years in charge of the imperial customs service, is the following story:

"One of the most influential of Sir Robert's Chinese friends was the great Li Hung Chang. The diplomat liked Li's household because of the simplicity he found there—no wearisome courses at dinner, but fish and perhaps a dish of chicken with rice. Incautiously, as it turned out, he praised this frugality to his own Chinese servant, for the remark reached Li's ears in a distorted form. Next time Sir Robert went there he had to face a grand ceremonial banquet.

"'You shall not have the chance to go away again and say that you have been fed like a cooly in my house,' said the viceroy proudly at the end of the banquet.

"'Nevertheless the very simplicity of your hospitality was what I most appreciated,' Sir Robert replied. 'But if you believe that I could have made any such remark and if you persist in altering the style of my reception I shall not come to lunch with you again.'"

The Room Was Full.

Rev. Daniel Isaacs once alighted at an inn to stay the night. On asking for a bed he was told he could not have one, as there was to be a ball that evening and all the beds were engaged.

"At what time does the ball break up?" asked Mr. Isaacs.

"About 3 in the morning, sir."

"Well, then, can I have a bed until that time?"

"Yes, certainly, but if the bed is asked for you will have to remove."

"Very well," replied Mr. Isaacs, and away he went to get between the sheets.

About 3 in the morning he was awakened by loud knocking at his chamber door.

"What do you want?" he asked.

"How many are there of you in there?" inquired a voice.

"There's me and Daniel and Mr. Isaacs and an old Methodist preacher," was the reply.

"Then there's plenty of you." And the speaker passed on, leaving Mr. Isaacs to enjoy his bed.

Belated Logic.

"Put yourself in my place, young man. Would you want your only daughter to marry a penniless youth?"

"Put yourself in my place, sir. Would you want to remain a penniless youth when there are rich men's daughters to marry?"

"You confess, then, that you marry my child simply for her father's wealth?"

"And you confess that you withhold her from me simply because of my poverty?"

"What other reason do I need?"

"What other reason could influence you?"

"This talk is quite useless."

"Quite."

"We have nothing to gain by it."

"Absolutely nothing."

"You take it philosophically."

"Why shouldn't I? Your daughter and I were married quietly a month ago."

"Great Scott!"—Puck.

Insanity In London.

Costermongers and engineers, one notes, rival each other in heading the list of maniacs provided by the commissioners in lunacy. If you don't want to be mad, be a clergyman. You will have about a one to a thousand chance of not dying in a lunatic asylum. It is a bit risky to be a literary or scientific person, but if you put your science into practice and become an engineer your prospect of lunacy jumps to the top, with only costermongers as your real rivals. Why this is is a mystery. It can't be intellect or hurry. Costermongers do not hurry, and they are not noticeably intellectual—London Chronicle.

The Englishman.

Just as there is no being more disliked in his own country than the Oxford man who displays what is (most unfairly) described as the Oxford manner, so there is nobody who does more harm to our good name abroad than the Englishman who carries his insular conceit all over the continent—his evident belief that the people, the country and the institutions under his condescending review are obviously and painfully inferior to those he has left behind him. That is the sort of optimism which has to be kicked out of a man before he becomes a tolerable citizen of the world.—London Outlook.

Wounded Dignity.

Undersized young husband calls at the registrar's to give in the name of his firstborn.

Registrar—What is it you want?

Husband—To report the birth of a son.

Registrar—Go back, my little man, and tell your father he'll have to come himself!—Liverpool Mercury.

An Ingenious Interview.

An officer once asked Frederick the Great for an interview, which was granted on condition that he only said two words. He presented a petition. "Sire," he said, "sign!" Frederick, highly amused, surrendered.

Keep Out of Debt.

My first word to all men and boys who care to hear me is, Don't get into debt. Starve and go to heaven, but don't borrow. Don't buy things you can't pay for!—John Ruskin.

Faint hearted men are the fruit of luxurious countries.—Herodotus.

From Arctic to Tropics in Ten Minutes

No oil heater has a higher efficiency or greater heating power than the

PERFECTION Oil Heater

(Equipped with Smokeless Device)

With it you can go from the cold of the Arctic to the warmth of the Tropics in 10 minutes.

The new

CHAPTER XIV.

HAGGLETON'S BAKERY TRUST.

HAGGLETON'S plans for the bakery combine were large. He spoke of them tentatively to Philip, adding cautiously:

"But don't talk about that yet. We have got to show these fellows substantial profits before we can get them in deeper. Besides," he added, with a sharp glance, "it won't be a case of profit for all of them."

Haggleton lowered his voice.

"We have six bakers in the combination already. Within a week we'll have ten. Within two weeks we'll have all the bakers around here tumbling over themselves to get in. So," he smiled, "don't you see?"

"What?"

"These outside bakers won't be able to stand against us. Inside of six months half of the bakeshop bosses down here will be working for the combination."

Philip looked serious.

"Is that—is that necessary?"

"It's the law," said Haggleton grimly, "the law in big things and little things, that the master mind rules."

No doubt the arguments advanced by Philip in his own mind to satisfy his own uneasiness regarding Haggleton's methods would have been met by other arguments had Gentle been there to counsel him, but the old diver had been away a great deal with the wrecking boats. And it was not until the third week that Philip was really brought face to face with facts as they were. This came about through his call on Margaret after her return to Mrs. Binney's boarding house.

Radiantly happy, proud of her hero, the girl had yet seen that very afternoon on her return a cloud gathering upon the horizon of their future in common. A baker's assistant whose wife she had nursed through a protracted illness, a man, therefore, sorely in need of continued employment, had appealed to her for intercession. It was serious news, and it was made more serious by Gentle, who was present. The news was that the bakeshop combination had done the assistant a cruel wrong by depriving him of his job in a bakeshop on Madison street. He was a victim of the kneading machine, cast adrift and desperate.

Get another place? Where? He had been to three other bakeshops where men had been discharged on account of the very same machine, and two of them were fathers of families. That was a nice business for Philip Ames to be in, wasn't it, and he calling himself a friend of the poor?

So he railed on and presently stumbled away, leaving a message that Philip could go straight to a hotter place than any bakeshop.

Gentle looked troubled. He hesitated a moment; then, as he met her brave, comprehending gaze, he decided that she could help and that now was the moment to do it. So he told her exactly what was on his mind. There was an old proneness in Philip to money love. It was a fault that had come through his father, who was—well, she knew Mr. Haggleton, did she not? Philip's mother was the finest woman Gentle had ever known, a true womanly woman. In some ways Margaret reminded him of her, and he was sure she could influence him wonderfully for good if she understood this danger. Philip was full of the noblest ideals. His soul rebelled at the unfairness of things. He was a fighter; but, alas, he could fight two ways—selfishly and unselfishly.

Gentle felt that this was a critical time in Philip's development. Had Margaret not noticed how absorbed he was in this bakeshop scheme?

"It's all Mr. Haggleton's fault," declared Margaret.

"Mr. Haggleton is the occasion," Gentle replied judiciously; "the cause is in the blood."

Margaret tried to draw from Gentle facts about Philip's mother.

"Did she realize that there was this other side to him?" she asked.

"Oh, yes, she realized it; she realized it fully. And sometimes it frightened her to think that with all her love and care she could not free Philip from this—this tendency to be like his father."

"How did she know he had it?"

"Even as a boy he was wonderfully shrewd in making bargains with other boys. I tell you, Margaret," he went on, "there is so much at stake here that—well, the selfish Philip must not win; the other Philip, his mother's son, must win."

"Oh, yes!" cried Margaret.

"And with your help he can win, but we mustn't forget that the enemy is there to be reckoned with."

"You mean his father's son?"

"Exactly," replied Gentle.

All this had prepared Margaret for a serious talk with Philip when he called that evening, but when he came she was quite disarmed by his attitude of fondness and submission. He at once admitted that he had been too much absorbed by this bakeshop affair. But now that the enterprise was fairly started he could soon leave it safely to "Mr. Jackson," and without fail he would set apart certain hours every day for the further enlightenment of Haggleton about the sufferings and miseries of the poor.

Margaret was delighted and said to herself that, after all, there would be no such trouble as Gentle had foreseen.

In furtherance of his good intentions Philip had a talk with Haggleton the next morning, Gentle being present, and they made it clear to the old man that his bakeshop activities must not take his attention from the problems of poverty.

The talk inevitably drifted right then and there into a discussion of the surroundings in which laboring men worked in general and the helpers of the combine in particular.

"They ought to have shorter hours," declared Philip, "with time for exercise and pleasure, and employers should be required by law to protect them from injury and disease."

There was a ring of conviction in his voice, and Gentle looked at Haggleton with a challenging smile. The old man understood that hostilities were declared between them and smiled back confidently. After all, this was his son, and with a little wise guidance there was no danger of his accepting any foolish sentimental standards.

"You killed Jenny's husband."

"How can employers prevent injuries and disease?" he asked.

"By creating healthful conditions of work and by using proper safety appliances," answered Gentle. "These appliances exist in all dangerous trades, but employers refuse to put them in because they cost money."

Haggleton thought a moment and then asked sharply, "Do you think there is any appliance that would keep bakers from breathing flour dust?"

"Why—er," answered Gentle, taken aback—"I don't know."

"It isn't likely, is it? And yet we've got to have bread. Besides," he added, looking at Philip, "suppose there was such an appliance and it cost $500, could we afford it?"

"Not just now," said Philip.

"Ah," laughed Haggleton, "that's the way with lots of things—we can't afford them just now. It's easy to condemn big corporations, but when you come down to it the people who do the condemning are built on the same plan. They want to do fine things, but they can't afford to—just now."

That evening in the Moran home, where Jenny was beginning to be sorely missed, Gentle produced scrap books containing facts for Haggleton's further edification. Moran was out in the streets searching for his daughter, as was his nightly custom now. Philip stood at the window. Haggleton and Gentle girded themselves for the struggle. It was for him that they were fighting.

"I'd like to show you some statements," began Gentle, opening one of the scrap books, "that bear on the subject of safety devices and the accidents caused by lack of them. You're a great railroad magnate, one of seven men who own most of the railroads in the United States."

"I have some influence in railroad matters, but"—

"Yes, you have some influence," said Gentle dryly. "Do you know how many people your railroads kill and injure every year?"

"No," answered Haggleton.

"I have the figures here," said Gentle, pointing to the scrap book, "and they show that in the year just past you and your fellow magnates killed over 10,000 persons on the railroads of the United States. You killed Jenny's husband. That's the truth, Mr. Haggleton. You may ask why I dwell on railroad accidents when our problem is poverty. Because there is a terrible relation between the two. You speak contemptuously of those who have failed in life. You like to think that the million or more in this city who are in poverty are there by their own fault. I want you to know that thousands of them are there because you railway kings have failed to do your duty."

Haggleton made an angry gesture. Gentle lifted his hand.

"Let me finish. In the past year over 80,000 persons were injured by railway accidents in the United States, and most of them poor people, four-fifths of them your own employees! Think of that—80,000 crippled and maimed in one of your enterprises! There is part of your magnate handiwork. You take these workingmen into your service, these passengers into your trains, you accept their toll or their money, and then, instead of protecting them by safety appliances that are perfectly well known and in constant use abroad, you torture them in criminal wrecks, you burn them, you scald them, you tear off their hands or feet, you crush their legs or arms, you wrench their backs, you fracture their skulls. You do this to little children, to loving mothers, to young men; you do it every day of the year to over 200 of your countrymen!"

Haggleton was silent.

"Why is it that in a given number of railway employees America kills nearly three times as many as England and injures five times as many?" asked Gentle.

"America is a bigger country, with ten miles of railroad where England has one mile."

Gentle shook his head.

"I made allowances for that. I said we killed more in proportion."

"Our people are in a hurry. They insist on going fast, and that increases the danger."

"Pardon me," replied Gentle, "the fastest trains in the world are in Europe."

"You talk like a child!" retorted Haggleton. "You know nothing about conditions."

"No? I know this—that for years you magnates fought against air brakes and automatic couplers, although you knew they would save thousands of lives. Now you're fighting the system of block signals that is used everywhere in England and that would save thousands of lives more."

"We have block signals on some railroads," insisted Haggleton.

"On very few, and where you have them you don't use them half the time. Your own engineers have admitted that when forced to testify about accidents."

"If we had to run freight trains under strict block signals we'd never get our business done," snorted the old man. "Think of the freight piling up all over this country, millions and millions of dollars' worth, far beyond what the roads can handle and much of it perishable. We've promised to move it, and we've got to move it, haven't we?"

"No, sir!" flashed Philip. "Not if it means destroying lives."

"Besides," resumed Gentle, "it's not only in railroading that you slaughter people. It's the same in mining and building and manufacturing. Here's an article"—he turned to another page—"that estimates at over half a million a year our casualties in various industries largely controlled by your trusts. Half a million killed and injured every year and the greater part needlessly! How? By dangerous machinery in your factories that might be protected, by wheels and saws and flying belts that might be covered, by poisonous fumes and deadly dust that might be guarded against, by explosions in your mines that might be avoided, by falls, by fires, by insidious disease, by a hundred perils that beset your toilers, all of which might be lessened or removed, but for one thing."

"What's that?" asked Haggleton.

Gentle seemed not to hear. His kind, thoughtful eyes were fixed on Philip as if speaking to the boy's soul.

"Half a million killed and injured every year!" he went on sadly. "Nine times the total loss in the battle of Waterloo! Nearly all of them workingmen in the prime of life, wage earners whose injury means distress or ruin to a family! Think of the poor wives, the helpless children—more recruits for poverty, more wrecks! And the greater part of this immense harm might be averted but for one thing."

"Yes?" said Philip eagerly. "What is that?"

Gentle looked steadily at Haggleton.

"You know what I mean?"

"No."

Then slowly and impressively the old diver spoke.

"I have studied this question. I have lived it, and I tell you, sir, you are defending a bad cause. You know that three-fourths of these accidents might be avoided and all this wretchedness and pain be spared us and this enormous waste of human energy prevented if you great captains of industry had not made up your minds that it's cheaper to kill men than to protect them."

THE MUFFS MEN WORE

They Were Decked With Lace and Bows of Ribbon.

A FASHION OF OTHER DAYS.

Their Use Was Quite Common, Too, and Not Confined to Fops and Dandies—Double Muffs Were Once In Vogue—Extremes of Style In Sizes.

Muffs were invented for the use of a man. At least so the legend goes. It seems a classic shade found the air of the world so beastly cold when he reascended to earth after his death that his hands were almost frozen.

Consequently it was decreed that the slayer of the poor young gentleman should kill enough sables—evidently sables were appreciated even in those early days—to make a covering for the frosted fingers. He did it, and that was the origin of the muff.

Even if one is not prepared to accept this account of the first muff as authoritative there is one thing that is certain. It is only in very modern times that muffs have been the exclusive property of women. Up to the third quarter of the eighteenth century men were quite as addicted to them as women were.

In the wardrobe accounts of Henry, prince of Wales, for 1608 the prices of two muffs are set down. The most expensive cost £7, a very big sum in those days, and is described as being made of cloth of silver wrought with purls, plates and Venice twists of silver and gold. The other was a comparatively plain one of black satin embroidered with black silk, and its price was proportionately less, only 60 shillings.

At the time of Charles I and Charles II. there was a curious fashion of double muffs, a small one for each hand, something like a big loose cuff. The single or ordinary muffs carried by the English ladies of Hollar's etchings are of medium size and made entirely of smooth fur, arranged, as a rule, with the hair running round the muff.

At the extreme end of the century, after the advent of William of Orange, men's muffs were still small and were generally suspended from a ribbon round the neck, but in 1703 it seems to have been more usual to loop the muff to a coat button. There is a widely prevalent idea, I think, that masculine muff wearers invariably belonged to the dandy class—the fops, beaus and macaronies—but this was not actually the case, although the fashion was certainly scoffed at by some contemporary writers.

Staid and elderly gentlemen carried muffs habitually. For instance, Dr. Josiah Tucker, dean of Gloucester and a famous political economist, was so attached to his huge fur muff that he carried it even when officiating at the cathedral services. Englishmen, however, do not seem ever to have favored lace frilled muffs such as were affected by Frenchmen during the early part of the eighteenth century, but contented themselves with trimmings of ribbon bows, adornments quite sufficiently effeminate, one would think.

Muffs, both ladies' and gentlemen's, varied much in size at different times from the reign of Queen Anne onward. In 1710 they were very tiny, but grew somewhat larger during the following couple of decades. In 1740, however, they had decreased again, and a little later Horace Walpole writes of sending George Montagu "a decent smallish muff that you may put in your pocket, and it cost but 14 shillings." But by 1760 both sexes were carrying such capacious muffs that pet dogs were often concealed in their warm recesses. About this time, by the way, muffs made of feathers were introduced by reason, it is said, of an unusual scarcity of furs in the market.

In 1786 ladies' muffs—men, except such eccentric fogies as Dean Tucker, had by this time given up wearing such things—were decidedly diminutive. However, at the beginning of the nineteenth century they were again of monster proportions and so continued for about thirty years.

Two muffs of the year 1800 shown in a fashion plate of that year are of long, shaggy fur, and in the print one is colored yellow and has a bow of purple ribbon in the center, while the other is deep brown and has no trimming. Another huge muff of rough, dark fur is shown in a set of fashion plates for 1803.

A few years nearer our own time the modish muff was large, flat and so widely open at the ends that it could have afforded but scanty protection to the wrists. One example was made of ermine, a fur which was in high favor from this time up to the mid-Victorian period.—London Queen.

Buried Treasures In Morocco.

In Morocco it is customary for a man to bury most of his riches in a place known only to himself. This custom is practiced by all Moors, for they cannot trust their own family, who would murder them directly if it were known where the money was. At the death of the head of a family in Morocco digging operations commence at once, but seldom is the money discovered. There must be many fortunes buried away in odd corners of the country. An instance came under the writer's notice at one of the coast towns. During the demolition of a house a considerable sum of money was found built into the wall.—London Graphic.

A person walking at the rate of four miles per hour consumes 2,300 cubic inches of air per minute.

The "Sillinger" Stakes.

It only takes a few hours to get from any part of England to Doncaster, see the race for the St. Leger and return home. Yet in the coaching times a journey from London to Doncaster occupied a couple of days.

Taking its name from a famous Doncaster sportsman, Colonel St. Leger—properly pronounced "Sillinger"—the race is the second oldest horse racing event in the country. It was founded in 1776 and always arouses the greatest enthusiasm in the north of England. In fact, in the prerailway days laborers living fifty miles away would save up their shillings for weeks, walk to Doncaster, see the race, have a bet and walk home again.

John Scott, who in his day was visited by peers, lawyers, poets and authors of all degrees, trained sixteen St. Leger winners. There have been many memorable finishes to the race, and on one occasion a horse named Theodore, against whom the odds were quoted at 1,000 to a walking stick—officially 1,000 to 5—won handsomely.

The largest field was thirty, in 1825, and the smallest four, in 1783 and 1785. A horse named Ninety-three won in 1793.—London Saturday Review.

Armed With a Saber Hilt.

When William L. Royall of Fauquier county, Va., was seventeen years old he became a Confederate soldier. In his "Reminiscences" he says that the feats performed by the Confederate cavalry in the early part of the war were remarkable, because not one company in ten had any arms that were fit to fight with.

"When I joined my company," he writes, "they gave me a saber which, I think, was used in the Revolution, and this was the only weapon I had. One day, while my regiment was standing in a road, I bantered a comrade to see which of us could cut the largest twig from a tree. I made a powerful cut, and the blade of my saber broke off at the hilt.

"In a short time we were dismounted and ordered to clear the Yankees out of a piece of woods in skirmish formation. We marched through the woods, but fortunately no Yankees were there. I have often wondered what I should have done, armed with that saber hilt, if I had met a Yankee armed with a Springfield musket."

Bees Swarming Have Scouts.

Swarms of bees are sometimes compelled to take refuge in very remarkable shelters. A peculiar and instructive instance was observed by the writer one spring. The swarm flew over a large vineyard which contained few buildings. One of these buildings was constructed of hollow concrete blocks. The swarm flew directly toward a small hole in one of the blocks and disappeared in the interior. No doubt the swarm had rested on a tree or shrub on the preceding day and had sent out scouts to seek a home. The scouts found the little hole leading into the great cavity of the concrete block and reported their discovery to their comrades. This case furnishes indisputable proof that swarming bees really send out scouts, as they are believed to do, for the little hole could not have been discovered in the rapid and lofty flight of the swarm.—Scientific American.

Gymnastics In Switzerland.

Once in every three years the gymnasts of Switzerland and the members of the affiliated clubs in other countries, for the most part composed of Swiss residents abroad, meet to compete in the great contest known as the federal gymnastic festival. A carefully prepared series of exercises is gone through on gymnastic apparatus. There is Swiss wrestling, and there are competitions in the national games of Switzerland, including throwing the stone (a forty pound square block of granite). The festival closes with a display of combined extending exercises in which all the competitors—10,000 at times—take part. Gymnastics are the national pastimes of the Swiss boys and young men, and the clubs they form are recognized and encouraged by the federal government.—Illustrated London News.

Ambitious.

Freddy—Papa, may I study elocution? Proud Father—Indeed you may, my son. You desire to become a great orator, do you? Freddy—Yes, that's it. Proud Father—And some day make the whole world ring with your eloquence? Freddy—I shouldn't care for that. I want to be an after dinner speaker. Proud Father—Ah, you are ambitious for social distinction, are you? Freddy—No; I want the dinner.—Chicago Record-Herald.

SAGE FOR DARKENING THE HAIR.

There is nothing new about the idea of using sage for restoring the color of the hair. Our great-grandmothers kept their locks soft, dark and glossy by using a "sage tea." Whenever their hair fell out or took on a dull, faded or streaked appearance, they made a brew of sage leaves and applied it to their hair with wonderfully beneficial effect. Nowadays we don't have to resort to the old-time, tiresome method of gathering the herbs and making the brew. This is done by skillful chemists better than we could do it ourselves, and all we have to do is to call for the ready-made product. Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur, containing sage in the proper strength, with the addition of Sulphur, another old-time scalp remedy. This preparation is sold by all first-class druggists for 50c. and $1.00 a bottle, or is sent direct by the Wyeth Chemical Company, 74 Cortlandt St., New York City, upon receipt of price.

CAPELL GAS IRON.

Saves money, time and worry. Costs 2 cts. a day.

A positive Guarantee; Unqualified endorsement from all who have given it a trial. Don't walk miles during the year from the range to the ironing board. Buy a Capell, and have a clean polished surface adapted to the daintiest fabrics right at hand.

Now being demonstrated at No. 6 Washington street, Quincy. Call and see the Iron that will do your customary days ironing in one-half the time. Our finely illustrated booklet "To the Woman of the House" will be mailed free upon request, and a postal will bring our demonstrator to your home if not convenient to call.

BRIEFS

Rain or snow tonight and Sunday.

Frederick G. Katzmann of Hyde Park, the ex-Representative, will be appointed by District Attorney Barker as his assistant.

Rev. C. B. Ames assistant pastor of First church, Quincy, preaches Sunday morning at the Wollaston Unitarian church.

Arrangements are being made for the dedication of the Pilgrim monument at Provincetown to take place early in August next year. Charles W. Eliot will be the orator and it is expected that President Taft and the secretary of the navy and other cabinet officials will be present. The monument was cut by Maguire & O'Heron of East Milton.

The missionary service at 7.30 P. M. at the Swedish Baptist church will be in charge of the King's Daughters, which society helps support Miss Christina Carlson, one of its members who is a missionary among the natives of Zululand, South Africa.

The corner stone was laid last week for the new bridge at Cohasset, in the building of which Hingham, Cohasset and Hull are interested. Mr. Sandberg and Dennis Sullivan of Quincy were on hand to see that the stone was properly laid.

Embert F. Oliver of Avon was the guest of Quincy friends this week.

Mrs. H. H. Morse visited her brother at the Bridgewater Normal school Thursday.

The time the new fire engine made at the test last Wednesday with 120 pounds steam, was 11 1-4 minutes, instead of 18 minutes.

Wilbur D. Richardson of Gay street was operated on at the Massachusets Homeopathic Hospital last week Friday. His many friends will be pleased to know that he is improving fast and will be home in two weeks.

The formal opening of the new Universalist Building in Boston will occur on new Year's Day. There will be interesting exercises at various hours during the day and evening, and all the rooms will be open for inspection.

CARD OF THANKS.

I wish to express my deepest gratitude to the many Quincy friends for their sympathy and beautiful flowers in my recent bereavement.

MRS. GEORGE WILSON.

FOOTBALL RECEPTION

Q's Awarded to Players on the Team

There were over a hundred members of the Senior and Junior classes of the High school present at the annual reception tendered the foot ball team in the High school gymnasium last evening. The hall was trimmed in the school colors, red and blue, while hanging directly over the center of the hall, surrounded by red and blue, was the season's football with "1909" chalked on it in large letters.

A reception was held from 7.30 till 8 o'clock, and those in the receiving line were Miss Evalin A. Salsman, Miss Clara E. Thompson, Miss Marie Bass, Mrs. Leslie L. Cleveland, Mrs. Melvin T. Holbrook, Miss Lila R. Birge and Albert Barbour, superintendent of schools. The ushers were members of the two classes: Walter Lakin, Theodore Corey, Clarence Armstrong, Charles Sayward, Russell Bates and Aaron Gould.

Dancing was enjoyed until 9.30, when Mr. Cleveland announced that the presentation of Q's would be made. In speaking of the team, he said that the school had put out a team the past season which although light had held its own remarkably well; they had played a hard schedule.

In the awarding of Q's Leon Brown, who for three seasons has had the misfortune to get laid up in the middle of the practice and thus fell short every year of a "Q" was awarded one by the Athletic committee. Mr. Cleveland also thanked the Alumni for their exorts in behalf of the team the past season, and also Eddie Burns who although not an alumnus, did a great deal for the team.

The Q's were then awarded to the following: William Manning Charles Sayward, Russell Bates, "Busty" Arthur, Harold Hill, James Hill, Frank Harmon, Frank Tirrell, Andrew Bugler Jack Pfaffman, Paul Blackmur, Tommy Veal, Phil Rice, Everett Prout, Harold Prout Ernest Rich, Dick Favorite and Leon Brown.

Following the presentation of Q's "Babe" Marceau led the fellows in the Q. H. S. yell and then cheered Captain Bates and Mr. Cleveland. Dancing was resumed and continued until 10.30. Punch was served during the evening. The committee in charge of arrangements for the two classes included Miss Jean Arthur, Miss Daisy Brooks, Miss Bertha Given.

DRAWING SCHOOL EXHIBITION.

The Industrial Evening Drawing School maintained by the city will hold a public exhibition in its room in the High school building next Tuesday evening. This exhibition will include both free-hand and mechanical work and will give an exceptionally good idea of the amount and grade of the work that has been done during the term. The hours of exhibition are from 7.30 to 9, and all who are interested are urged to attend.

TWO NEW BATTLESHIPS.

The Navy department sent its budget to Congress yesterday. It calls for two new battleships and one repair ship.

—W. E. Eustis was elected commodore of the Beverly Yacht club at the anual meeting yesterday.

THAYER ACADEMY NOTES.

Last Friday the girls' gymnasium class, under the supervision of Miss Helen Jones, held in their gym a fancy dancing exhibition for the benefit of the public. As there were quite a few young ladies in this exhibition much interest was shown by the large attendance which mostly consisted of parents.

This being the first one held of its kind in the school all enjoyed it very much and wished there might follow similar exhibitions.

Last Saturday the girls' basket ball team played their first real important game of the season. Their opponents were the Oliver Ames' team of North Easton. Many realized the fact that the North Easton girls had a good team and came to see how the Thayer girls compared with them. Long before the game was finished they were convinced that Thayer had the better team. In spite of Thayer's superiority the visiting team played a very good game and deserved all they won. The line up is as follows:

| THAYER | | NORTH EASTON |
|---|---|---|
| Miss H. Kingberry | lg | lf Miss D. Sylvester |
| Miss M. Heald | rg | rf Miss L. Omert |
| | | rf Miss S. Hanson |
| Miss E. Kimball | c | c Miss M. Healy |
| Miss D. Faxon | lf | lg Miss G. Roch |
| Miss E. Borden | rf | rg Miss M. Spooner |

Goals from floor: E. Kimball 5; E. Borden 1; M. Healy 2; S. Hanson 2. Goals from free tires. D. Sylvester 2. Total field goals. Thayer 6; North Easton 4. Total goals from free tries North Easton 2. Two fifteen minute halves. Score 12-10. Referees, Helen Jones, M. Scarlan. Timers, R. Kingbery, R. E. Woodbury. Scorer, Harold Wales Alden.

The game was followed by an informal dance after which the assembly broke up.

The boys' basket ball team were unable to play their schedule game with Scituate because of cancellation on the part of Scituate. Their reason was that they were unable to get a hall to practice in for the season. A very good reason for the team.

NEW PRESIDENT.

To the many residents who took pleasure in following the fortunes of various horses at South Weymouth during last season and previously, it will be interesting to note the fact that Harry C. Thayer of Safford street, South Braintree, has been elected president of the Weymouth Agricultural and Industrial society. A neighboring publication states that this election may mean much for the development of driving horses in this section.

Mr. Thayer is a prominent member of the Old Colony Driving club and is also a member of the Gentleman's driving club of Dorchester.

The Old Colony club was organized about two years ago and at present has a membership of one hundred. The races of the club have been held on the tracks of the Weymouth fair grounds and have been largely attended by our citizens and members of their families.

The article also stated that with Mr. Thayer as president of the agricultural society it is thought that the two organizations will work along harmonious lines, so that the driving and trotting horses will be developed in the Old Colony district. It is the hope of members of the club that the track of the Old Colony club will be as famous in seasons to come as some of the bigger ones in various parts of the country. Mr. Thayer is the owner of Altro L. and is an enthusiastic horseman as was his father before him.

DEATH OF FORMER RESIDENT.

S. Warren Leonard of Neponset street, Dorchester, who passed away at his home yesterday was at one time a resident of Quincy. He was born in Quincy 89 years ago, and one of his earliest recollections was the visit of Lafayette to the Quincy mansion on his second visit to this country in 1824, when he met the distinguished Frenchman.

Mr. Leonard married Emmaline Fields of Dorchester in 1858. She was a lineal descendant of John Alden and Priscilla Mullen of Mayflower fame. His father was a violent abolitionist and the young man followed his example, making speeches and traveling about in the interests of the cause. At that time he was a personal friend of Wendell Phillips and William Lloyd Garrison. He leaves two sisters, Mrs. Mary L. Spear of Nebraska and Mrs. Charles Keener of New York.

BOSTON AMUSEMENTS

Boston Arena.

The new ice skating rink now in process of construction at St. Botolph street and Massachusetts avenue in Boston, will be ready early in the New Year. It has been planned as the home of the three great winter sports of skating, hockey and curling. The Arena is being constructed of brick, steel and concrete; will be fireproof and fitted with all modern conveniences for the enjoyment of the skaters. Perfect ice is assured at all times ,the air will be warm enough so that the skaters may dispense with heavy clothing, and all danger of drowning is absolutely eliminated. The Boston Arena probably will be one of the most popular and successful of Boston's many amusement enterprises.

Castle Square Theatre.

It is a merry and laugh-giving play that Mr. Craig is to produce at the Castle Square theatre next week. "The Man With a Past" is the work of Harry and Edward Poulton, and the heroine is a beautiful young woman who, though happily married, cannot rest content unless her husband will reveal to her some of the doings of his bachelor youth. It happens that he is a most exemplary fellow, with no past to reveal, but in order to keep peace in the family he is obliged to invent exploits on his past that will satisfy her craving for the sensational. Herein lies the humor of the play, much of the fun coming from the fact that the husband's business partner has been a gay old boy who is more than willing that his sins should be shouldered by another. The play is a screaming farce from beginning to end, and strange to say the wife is made happy when she learns of her husband's apocryphal misdeeds. It is a pleasant plot with not a serious moment in it, and it bids fair to furnish as much entertainment as was some weeks ago given at the Castle Square by "A Bachelor's Moneymoon." During the week of December 20th, the Castle Square will be closed until Friday evening in order that thorough preparations may be given to Mr. Craig's Christmas extravanganza. It will be a novelty from start to finish, filled with music, spectacle and humor, and its title "1915" is evidence of its local appeal. The opening performance will be given Christmas Eve, and it is the entire work of Theodore Friebus.

MILTON.

At the regular meeting of the trustees of the Milton Savings Bank, Thursday afternoon, William B. Thurber tendered his resignation and it was accepted. Mr. Thurber resigned because of the increased demands upon his time caused by his election as treasurer of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Selectman Jesse B. Baxter was elected treasurer to succeed Mr. Thurber.

Mrs. Janet Dallas, widow of William Dallas died Monday at her home on Granite avenue, East Milton. Mrs. Dallas had attained the advanced age of 84 years and 6 months. She was a native of Scotland and daughter of James Moodie. Funeral services were held Wednesday and the burial was in Hall cemetery in West Quincy.

Milton auditors are asking for bids for printing the annual town reports.

A collection of books suitable for Christmas presents for children is on exhibition at the Public Library.

The Christmas sale Wednesday evening in the vestry of the church of our Saviour was well patronized.

BIRTHDAY OF NONAGENARIAN

Mrs. George L. Gill Kindly Remembered

Loving hearts units and say,
May Heaven bless thy natal day;
Angels guard thy footsteps dear
Safely through the coming year.
Peace and joy and faith abide
In the happy eventide;
May the sunset skies be bright
With the rays of heavenly light.
And the lingering twilight be,
The happiest days of life to thee.

This little gem written by Mrs. Martha S. Kingman of Maple street was taken on Saturday to her neighbor, Mrs. George L. Gill, who reached her 90th birthday, and voices the wishes of a large circle of acquaintances for Mrs. Gill is a Quincy born woman and has lived in the same neighborhood all her life, and has endeared herself to many.

About fifty friends called on her Saturday and Sunday, and took with them many acceptable and pleasing tokens, including flowers, confectionery, souvenir cards, preserves an eiderdown jacket, hot water bottle. The George L. Gill Rebekah lodge sent a beautiful bunch of pinks, and there was a Jerusalem cherry tree with this inscription:

"Happy greeting to Mrs. George L. Gill from the First Parish Sunday School on her 90th birthday," which was delivered personally on Sunday by Supt. Charles H. Johnson accompanied by two boys and two girls of the Sunday school.

Last Friday Mrs. Gill took a cold, but rallied on Saturday and enjoyed the visits of all callers, but the exertion proved a little too much and on Sunday she was unable to see her callers. However, she is unusually well and active for her years, always bright and active, and able to attend to all business affairs. Once a week on Thursday evening, she enjoys keenly a game of whist. Her partner is usually Miss Ella Stetson, and they play against Mrs. Richardson and Mrs. H. O. Studley.

Among the callers were little Bee Johnson, E. E. Marsh, Mrs. J. Q. A. Field, Joseph T. F. Burrell of Dorchester, Mrs. Charles H. Porter, Miss Dora French, Dr. Burke, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Brown of Ashmont, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas F. Fenno, and Mrs. Mary Conners who for 40 years lived in the family. Miss Hattie Burrell assisted Mrs. Richardson and Miss Connor in receiving the guests.

Mrs. Gill is the widow of George L. Gill, for many years treasurer of the Quincy Savings Bank, a town clerk of Quincy, and a most respected citizen. She is the daughter of the late Joseph and Lucretia (Marsh) Burrell, and was born in the house on Chestnut street near her present home, now occupied by Mrs. Mitchell Willis. When 9 years old the family moved to Hancock street opposite the Daily Ledger office, Mr. Burrell having built a fine residence which later became a hotel and some years ago was destroyed by fire. It is reported that Mr. Burrell purchased in 1828 the lot at the corner of Hancock and Granite streets for $1,000 that the lot then contained the site of Hotel Greenleaf and all the land in the rear to the railroad.

It was in 1828 that the present Unitarian church was erected, and Mrs. Gill then a young girl of 9 years attended the corner stone exercises, and while health permitted was a regular attendant at the church.

Mr. and Mrs. Gill were married Oct. 14, 1846. Two children born to them died in infancy, and a son, Walter Gill died in his 26th year. Mr. Gill passed away in 1895.

Mrs. Gill and her sister, Mrs. Caroline B. Richardson are all that remain of their father's family, which included nine sons and daughters. The two sisters live together on Maple street and are very pleasantly situated in a house built by Mr. Gill in 1848. Miss Annie Connor has for a number of years been their very faithful housekeeper and attendant, as was her mother for 40 years before. On Aug. 24, 1909, Mrs. Gill enjoyed her first automobile ride as the guest of her neice Mrs. Arthur E. Gill of West Newton. The indications are that Mrs. Gill may live to be a centenarian.

MRS. JONES DEAD.

Mrs. Elizabeth, widow of Owen W. Jones, passed away this morning at her home 194 School street in her 71st year. Mrs. Jones' husband was for many years one of Quincy's successful business men. He conducted a grocery store on Granite street for many years, and did a thriving business. He later built a substantial residence on School street which his widow occupied. Mrs. Jones leaves one daughter, Miss Mercy B. Jones, who resided at home. Funeral services will be held from her late home Wednesday afternoon at 2.30.

CHRISTMAS CHEER.

Following out its usual custom, Quincy lodge of Elks is preparing to make happy the homes of many of the worthy poor of Quincy and vicinity with Christmas baskets. The baskets are distributed after careful investigation and conference with the charitable organizations and clergy so that they may reach those most deserving. The custom of distributing Christmas baskets is in keeping with the precepts of the order, charity and benevolence, and has been faithfully carried out every year by Quincy lodge. Last year over one hundred needy families were made happy and it is hoped to provide even more this year. The committee having charge of the collection of contributions are George W. Nightingale, Robert J. Williams, Morris I. Gatcomb, George A. Jordan, William Callahan and Leo J. McMaster.

NOT A CANDIDATE.

Councilman Joseph L. Whiton, Jr., whose name has been mentioned in connection with the presidency of the next City Council, says that he is not a candidate for the position. Councilman Whiton says that he never seriously aspired to be president.

Several Councilmen had asked him to run, but he told them that he would not ask any man to vote for him. If the office were handed him on a silver plate he would take it, but as far as getting out and hustling for it he would not do so.

ADDRESSES AND TOASTS

After the Fore River Launching Saturday

After the launching of the Herman Frasch on Saturday the sponsor was presented by his mother with a gold chain. On one end was a medalion with a red devil, and on the other end an anchor. The gift was encased in a teek wood box.

F. C. Dumaine, vice president of the Fore River Company presided at the dinner exercises and welcomed the guests. Brief addresses were made by H. Whiting, general manager of the Sulphur Company; J. V. Davies, the designer of the Frasch; H. G. Smith, general manager of the Fore River Co.; Col. George Taylor, assistant United States treasurer; and Capt. J. H. O'Leary of the Herman Frasch. Toasts were drunk to the President of the United States, President Bowles, the officers of the Sulphur Company, Capt. O'Leary, the workmen of the Fore River Co., and to the sponsor and his mother.

CAMPBELL ALIAS SNELL.

Sergt. McAnarney of the Rochester, N. Y., police department, was in Quincy on Sunday and paid a visit to police headquarters. Sergt. McAnarney came on with requisition papers for Leo Campbell, who is serving a term in Dedham jail for larceny in Quincy. Campbell's term will expire in a few days and he will be arrested as he leaves jail. Campbell, whose right name is Snell, according to Sergt. McAnarney, is well known in Rochester, N. Y., where he is wanted for larceny. His home is said to be in Kansas City, Mo.

The Quincy Fleet Built at Fore River

Business has been good at the Fore River Ship Yard in this city the past year, although some have thought differently. There is no better index than the list of launchings. In 1905 there were but two, in 1906 the total was 7, in 1907 it increased to 11, in 1908 there were 15, and thus far to date, 1909, there have been 13, including the largest ship of all, the battleship North Dakota

The Quincy fleet now numbers 58, including four battleships, the Rhode Island, the New Jersey, the Vermont and the North Dakota. Also the U. S. cruiser Des Moines, the U. S. cruiser Salem, the U. S. cruiser Birmingham, two torpedo boat destroyers, artillery steamers, lightships, and several submarine boats for the government, and several steamers, car floats, lighters, etc., for the merchant service. All these are steel ships. The list to date follows:

David Warfield.

Famous Actor of Roles Requiring Delicate Handling.

The prominent actor, who has acquired fame and wealth by his careful handling of parts that require delicate treatment, was born in San Francisco Nov. 28, 1866. Before his success in serious roles he was well known on the stage as a comedian.

BRIEFS

No meeting of the City Council tonight, but an adjourned meeting will be held Tuesday evening.

Mrs. Charles K. Dunn of Newport avenue entertained her sister, Mrs. Kenyon of Lynn, last week.

It looked this morning as though Quincy was to have an old-fashioned snow storm before the day was out.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry W. Mattfield of Berlin street are receiving congratulations upon the birth of a son, born Friday, Dec. 10.

Among those present at the annual reunion of 32d regiment at the American house, Boston, Saturday, on the 47th anniversary of the battle of Fredericksburg, was Henry K. Ellis of Wollaston, a member of Co. E.

Employees of the Quincy division of the Old Colony street railway showed their interest in the anti-tuberculosis work in this city by allowing the cashier to give them Red Cross stamps for the odd change due them in their pay envelopes last week.

SURPRISE PARTY.

Young friends of Miss Hadassah Clifford of Arlington street gave her a surprise party Friday evening and presented her with a signet ring. A pleasant time was spent listening to music and playing games. At the party were: Phoebe MacDonald, Lydia Oneil, Lillian Purdon, Gertrude Sanford, Hazel Wardwell, Beatrice Brown, Beulah Collett, Eileen Curwen, Dorothy Miller, Albert Bryant, Clarence Brown, Welden Pratt, William Cahill, Millard Sumner, Hayden Croucher, Elmer Hill, Chester Brown, Emanuel Thompson.

FRILLS AND FRILLS.

Although a number of girls have taken up the maline bow as a steady piece of wearing apparel, fashion has gone against it. This should not deter a woman from wearing it if she likes it, but its very popularity caused its speedy death.

As for the frill down the front of the blouse or coat or afternoon gown or fur wrap, there is no end to it. It is the accessory of the day. It lures every penny out of the purse, and it is twisted and turned into such fanciful shapes that it becomes a temptation.

SHORTAGE OF $4932

Charge Against Clerk of United States District Tribunal

Boston, Dec. 13.—Frank H. Mason, clerk of the United States district court of Massachusetts, who was secretly indicted by the federal grand jury on charges involving an alleged shortage of $4932.54, will contend that his returns to the government were adequate and legal and that he has not been guilty of any breach of the law.

The four indictments against him, three alleging embezzlement of office funds and the fourth charging perjury in three counts for alleged false oath in certifying to amounts in his reports to the attorney general of the United States, are said to deal with bankruptcy and general fees.

An arrest was waived through courtesy to Mason. He was merely notified to appear before Judge Aldrich in the court where he had presided as clerk and, after a brief proceeding, was admitted to $5000. Sureties were furnished.

FROM LOOM TO STAGE

English Cotton Mill Operative May Soon Shine as an Opera Star

London, Dec. 13.—Mrs. D'Oyly Carte believes she has discovered a jewel in the homely setting of a Lancashire cotton mill.

While visiting Stockport, Mrs. Carte heard of a singing girl named Anna Bethell, who worked at a loom. The girl was invited to sing for Mrs. Carte, and was found to have a splendid soprano voice and of so cultured a quality that it was hard to believe its possessor had not studied.

Moreover Miss Bethell was discovered to be the possessor of considerable dramatic ability, and Mrs. Carte at once engaged her to appear in one of her touring companies.

NEGROES BEATEN IN BOSTON STREETS

Fifteen Roughly Treated by Band of White Raiders

Boston, Dec. 13.—Some fifteen negroes were knocked down, brutally beaten and kicked, many of them into insensibility, shortly after midnight by a band of white men who raided that section of the city near Castle square, shouting "Death to negroes," and attacking every negro who put in an appearance.

The negro baiting band met stubborn resistance from some of the victims, who pulled razors and pistols in attempts to defend themselves, but in no instance was the resistance successful. The attackers were inflamed by the reports of outrages in Savannah, Ga., the previous day.

Not until no more negroes could be found in the South End streets did the band desist in its outrages. The raiders met no opposition on the part of the police, who appeared on the scene only after the fighting was over and the band had disappeared, having ranged the streets unmolested for half an hour.

During this period the residents of the negro quarter were thoroughly terrorized, fearing attacks upon their homes, and large crowds of white people gathered in the South End streets to watch the fight.

NINETY-TWO-POUND COD

Granddad of "Cape Cod Turkey" Family Lands at Boston's Fish Pier

Boston, Dec. 13.—The grandfather of all the codfish family was brought into T wharf by Antone Lawrence, one of the Portuguese running to the fish pier. It measured five feet two inches in length, weighed ninety-two pounds and had a head almost as large as a man's.

It was the largest cod landed here for more than forty years, and was second only to one caught by Captain Lorenzo D. Baker. Just after the war Baker brought in a codfish that measured five feet and six inches and weighed 110 pounds.

KILLED BY SISTER'S DOG

Man Horribly Mutilated by Bull Terrier After Falling In Fit

New York, Dec. 13.—When Mrs. Emma Schoueman returned to her flat in Harlem she found her pet bull terrier, Buster, covered with blood and crouched whining under a table. Passing to an adjoining room she found her brother, Carl Limperi, 43 years old, dead on the floor, his face horribly mutilated by the dog's teeth.

It is believed that Limperi, who was subject to fits, fell unconscious and was attacked by the animal.

Savings Sewed In a Mattress

Boston, Dec. 13.—The sum of $933.55, partly in gold specie, was found sewed in the mattress of Vincent Piesto, a former fireman of the tug Cuba, who was buried yesterday. Piesto was without a relative in this country. He was accidentally drowned last Thursday.

Killed Fiancee and Self

Passaic, N. J., Dec. 13.—Rather than wait for $100 Peter Hoppan shot dead the woman he was to marry in a week. She explained that his loan went for her trousseau, but when she could not pay he refused to listen. Then he blew out his own brains.

FITZGERALD AND STORROW

Rival Forces Aligning In Boston's Mayoralty Campaign

BATTLE ROYAL IS PROMISED

Hibbard and Taylor to Be Reckoned With In the Final Sprint—"Frenzied Finance" and Alleged Fraud In Nomination Papers Furnish Issues—Financier Collecting Material Preparatory to Raising State Street Lid

Boston, Dec. 13.—Though the city campaign is hardly under way, sensations are casting their shadows before. There are two of them that are now attracting attention—the nomination paper frauds and the exposure of State street's frenzied finance. The latter is looked forward to with great interest.

As soon as it was demonstrated that James J. Storrow, of the banking firm of Lee, Higginson & Co., was to be his chief opponent, John F. Fitzgerald sent an open letter to Storrow, in which among other propositions he asked the banker candidate to agree with him to limit his campaign expenditures to $10,000, one-fourth of the mayor's salary for four years. Storrow replied in an open letter that he would not agree to the proposition, intimating that he did not believe Fitzgerald would stand by the agreement if he made it and also saying that he intended to expose Fitzgerald's record at city hall.

This brought an open letter from Fitzgerald, in which he said he welcomed such an attack, inasmuch as the finance commission had spent something more than $100,000 in investigating his record and in putting one innocent man in jail. For his part, he said, he proposed to take the lid off State street.

Now it is understood that a well known Boston financier who knows the "inside" of about all that has taken place on State street for thirty years has been collecting material for one of the most sensational political campaigns ever waged in Boston. Fitzgerald is said to be in possession of some of the material. Statements and affidavits from those who think they have been "stung" in financial deals are said to have been obtained already.

Among politicians the belief is that the removal of the lid from Sate street is likely to be more far fetching on the stump than an attack upon Fitzgerald's record when he was mayor, for everything that the finance commission could rake up about it has already been published, while the State street matter is likely to be new to newspaper readers, as a real peep behind the fabric that screens the machinery of "frenzied finance" from the vulgar view.

The election commissioners alleged that they had unearthed what they thought was a new get-rich-quick scheme. Under this new "Plan 2," put through by the uplifters to eliminate politics and bosses and money from the election of a city government, it is necessary to obtain 5000 signatures of registered voters to get nomination papers in order to run for mayor and for certain other city offices, and none of these voters can sign more than one nomination paper for mayor. Fitzgerald gathered in some 14,000 names before the other candidates got started.

Up to the present time the only candidate for mayor who has obtained the requisite number of signatures and has had them certified by the election commission is Fitzgerald. The others have until the 17th of this month in which to obtain signatures and file their papers.

Many hired canvassers are said to have been at work, and rumors that frauds had been perpetrated by some of them have reached the ears of the election commissioners. They say they discovered three men in their office copying names from the voting lists. The men were promptly nabbed, and it is alleged that they declared they were to receive $15 per hundred for getting signatures.

Other alleged frauds in connection with nomination papers have been placed before the grand jury, and "Plan 2" as a purifier and deodorizer of municipal politics is already regarded with some suspicion.

F. J. Brand and Matthew Cummings have withdrawn from the mayoralty race, the latter only quitting the fight on Saturday. This leaves Storrow, Fitzgerald, Mayor Hibbard and Nathaniel Taylor still to be reckoned with.

Yale Cuts Sporting Schedules

New Haven, Dec. 13.—Athletic reform at Yale is not limited to football. Winter spoorts as well as the gridiron game have been curtailed, and the faculty restrictions on the basketball and hockey teams have resulted in a cutting down of the schedules materially.

Cruisers Sail For Wireless Test

Provincetown, Mass., Dec. 13.—The scout cruisers Salem and Birmingham, which are to act as stations in a series of long distance wireless tests in charge of naval officials, sailed Sunday. The tests will extend over several weeks.

GETS LIFE SENTENCE

Harmon Admits He Is Guilty of Murder In Second Degree

Cambridge, Mass., Dec. 13.—James M. Harmon, Jr., the youth charged with murdering Maude M. Hartley by shooting her at the corner of Cherry street and Highland avenue, Somerville, on Dec. 18, 1908, and who for two weeks had been on trial in the Middlesex superior court, changed his plea of not guilty of murder in the first degree to guilty of murder in the second degree. He was at once sentenced to life imprisonment in the state prison.

The sensational and unannounced termination of the case just as it was about to go to the jury came as a surprise. Never before in the history of Middlesex county has a lesser plea been accepted so late in the proceedings.

At the conclusion of the reading of the sentence, Harmon sat back in his chair, thrust his hands into his trousers pockets and leaned his head against the cage, the least concerned apparently of all in the courtroom.

ENGINE FAILS AT SEA

Accident Results In French Liner Reaching Port Two Days Late

New York, Dec. 13.—The twin-screw French liner Lorraine steamed up the bay to her pier with her starboard engine working triple expansion and her port engine working compound. She made nearly her whole passage in this misfit fashion.

A week ago, in the height of a heavy gale, the intermediate cylinder of the port engine went out of commission. The starboard engine was kept working while for twenty hours the engine room force labored to disconnect the crippled cylinder and couple the high and low pressure cylinders into a compound unit.

The Lorraine was two days late owing to her accident.

MARINES ARE DRAFTED FROM NEW ENGLAND

Hurry Call For Men to Be Sent to Southern Waters

Boston, Dec. 13.—In heavy marching order two detachments of marines from the Charlestown and Portsmouth, N. H., navy yards will leave Boston this afternoon for Philadelphia, where they will embark on the cruiser Prairie for Nicaragua.

Word was received in Charlestown yesterday and not since the first detachment left the yard for Cuba in 1898 has there been such excitement. Every man in the place wanted the chance of going to Panama, for they expect to "mix it up" with Zelaya's army.

The drawing on New England for its quota of the 700 marines who will be rushed to Colon on the Prairie wafts a greater interest in the doings of Zelaya to this territory. A hurry call upon the New England navy yards for marines was sent out from Washington yesterday.

SENTENCE COMPLETED

Express Clerk Who Stole $101,000 Is Released From Penitentiary

Pittsburg, Dec. 13.—Edward G. Cunliffe, an Adams Express clerk, who absconded with a package containing $101,000, in October, 1905, was released from the penitentiary here after serving a little more than four years. He left for Bridgeport, Conn., to join his wife, who is with relatives in that city.

Following a search in this country and South America, Cunliffe was arrested at Bridgeport, Conn., his former home, having been recognized by an acquaintance, who informed the police.

INVENTION OF FRENCHMEN

It Will Enable Persons Talking by Telephone to See Each Other

Paris, Dec. 13.—Two Frenchmen have invented an apparatus for transmitting by wire the reflected likenesses of persons standing at either end of a telephone to see as well as hear each other.

The inventors are G. Bignoux and M. Fournier, both well known for research. The picture is transmitted by light waves over the wire, just as sound waves are transmitted.

TO VISIT THE HUB

Liliuokalani Also Has an Affair at Washington to Attend To

San Francisco, Dec. 13.—Ex-Queen Liliuokalani of Hawaii arrived on the liner Mongolia from Honolulu on her way to Washington and Boston. She will remain in San Francisco until after the holidays.

At the capital she will await some action on her claim for $250,000 for seizure by the United States of what are termed the crowned lands in Hawaii.

Five of Family Drowned

Kent, O., Dec. 13.—The opening of the skating season claimed five victims near here and nearly obliterated a family. The dead are: Frank Cormany, 32 years old; Helen, Flora and Mabel Cormany, 9, 7 and 4 years old his three daughters, and Russell Cormany, 18 years old, unmarried, his brother.

A MEAL WITH A MOOR

The Repast Began With Green Tea Served In Glasses.

FOOD EATEN WITH FINGERS.

Table Manners In a Moorish Gentleman's House—A Particular Mark of Favor by the Host to His Guests That Is Not Always Appreciated.

During my stay in Fez I took every opportunity of gaining a closer insight into the domestic life of the inhabitants, and for that reason, writes Lawrence Harris in the London Graphic, I heartily accepted an invitation to dine with Abdullah el Fasi, the minister for foreign affairs.

On arriving at his home I was ushered into a large room in which were seated five or six guests of high rank. Abdullah took me by the hand and gravely introduced me to the company. A silken cushion was placed on the divan, upon which I seated myself.

The repast commenced with green tea served in small glasses. The custom of preparing this is peculiar to the country. To the principal native guest is given the honor of making the tea. In this case it was Raisuli, who, being under British protection, had been invited to dinner in my honor. He accepted the invitation to do the honors of the evening and ordered the negress to place the native brass tray in front of where he sat cross legged on the divan. The methods of proceeding are not such as would recommend themselves to an English tea party.

Measuring out the tea in his hand, he dropped it in the pot. The negress slave then poured boiling water over it. This was swilled around and the water poured off. The pot was then filled with huge lumps of loaf sugar, broken roughly from a sugar loaf, and a little mint was added. A small quantity of the concoction was poured into a glass, sipped and poured back again into the pot. This process was continued until the required delicacy of flavor was reached.

The company then drank the customary three glasses of this sirupy mixture, drawing it through their teeth with a sound like a horse drinking. As each glass was finished and replaced in the tray it was refilled and handed back by the "keeper of the pot," who was supposed to remember to whom each glass belonged. At a sign from the host the tray was removed, and another slave approached each person with a brass bowl, soap and towel and a bronze kettle of warm water. The guests washed their right hands preparatory to the dinner.

We all sat around a small table about six inches high, upon which was placed the dish. The courses were many and varied. As says the Hadith, "The blessing of God rests on the food taken with the fingers," so all good Mohammedans follow the words of their prophet. No knife must be used on bread, and the small round loaves are broken up and handed around. The tajin, or stew, is not difficult to manipulate, although the olives floating in argon oil slip through your fingers. Miniature tugs of war occur with your vis-a-vis in the effort to dismember a fowl or divide tough meat.

As a particular mark of favor the host will from time to time place before you a little titbit which he has torn off with his greasy fingers. However your stomach rebels against it, you have to swallow the morsel. During the meal the national dish of couscous is invariably served. This dish is made from broken grains of wheat specially prepared by the women. It is served piled up like a huge cone, with the meat on top. Each person scoops out his own little hole in the side and must not trespass on his neighbor's portion.

To the inexperienced it is difficult to manage the couscous without making an awful mess of it. The small grain must be judiciously compressed into a loose ball and then shot into the mouth with the back of the thumb. The Moors take extreme delight in watching the ineffectual efforts of Europeans who are in difficulties with their couscous. Moors are very great eaters, and little conversation is carried on during the meal. A bowl of water is passed from hand to hand for those who require drink. The last course finished, the bowl and water are once more requisitioned and the hands and mouth washed.

The Poor Man's Gym.

"Would you mind telling me," asked Mrs. Bourdalot, glancing admiringly at the athletic shoulders of the prospective boarder, "how do you keep in such splendid physical condition?"

"I go through a few gymnastic exercises every morning," confessed the young man, flushing.

"Well, I'm sorry, but we can't board you. I've had the bathroom monopolized that way before."—Kansas City Times.

Lord Curzon of Kedleston.

English Statesman Prominent In the Budget Fight.

Lord Curzon of Kedleston, prominent in the discussion of the proposed British budget, which embodies new schemes of taxation, is known to American readers as the husband of the former Miss Leiter of Chicago, who died a few years ago. Lord Curzon was formerly viceroy of India and is known as an able administrator and student of politics.

BRIEFS

Christmas next week Saturday.

The afternoons commence to lengthen this week.

Mrs. Franklin A. Howe is seriously ill at her home on Newport avenue.

Winter begins Dec. 22—Old Farmer's Almanac.

There was a partial eclipse of the sun on Sunday, but was invisible in New England.

Miss Hazel Wardwell of Braintree spent the week end with Miss Hadassah Clifford, Arlington street.

On Friday the Quincy council team will bowl the Columbus club at Dorchester.

Elizabeth M. Brigham has sold her lot of land on Beach street to James McTear.

Miss Henrietta B. Mischler, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew M. Mischler of Whitwell street passed away on Sunday. Funeral services will be held Tuesday morning.

STATE TAX RATES.

The highest tax-rate in the state is in the town of Merricac, Essex county, where it is $27. The lowest is $2.42 in the town of Gosnold, Dukes county. It ranges from $3.70 to $9.50 in 13 towns from $10 to $14.80 in one city and 89 towns; from $15 to $19.80 in 24 cities and 149 towns and from $20 to $25.50 in eight cities and 68 towns.

CHRISTMAS PACKAGES.

Not to be opened until Christmas day or similar inscription, may be written only on such parcels as bear postage at first-class rates; but packages that are rated at third class or fourth class rates may bear the same inscription providing that it is printed or stamped on them. When written on the parcel with pen or pencil the words are held to be a personal communication from the sender to the addressee, thus making the matter subject to first class rates.

NAGEL OFFERS SUGGESTIONS

Annual Report Deals With Many Matters of Interest

CONTROL OF CORPORATIONS

Can Best Be Accomplished by Federal System of Statutory Publicity—Facts Concerning Immigration and Naturalization—Law Relating to White Slave Trade Needs Amending—Concerning Alien Contract Law

Washington, Dec. 13.—Legislation to create a department of the government which would do for the whole country what the bureau of corporations has been doing in specified instances, and compel complete publicity in the management of interstate corporations, is one of the leading recommendations contained in the annual report of Secretary Nagel of the department of commerce and labor, made public last night.

The secretary recommends the further development of the bureau of corporations. At the end of this fiscal year the department still has on hand investigations of the lumber and steel industries, the International Harvester company, concentration of waterpower ownership, transportation by water in the United States. It was still continuing its investigations of the tobacco industry, the operation of cotton exchanges and state systems of corporate taxation.

On the subject of government control of the financial and industrial forces, Nagel says some terse things and makes some important recommendations.

The prime need of two things is emphasized. First, reliable information upon which the government may take legislative and administrative action, and second, reliable information in a concise and available form to serve for the basis of public opinion.

Secretary Nagel believes the time has come for a far wider and more complete application of those principles. This, the secretary recommends, can be accomplished only by a definite federal system of statutory publicity, by which all important corporations engaged in interstate commerce will be obliged to report at stated intervals to a federal agency, such as the bureau of corporations, the essential facts regarding their organization, management and condition. This, the secretary believes, will accomplish for the whole country what the bureau of corporations has been doing in specific cases.

In the bureau of immigration and naturalization the need of facilities to meet growing conditions is recognized. Improvements have been made in the immigrant stations all over the country and will be carried on. In all during the fiscal year 944,235 aliens entered the country, and 67 percent of them came from Russia and the countries of southern Europe.

A total of 29 percent of illiterates is shown by the report, which is something of an increase over the previous year. The coming of these aliens, however, brought $17,331,828 into the country, and they possessed an average of $23.50 each.

It is calculated by the department, however, that 33 percent of all these aliens were assisted with money to reach this country.

In one portion of his report Nagel takes up the white slave traffic. The department's investigations show that the traffic in immoral women is an established and extensive one and and is by no means confined to trading in women who have been imported. In includes alien women who have entered the country in a regular way and American women as well.

The secretary recommends that the law be amended to prohibit the bringing of women for such purposes from one state into another state and that $50,000 be appropriated to enforce all federal laws against that traffic, which the secretary says is an organized and extensive business.

The need of strengthening the law against alien contract labor is declared to be pressing. The present laws do not always bring to justice those responsible for the importation of the men.

The secretary suggests that it would be well to preinvestigate the claims of employers who seek the exception of the law which allows foreign contract labor when labor of a like kind cannot be found in this country. The need of amending the Chinese immigration laws to fit conditions existing is urged.

The works of the division of naturalization are reviewed with the statement that there were 143,212 declarations of intentions filed during the last year, an increase of more than 6000 over the year preceding.

Boston Fireman Killed

Boston, Dec. 13.—While driving engine 11 through Lubec street, East Boston, to what proved to be a false alarm of fire, James B. Akerly, hoseman and spare driver of the company, was thrown from the seat of the engne and run over by one of the wheels of the machine. The right side of his face and head were terribly crushed, death resulting shortly after.

NINE MEN FROZEN STIFF

Corpses of Men From Lake Erie Ferry Are Found In a Yawl

Erie, Pa., Dec. 13.—With her flag at half-mast, the state fisheries boat Commodore Perry, Captain Driscoll commanding, brought to this port the frozen corpses of nine of the crew of the Bessemer and Marquette ferry No. 2, which left Conneaut, O., Tuesday morning, carrying thirty-two men, and which has probably foundered in the middle of Lake Erie.

As the lookout on the Perry sighted a tiny half-sunken yawl fifteen miles off this port at about noon Sunday, orders were given to steam down upon the object. As the Perry came abreast of the drifting and half waterlogged yawl, the men gathered at the side of the fish boat saw that they had arrived too late. The nine occupants of the boat were frozen stiff in death. Taking the yawl in tow, the Perry made all steam for this port, arriving here last evening.

CITIZENSHIP FOR THOSE DESIRING IT

How General Edwards Would Treat Porto Ricans

Washington, Dec. 13.—Extension of American citizenship to Porto Ricans for those who desire it, and without forcing it upon those who do not, is recommended for Porto Rico by General Edwards, chief of the bureau of insular affairs, in his annual report to the secretary of war.

In speaking of the recent tariff legislation by congress for the benefit of the Philippine islands, Edwards says the net result so far has been to increase the price paid to the grower for his leaf tobacco from 10 percent for the poorer grade to 45 percent for the best grades grown.

RADIUM AND X-RAYS

Supposed to Have Been Used to Make Away With an Old Man

Paris, Dec. 13.—A remarkable crime is engaging the attention of the police and doctors at Liege. An old man was found dead in his house and the discolored appearance of the skin and marks resembling burns led to the belief that the man had not died a natural death.

A distant relation who lived with the old man had disappeared, and in his room were found traces of experiments with radium and X-rays. Other marks found on the body seem to show that the old man had been tied down in bed and subjected to long exposure to radium and X-rays.

NOT GUILTY OF MURDER

Negro Who Shot Deacon In Church Row Is Acquitted by Jury

Providence, Dec. 13.—Robert Russell's assertion that he acted in self-defense when he fired the shot which resulted in the death of Deacon Nelson Morgan of the Olney Street Baptist church in this city last spring proved convincing to the jury, who gave a verdict of not guilty, after deliberating nearly nineteen hours.

The shooting, which occurred directly in front of the church, was the culmination of a factional dispute among the negro congregation.

TWENTY-SIX EXECUTIONS

Great Crowd Sees Passing on of Moslems Connected With Massacre

Constantinople, Dec. 13.—Twenty-six Moslems were executed at Adana in connection with the April massacres.

Great crowds witnessed the executions, and the relatives of the condemned men, together with thousands of others, joined in the manifestations of grief.

Stork Generous to This Couple

Scranton, Pa., Dec. 13.—Mr. and Mrs. John Duffy of Carbondale have welcomed their twenty-fourth child into their family circle. The family now comprises nine girls and fifteen boys. There are no twins or triplets.

Gas Kills Traveling Man

Providence, Dec. 13.—J. W. Gondreault of Manchester, N. H., a traveling salesman for a match concern, was found dead in his room at a boarding house here. Death was accidental and was due to asphyxiation.

"Filial admiration," answered the worried looking mother. "He believes all the stories his father tells about the wonderful things he did when he was a boy and is trying to equal the record."—Washington Star.

LONG JOURNEY THROUGH AIR

Three Men Fly Three Hundred Miles In Monoplane

TRIP IS MADE IN DARKNESS

Inventor, Who Is an Expert In Motors, Says Machine Is Capable of Hundred and Twenty Miles an Hour—From Central Massachusetts, to New York, Boston, and Back Without a Stop—Machine Kept Hidden

Worcester, Mass., Dec. 13.—If the claims of Wallace E. Tillinghast can be verified, as he says they can be with ease, the problem of aerial flight has been completely solved and airship invention has taken a stride forward greater than any ever made before.

Tillinghast, who is a reputable business man, issued a statement in which he said that with two companions, in a monoplane of his own invention, he made a night flight of 300 miles, starting from a point sixty miles from Worcester, sweeping through the air to New York and encircling the statue of Liberty hundreds of feet in the air, then flying to Boston and returning to his starting place.

Tillinghast is an expert machinist. He has all his life long worked successfully over motors. His word, say his friends, is as good as that of any man alive, and they declare that he could not possibly give forth such a story without an actual occurrence to back it.

Something like substantiation of his statement came on the night of his purported flight, and on other days in close proximity, when telegraph stories were sent out from Litchfield, Conn., of an air machine with a lantern which whirred above in the air and was seen by several people.

Tillinghast says that his flight of approximately 3300 miles was made without alighting once, and that his three passengers, which the monoplane can carry, can weigh as much as 200 pounds apiece.

His aeroplane, he says, is of the monoplane form, is 72 feet long, weighs 1550 pounds and is furnished with a 120-horsepower gasolene engine made under his own specifications and supervision.

He says that he has already broken all records for height ever made in an airship and that he confidently believes his monoplane is capable of 120 miles an hour.

Tillinghast, who is wealthy, has financed his own invention without outside capital and has practically devoted every hour for the past seven years outside his regular office hours to the perfection of his designs.

Besides the flight of 300 miles, Tillinghast says that he has made over 100 ascensions, practically every one of them successful, and each aided in perfecting his monoplane.

Secrecy is maintained by the inventor as to the present whereabouts of his machine and when his next flight will take place. Tillinghast says that he has maintained secrecy because he wished to perfect his invention, but that now he is assured of success, he will substantiate every statement that he has made about his flights. He has taken out patents covering all the important innovations in his monoplane.

Only the inventor and the mechanicians, of whom there are several, have seen the machine, except a few persons who have, the inventor believes, watched it flying above them in the darkness.

6000 TONS OF SUGAR

Steamer From Java Reaches Boston With a Record Cargo

Boston, Dec. 13.—Laden with one of the largest and most valuable cargoes of sugar ever received at this port, steamer Langoe arrived here yesterday. In her holds are 17,574 baskets of sugar, weighing nearly 6000 tons, and valued at approximately $500,000, duty paid. The steamer loaded at Sourabaya and Tjilatjap, Java, and was seventy-eight days on the passage.

The new German steamer Deike Rickmers, from Javan ports, with 5600 tons of sugar, is expected to arrive today.

Alleged Pickpocket Well Dressed

KILLED THE JAGUAR.

The Terrible Boa Constrictor of the Mexican Jungle.

I had been traveling for about an hour, trying to locate the source of the Santa Rita and winning every inch of ground by hacking and slashing with the machete, when I was startled by a most fearful scream, which seemed to come from somewhere immediately behind me. Turning round and looking back over the trail I had just made, I saw a great commotion taking place among the vines, dead leaves and decaying branches which carpeted the ground, and the blood-curdling screams I had heard rang out again and again. Returning a little nearer, I discovered a "tiger," or, properly speaking, a jaguar or American leopard, and it was writhing in the coils of an enormous boa constrictor. The great snake appeared to have the side of the jaguar's head in its mouth and a coil or two of its body around the neck of the beast, which was making frantic efforts to regain its liberty. The snake had its tail coiled round a small ebony tree about a foot in diameter, and whenever the hapless jaguar relaxed its efforts the serpent would swiftly release itself from the tree and make an attempt to get another coil around the body of its opponent.

I stood there fascinated with horror and yet forgetting my fear in the interest I was taking in this terrible fight between beast and reptile. Presently the snake with an incomprehensively quick movement succeeded in getting two more coils around the body of the jaguar, but not without receiving severe laceration from the formidable claws of its victim. Then, letting go the jaguar's head, where it seemed to have a firm hold, the boa constrictor raised its head seemingly in triumph and, with its tail still wrapped round the tree, lifted the body of the jaguar up in the air. I heard the bones crack under the fearful strain, and with one awful, despairing scream the jaguar fell back, dead!—World Wide Magazine.

THE SHIP'S CAPTAIN.

At Sea He Is a Czar, and His Authority Is Absolute.

When you have passed down through the Narrows and then passed Sandy Hook you see a man in whiskers and a reefer climbing down a rope ladder that drops him into a waiting boat.

It is the pilot. You have dropped the last link connecting you with shore except wireless telegraphy, and you are now a member of a community that for a few days, a week, is as much an entity as any nation.

The captain is pacing the bridge. Until you reach shore again he is your overlord. His decision is final and without appeal. He can order you locked in your stateroom or he can put you in irons.

If occasion arises he can alter the course of the ship and land you wherever he pleases. You have recourse when you get ashore, but if he wants to drop you at the Azores when you have paid passage to Bremen he can and will do it.

His authority extends to every part of the ship alike, from the cargo to the saloon deck and from the engine room to the scullery.

Navigating a ship is a ticklish business and one that requires that there be no division of the highest authority. So, for the brief period until he touches port, he is your czar.

The ship is a great community, sometimes with a population of 5,000 souls, living, eating and sleeping under one roof. It has its policemen, its firemen, cooks, butchers, bakers, doctors, clerks, carpenters, electricians, boilermakers and a horde of personal servants.

In the control of this organization the captain has at his right hand his officers. The ship's officers are the important persons in the detail management.—Bookkeeper.

Her Bargain.

An Oil City man, who was detained at the house for a part of the day, handed his wife, who was going downtown, a quarter of a dollar and requested her to get him three cigars for it, according to the Blizzard.

When she returned she handed him the package, remarking exultantly:

"That shows that women can beat men all hollow when it comes to making purchases. I found a place where I could get eight for a quarter instead of three. Isn't that going some?"

And the poor man, as he took his medicine, merely remarked:

"It certainly is, dear."

Stoats Hunt In Packs.

In some years stoats appear to be more numerous than in others, and they are seen not in ones and twos, but in dozens, hunting together in small packs. Stoats will hunt together from scent and in full cry like a pack of hounds, one always keeping the line and followed closely by the others. This sight has been recorded by different observers who have also seen weasels hunting in the same way.—Fur News.

The Resemblance.

Miss (making an unexpected raid on the kitchen)—Who is this, Mary? Mary—M-me b-rother, please 'm. Mistress—Indeed! But he doesn't resemble you in the least. Mary—No'm! But we was remarkable alike before 'e 'ad 'is beard shaved off.—London Sketch.

Professional Relics.

Doctor (to lawyer going through the medical museum)—Your profession does not offer any opportunity for the collection of professional relics. Lawyer—I am not so sure about that. I have a unique collection of family skeletons at my office.—Puck.

AN OLD-TIME PRESCRIPTION

in a modern product. From time immemorial sage and sulphur have been used for the hair and scalp. Almost every one knows of the value of such a combination for darkening the hair and making it grow. In olden times the only way to get a hair tonic of this sort was to brew it in the home fireplace, a method which was troublesome and not always satisfactory. Nowadays almost every up-to-date druggist can supply his patrons with a ready to use product, skillfully compounded in perfectly equipped laboratories. Such a preparation is Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur, which is sold by all leading druggists for 50c. and $1.00 a bottle, or which is sent direct by the Wyeth Chemical Company, 74 Cortlandt St., New York City, upon receipt of price.

An extra good number of the Daily Ledger was prepared for Saturday, and it was with considerable regret to the publishers that the paper failed to reach many of the regular readers. The pages were sent to the press room on time, but the roll of paper which feeds the new press persisted in breaking. Time and time again the press was "threaded" but with no success. The edition finally came out two or three hours late. We hope it will not occur again.

Since his return to this country Colonel Henry Watterson has been counselling his fellow Democrats to talk less and ruminate more. His idea is that the Democrats in Congress should hide themselves and watch the Republicans fight out any differences they may have on the tariff the House rules or any other question which arrays the "organization" against the "insurgents" Mr. Watterson holds that the Democratic party is in no condition to help itself and can profit only from Republican blunders and dissensions. The Watterson programme may attract many Democrats because it promises a surcease from rather profitless activity.

There was once an impression that Kansas was entitled to sympathy. Today few dare to say a word against that state before a present or past resident for figures seem to be available that Kansas is on an equal footing with almost every other section of the world. The president of the Kansas Association of Charities, who has just completed an investigation of the conditions surrounding his work, makes the assertion that in half the countries of his state he found no prisoners in the jails. And as if to settle once for all the statement that farm life is productive of insanity he shows by figures that Cook county, Illinois, in which Chicago is located, furnishes more insane to the State hospitals than the total population of all the state charitable, correctional and penal institutions of Kansas combined. There are 28 county poor farms out of a possible 105 having no inmates and the state has a place near the top in the smallness of the percentage of crime, dependency and defectiveness.

DRIFT OF OPINION.

It would be too much to expect that President Taft's message should be received with approval on every side, and yet two remarks that it has occasioned—one that "It might have been written by McKinley," and the other that "It pleases even the radicals"—fairly illustrate the extent to which it gives satisfaction. Advances in the general list of stocks prove it to be satisfactory to the financial interests. Its oppostion to further tariff legislation at this time cannot fail to strengthen confidence in industrial and commercial circles. The effect of the message on the country at large is tranquilizing.

Those only are disappointed who were looking for something sensational. This cannot be said with any truth of those who were hoping for progressive recommendations. Every corrective and reformatory movement in national affairs with which the public is in hearty sympathy is given the administration's support. It is safe to make this statement even in advance of the special messages that the President promises, for his policy is sufficiently outlined and indicated now to establish the fact that while only well-matured and cautious steps shall be taken with the executive's sanction, none of them will be backward.

The country has reason to congratulate itself that no disquieting influences have been set in motion at the capital by this exposition of the chief magistrate's views, but, rather, that it gives assurance of protection and encouragement to all legitimate effort.—Christian Science Monitor.

BOSTON OPERA HOUSE.

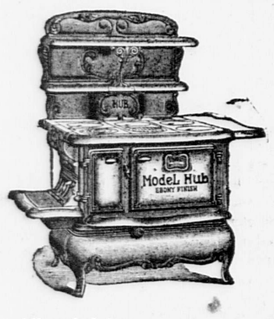
This evening marks the beginning of the sixth week of grand opera at the Boston Opera House. Madama Butterfly will be the opera given and Alice Nielsen will sing the role of Butterfly.

Wednesday evening Gounod's "Faust "will be given in French. The great tenor Florencio Constantino will sing Faust, Alice Nielsen, Marguerite and Giusto Nivette Mephistopheles. Wallace Goodrich will conduct.

Thursday evening will be a benefit performance for the Boston section of Council of Jewish Women "La Traviata" will be repeated and among those in the cast will be Miss Nielsen as Violetta, Constantino as Alfred Germont and Cesare Formichi the elder Germont.

"Il Trovatore" is the novelty for this week, and will be given Friday evening. Mme. Boninsegna will sing the part of Leonora, Carlo Cartica Manrico and Cesare Formichi Count de Luna. Arturo Luzzatti will conduct.

Saturday matinee at 1.45 will be a repetition of "Faust" with Paul Bourrillon in the leading role. Frances Alda of the Metropolitan Opera Company will sing Marguerite. Giusto Nivette will sing Mephistopheles as on Wednesday evening.



Saturday evening at popular prices "Madama Butterfly "will be given with Matilde Lewicka as Butterfly, Elvira Leveroni as Suzuki, Kolombin will sing the part of F. B. Pinkerton and Arturo Luzzatti will conduct.

The Sunday evening concerts are proving very popular and a most excellent program has been arranged for the evening of Dec. 19th.

—A new course for stationary firemen and engineers has been inaugurated in the evening schools of Brockton.

—The magnificent new Clubhouse of the Lynn Women's Club was dedicated Thursday night, Gov. Draper being in attendance.

THE CHEERFUL WAX CANDLE.

By ALICE LE BARON.

[Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.]

ONCE upon a time two little candles lay side by side in a big box. Both were pure white.

Said one: "I wonder what will become of us. Do you think we could be meant for a Christmas tree?" For you must know that to be put on a Christmas tree is the best possible thing that can happen to a candle.

"Of course not," said the other, who was cross. "If we are meant for a Christmas tree it will be for some shabby little children—see if it isn't."

"If we are," said the first, "I'll shine my very brightest, for the eyes of even poor children with only few pleasures in prospect are enough to rival little candles on Christmas eve."

"If we are," grumbled the second, "I am not sure that I will allow myself to be lighted at all."

Christmas eve drew nearer and nearer. Sure enough, the two little candles, with many others of blue and pink and yellow and red, were bought for a Christmas tree.

On the day before Christmas, while it still was daylight, some young girls came to arrange the presents and make the tree ready for the evening.

"Oh, what a lot of pretty little candles!" said one of them. "They are such lovely colors—all except those two white ones. We will put those out of sight, because the red and pink ones are prettier."

"Didn't I tell you what would happen?" said the cross little candle in a whisper.

"Yes, but wait," replied the other. "Just shine your brightest all the time."

"I won't," snapped the cross one.

When evening came, ranged all round the tree were happy boys and girls. Soon every bough on the great tree blossomed with little lights. Some of the flames were faint, but many were bright. When the little white candles were lighted the cross one just sputtered a minute and then went out. The other shone so brightly that a gentleman standing near said:

"PUT IT ON THE VERY TIPTOP."

"Oh, what a brilliant candle! But it is almost out of sight among the green branches. We ought to put it where it can be seen better."

"Put it on the very tiptop," said a little lady.

And that is where they did put it—on the very tiptop of the tree, where it nodded and gleamed in answer to the smiling faces around it.

The Barber's Joke.

Christmas morning and the barber very busy.

"I'd rather shave ten Germans than one American."

The rubicund brewer in the chair smiled broadly through the lather.

"Goot," he chuckled. "Dot vos right! But vy?"

The barber took a firmer hold upon his victim's nose as he replied:

"Ten Germans pay me a dollar and a half—one American only 15 cents."

And you could have heard the thermometer drop.

Popcorn!

"If Santa Claus has corns the same as grandpa," said a wee girl the other day, "I fink he'd be 'fraid to come down the chimney over a hot fire for fear his corns would pop."

Santa Claus' Revenge.

Belated comes advice tonight
That, "without proper cause,"
Two foolish boys went on a strike
Against old Santa Claus.
They sent him written word that he Must take two trips a year,
The first an early one to see
What children wanted here.
They said his work of late was bad.
They criticised his taste.
They said it made them very sad—
Those presents gone to waste!
They asked him why he thought a boy
Would want a Teddy bear.
They said it seemed he could employ
Much better judgment there.
They wrote him frankly what they thought,
A protest in each line.
They told him that they thought he ought
To sell out and resign.
They covered reams of paper then
To tell him what to do—
The how, the which, the what, the when,
They carefully went through—
And then they told him what to bring
For each boy in their town,
And for themselves—"Oh, everything!"
Was just what they put down.
They thought the saint was far too old
To understand their scheme,
And each one bought a bag, to hold
Their presents, it would seem.
But when they woke on Xmas morn
With "What did Santa bring?"
Why, just as sure as you are born,
He hadn't left a thing!

ONE IN A HUNDRED.

The "Observant Citizen" of the Boston Post says:

Perhaps one of the reasons for the great popularity of Mayor William T. Shea of Quincy, elected to his third successive term by a surprisingly large plurality, was evidenced by an incident I witnessed in his office Tuesday. As the early returns, showing his certain re-election were being telephoned in to City Hall, fully 200 voters gathered in the Mayor's office bent upon offering congratulations.

Mayor Shea was forced to hold an informal reception, heartily shaking by the hand every one present.

One old and gray voter, a resident of Houghs Neck, presented himself and said: "Whenever you're down to the Neck, Mayor, I want you to consider me and mine at your disposal. I'm only one of a hundred voters down there, but I know that I am expressing the opinion of all."

"You're only one in a hundred," quickly replied the Mayor, "but you're just as big as any of them." This was especially gratifying to the voter from the Neck, as he is well known and noticeable for his diminutive stature.

RED CROSS STAMPS.

Red Cross stamps are not postage stamps and letters or other mailable matter bearing these stamps alone must be treated as unpaid matter. The addresser is notified to remit postage, and if it be not received the letter or other matter is sent to the dead letter office. Very general use of the Red Cross stamps by residents of the district is noted. Prominent among those who so decorate their Christmas mail is the President. All the White House mail carries the Red Cross stamps.

WAGES AT NAVY YARD.

The scale of wages at the Boston navy yard for 1910 were posted yesterday and are as follows for first class men:

Boilermakers, $3.52 to $3.60 a day.
Coppersmiths, $3.52 to $3.76.
Die sinkers, $4.64 to $5.04.
Both house and ship joiners, $3.52 to $3.84.
Ordnance men, $3.28 to $3.36.
Painters, $3.20 to $3.28.
Shipfitters, $3.36 to $3.52.
Varnishers and polishers, from $3.20 to $3.28.

The ratings of electrician and linemen are abolished and all brought under the head of wiremen of several grades and for which the rate of pay for the first-class was raised $3.36 to $4 a day.

One new rating, that of tool dresser, was established, with a wage rate of $3.36 a day for the first class.

SAVE DOCTOR'S BILLS.

It was an association of gentlemen, professionally physicians and chemists, all of whom were born in the drug trade, so to speak, and who have been connected with it all their lives, who first gave to the world Castoria, which as every one knows is a pleasant and effective remedy for the ailments of infants and children. It has always been recognized as a meritorious preparation, and its reward has been the greatest popularity ever enjoyed by any remedy ever put upon the market; attained, not by flamboyant advertising or appeals to ignorance or vulgar prejudice, but by inherent merit. All physicians recommend it, and many, very many, prescribe it.

Many parents call in the family physician. Many other parents take advantage of what the physician told them when he was first called in consultation. All good family physicians say: "Give the children Castoria." Healthy parents know this remedy of old, for they took it themselves as children. It was more than thirty years ago that Castoria made a place for itself in the household. It bore the signature of Charles H. Fletcher then, as it does today. The signature is its guarantee, which is accepted in thousands of homes where there are children.

SURPRISE PARTY.

The home of Newman H. Savage was the scene of very gay festivities Saturday evening. It was Mr. Savage's birthday and many of his friends gathered and succeeded in a decided surprise on the young man. The evening opened with piano, cornet, violin and vocal solos which were followed by the many old-fashioned games which young and old delight in playing. Harry Winslow and E. V. Fitts were the life of the party and were ably seconded by all preesnt.

Among the many presents was a handsome gold watch given Mr. Savage by his mother and father. After fruit punch, ice cream and cake were enjoyed, more games were played and the party dispersed at a late hour.

SUNDAY IN CHURCHES

Music a Feature of Several Services

All pastors, superintendents of Sunday schools and leaders of church societies, are requested to contribute to this department.

AT ST. CHRYSOSTOM'S.

At St. Chrysostom's church Sunday morning, Rev. A. Edwin Clattenburg took for his text, St. Luke 1 46: 45. And Mary said, "My soul doth magnify the Lord," etc. He said in part:

"We learn many things from the example of Mary the Virgin. We learn that the Word of God should be known to every soul who claims God as their Father. Why should God's word be known? In order that the aspiring soul may put in fit language the aspirations of the soul. Language that has ever been related to the things of God. So that souls coming after may recognize the felt relationship existing between all the Saints of God.

"We learn also that faith in God must be sure and firm. When one is living an obscure life, doing the little things that must be done by someone, toiling in a corner of God's vineyard, unobserved by the world, one must have faith enough in God to realize that even in that obscure corner God's eye looks, and God's eye sees. Every soul born into the world has an opportunity to serve God."

In the evening the second monthly musical service was held. The choir was assisted by Mrs. Percy Carter Smith, who sang "Love not the world" and "Abide with Me."

WOLLASTON UNITARIAN.

The Rev. Charles B. Ames, the assistant pastor of the First Congregational church of Quincy, occupied the pulpit Sunday morning, preaching a helpful sermon on "The Lifting Power of Human Life." In the evening at the Y. P. R. U. meeting Miss Persis Thompson gave an interesting talk on "Settlement Work," in which she is engaged in Lynn.

Rev. and Mrs. Carl G. Horst spent Sunday in Athol, where Mr. Horst was formerly pastor of the Second Unitarian church. Mr. Horst in the morning occupied his old pulpit and preached to a large and appreciative congregation.

Ours is the church of good cheer and our motto is "Here let no one be a stranger."

Rev. and Mrs. Carl G. Horst are at home to receive callers Monday evenings.

The congregation of the Bethany Baptist church in Denver, Col., voted on Nov. 5 to join the fellowship of the Unitarian Denomination. This is the outcome of ten years' discussion starting with the refusal of the church to dispense with their pastor, Rev. Henry W. Pinkham when his teachings were declared by the Rocky Mountain Baptist Association to be out of harmony with the views prevailing in the denomination they represent.

Rev. Carl G. Horst will attend tomorrow a meeting of the Trinitarian and Unitarian Congregational ministers of the Old Colony in the Old Meeting House in Hingham. Among the speakers are the Rev. Emery L. Bradford of Weymouth the Rev. Samuel McCord brothers, D. D., of Cambridge, Dr. E. T. Hartman and Rev. A. P. Fitch, president of the Andover Theological school. The meeting will be welcomed to Hingham by the ringing of the four Congregational bells of the town. It will be the first joint meeting to be held within the Old Colony for nearly a century.

MEMORIAL CHURCH.

The Sunday morning sermon at the Memorial Congregational church was preached by the Rev. Frank L. Luce of Dorchester, who exchanged pulpits with the regular pastor, Rev. Thomas Davison.

The anthems "Save Me, O God," and "Calvary" were well rendered by the choir.

A student of the Harvard Theological school conducted the evening service, and the chorus choir of young people furnished the music.

A special feature in connection with the church is the clubs for young people. The boys holding their meeting Thursday evenings, and the girls' club on Saturday nights.

Next Sunday will be devoted to Christmas services.

AT SNUG HARBOR.

Religious services were held as usual on Sunday, conducted by the Chaplain, Rev. A. R. Atwood, who preached on "The blessing of being unknown." The Davis trio sang "Ho, ye comrades," "From sinking sands," "Memories of Mother," "I am thine, O Lord."

HALL PLACE CHURCH.

"Fruit-bearing Christians" was the subject of the Sunday morning sermon at the Hall Place M. E. church. In the evening the pastor, Rev. Carl H. Raupach, preached a stirring sermon on "Remarkable answers to prayer."

Miss Florence Manhire led the Epworth League service at 6.15, the topic being "The ruin of idleness." All the services of the day were well attended.

The Ladies' Aid will hold a sale in the Lamb Store on the Parkway near the Willard school, Saturday, Dec. 18.

BETHANY CHURCH.

Rev. E. F. Bell, the assistant secretary of the A. B. C. F. M. was the speaker Sunday morning at Bethany Congregational church.

The second of the monthly musical services was held Sunday evening with a rich program. The chorus was assisted by Mrs. E. S. Moore, Mrs. E. V. Fitts, Richard Bishop and John Pierce.

The Bethany church men's club will meet this evening, when Melvin C. Ayres, for many years editor of the Boston Advertiser will speak on "How to read newspapers."

Unity circle of King's Daughters will hold a regular meeting on Tuesday evening.

AT ST. MARYS.

The masses at St. Mary's church on Sunday were held at 6.45, 8, 9.15 and 10.15. Masses were said by the Rev. Fr. Grady and Rev. Fr. Duffy. At the 9.15 mass, Rev. Fr. Duffy gave a short sermon in regards to doing penance for sins. He said that the time to do penance was the present and that everybody should prepare for the coming of the Lord who came once and died for our sins and his next coming would be at the end of the world when he would come to judge both the living and the dead. Now is the time to prepare as St. John the Baptist said long ago, prepare ye all for the coming of the Lord for he who serves the Lord well and does penance for his sins, for such is the kingdom of heaven, which is the place of the good, the angels, and saints, the home of the Lord, who will say to those who come to him that deserve heaven, "Enter, Oh you good and faithful servant for yours is the kingdom of heaven and is the blessing that I wish you all."

Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock Sunday School was held.

Sunday evening at 8 o'clock was the enrollment of new members into the Ladies' Sodality, and was attended by a large number. After the enrollment, prayers were said, followed with benediction of the blessed sacrament which was sung by the regular choir.

QUINCY POINT CHURCH.

All the services at the Washington Street church, Quincy Point, were well attended on Sunday. In the morning the double quartet sang the anthem, "We beseech Thee" and led the congregation in singing, "Come, thou long-expected Jesus (Stuttgart), "O love that will not let me go" (St. Margaret), and "Love Divine," (Le Jeune). The pastor, Rev. A. R. Atwood preached an able sermon from the topic, "The love of Jesus," and drew helpful lessons from the life of our Lord.

At the evening service there was gospel singing, recitations by Ellie Wardell and Arabella McKenzie and the pastor preached a helpful sermon on the life of David.

The pulpit is to be supplied next Sunday by the Rev. Charles P. Marshall, who is to preach at both the services.

Deacon Charles Sherburne reports good progress on the rehearsals for the Christmas concert which comes in two Sundays.

A UNION CONFERENCE.

The Congregationalists and Unitarians in the Old Colony district meet for the first time in a century in a conference at the historic Old Meeting House at Hingham tomorrow.

Representing the Congregational churches on the committee are Revs. E. A. Robinson of Hingham, C. F. Hill Crathern of South Braintree, Emery L. Bradford of East Weymouth, F. B. McAllister of Cohasset, Dr. A. M. Hyde of Brockton, Thomas Simms of Braintree and H. W. Kimball of Weymouth. From the Unitarian churches come Revs. L. C. Cornish of Hingham, W. R. Cole of Cohassett, D. H. Ferrell of Brockton, Paul S. Phalen of Hingham, Melvin Brandow of Plymouth, Abram Wyman of North Easton and E. B. Maglathlin of West Bridgewater.

Another feature brought about by this committee will be the exchange of pulpits Sunday in every city and town in the district.

EAST BRAINTREE.

Chief and Mrs. Frank O. Whitmarsh have been entertaining Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Howland of Rockland.

The firemen have a good clean slate in this part of the town, for the past thirteen months not a line of hose has been laid, although within that time there has been four alarms of fire. The total loss did not exceed $5.

Mrs. Elizabeth Hennessey, widow of Patrick Hennessey, died at her home on Prospect street, Wednesday evening. A son survives her. The funeral took place from the church of the Sacred Heart this forenoon. Interment was at St. Francis Xavier cemetery, Weymouth.

The first of the games in the Old Colony Bowling league which includes East Braintree, Quincy, Norfolk Downs and Southt Braintree, was rolled at Burrell's alleys, Wednesday evening between the East Braintree team and the South Braintree's. The former team won all three strings, also the total 1350 to 1271.

—The motorist of now insists on a nice-looking and useful car, and racing types have therefore a comparatively small sale. Reliability is still rightly placed in front of all other considerations, but comfort comes near behind—comfort which can in some cases be called luxury.

A Gift to Make Home Happier For Many Years to Come

A Jewett piano is a gift in the enjoyment of which all can share, but the pleasure it gives now is not all it means. It brings to your children a priceless opportunity for musical training and culture.

A Jewett Piano is a possession that will be prized in any family where artistic merit is appreciated.

A full, rich tone with wonderful clarity and musical depth distinguishes the Jewett from other pianos of even greater cost.

Its superiority in this respect has won for it the preference of musical authorities of international reputation.

Jewett pianos are built to give lasting satisfaction. Thousands of owners have endorsed them, and we add the broad guarantee of New England's largest piano house.

RECOUNT TONIGHT.

The Registrars of Voters meet tonight to recount the votes cast in Ward Two at the election last Tuesday for Councilmen from the ward. It has been proven by past experience that Quincy election officers are very accurate in their count, and but little change is expected from the figures as announced by the election officers on the night of the election.

It is claimed that some of the ballots mutilated were thrown out. As far as known, however, no ballots were thrown out on this account, as the mutilation consisted of the registering wheel making some small holes in the ballot. These holes did not come in the space where the crosses were made, but through the names.

For the Mere Man. Novel Designs In the Ever Popular Pincushion---A Smart Fan Bag For the Debutante of the Season

This pincushion is really a novelty, being made of cardboard covered with pink flowered cretonne. The top is covered with pink satin to match the flowers, and the ribbon bows match the top. Base two inches square, side three inches high, four inches wide at top.

The base and sides are overcasted together and the sides sewed together by overcasting. The inside is stuffed with cotton until it rounds over sides at top. The top is then covered.

Other useful and pretty pincushions are made in the shape of an apple and covered with a silk tinted to represent the red and green of the familiar fruit. They are round and rather flat, giving a wide area to hold the pins, and they are stuffed with wool, which affords but little resistance and does not pack so tightly as cotton.

The strong threads sewed through the center of the cushion make the depression on each side to represent the core, and all the finishing gathers of the silk are hidden under the green stem.

Linen Tobacco Pouch.

A tobacco pouch that is easily made by the girl who embroiders only a little is of gray, tan or dull blue homespun linen embroidered with a conventional design of crossed pipes on one side of the pouch and with the monogram of the owner on the other side.

Cut the linen in two pieces, with a rounding bottom and bulging sides, narrowing to a neck and widening again above it. Stitch the two sides together to the neck, where there is a casing, and leave the upper part or ruffle open at each side.

Line the bag with oiled silk if you can find it in a color that looks well with the pouch; if not, with a heavy waterproof silk.

Embroider the pipes in Kensington stitch in a dark brown filo, using a lighter tone of brown in center of bowl for high lights. The mouthpiece and rim of the pipes can be worked in gold thread or, if you fear that may tarnish, in an old gold filo.

The monogram on the other side of the pouch can be done in the same shades as the pipes. The letters should be heavily padded and worked in satin stitch.

A cord should be used as a drawstring rather than a ribbon, which is too feminine for such a bag. If a cord cannot be bought in the right colors one can be twisted by using several shades of brown and dull coppery red rope silk.

Present For the Debutante.

With other quaint customs the reticule has returned to fashionable favor, and girls this winter will carry their party fans in reticules made of pieces of their frocks or of satin, either white or colored. The reticule pictured is of white satin lined with a pale yellow silk. A tiny floral design carried out in ribbon work is most effectively used. The bag is drawn up with gold cords.

FOR MILADY'S FAN.

THE RUSSIAN CRAZE.

"Military" Millinery of Czarish Patterns Now a Spreading Fad.

The present may well be termed a Russian season. The madness for everything Russian is spreading rapidly, and there is no telling where it is going to end. It is now accepted as the leading note in every part of fashion.

First came the much heralded and really least important turban called "military." It soon became apparent that the turban was to take on as many kinks and curls as the inventive milliner could devise, and with each new kink came a new name. We have already had Turkish, uhlan, Moscow, cossack, czarina, hussar, drum major and oriental. Of these the uhlan and the oriental are possibly the preferred ones. Some of the furs of which this varied headgear is made are of the ultra fashionable and exclusive ringtail. Ermine and sealskin are also favorites, and Australian opossum and moleskin are much used.

The drum major turban is trimmed with a circlet of antique gold and bronze set with jewels. At last the influence of the Audubonists has begun to show in millinery. Many of the breasts and feathers of every description offered this season are man made affairs. Sometimes a thick quill is used, with the long, coarse fur of the monkey set in on either side. Bronze lace is used widely for trimming.

Many of these turbans fashioned from panne velvet draped in oriental fashion are trimmed with a single flower of heroic size, a pansy or a single rose of startling proportions. The cossack turban is a favorite with women who wish to carry out the Russian scheme by having their tailor made suits consist of a skirt and long Russian blouse instead of a coat.

This latter garment promises to have a great vogue as the season advances. It looks especially attractive in the rough, almost shaggy, fabrics that the shops offer in place of the once dominant broadcloth. These new goods have a zibeline finish which is strongly suggestive of the frigid Russian winter. This blouse answers to the demand for extra length in all top garments. It fastens at the left side from shoulder to hem with flat buttons and is belted in with a band of soft patent leather, although a belt of velvet or ribbed silk is sometimes preferred.

This belt is loose and drops a bit below the waist line back and front, which shows that the moyen age styles have not entirely vanished. The collar of the blouse may be high if one desires, but it is the correct thing to have a round, rolling one fitted to the neckband and not meeting in front. Young girls have the band finished off a trifle low in the neck and wear a wide Dutch collar of fur. Fur, by the way, has resumed its ascendency as a trimming. It is trimming gowns in every possible way the designer can invent. It is going on street suits, house gowns and ball costumes of the most gauzelike description. Combined with it are the massive metal fabrics which will make walking a real labor, not to mention dancing.

THE RUSSIAN TAILOR MADE.

It is quite the fad this season to put the metal trimming on the lining of the frock. There is a foundation slip of soft satin, which is trimmed with bands of gold, gold ornaments and set pieces. Over this is dropped a gathered, draped garment of liberty silk, chiffon or ninon voile. The effect is very artistic.

There seems to be a decided change in the shape of the yokes that are used with gowns. The shallow, round one is still with us, but there is a tendency toward the long, narrow yoke. This does not mean that the new yokes go over the shoulders. The yoke of today drops well over the collar bone as a wedge, a V or a U. White net of thin weave is as popular as lace for these yokes, and there is still a great demand for the flesh colored net and chiffon which were so popular last winter. EMILY SLOANE.

The Bishop's Kitten

A Christmas Story

By FRANK H. SWEET.

Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.

It was Christmas eve. The secretary had paper and pencil ready and a typewriter beside him. The bishop of Winchester sat in the window in a straight backed chair, for it appeared that he could not even allow himself the luxury of resting when he might have rested.

"A note of thanks from the president of the board of managers of the Home For the Homeless," said the secretary, opening another letter, with a little sigh of relief, for he was near the end of the pile. "He says that your magnificent contribution has saved the home from serious difficulties and that this will enable them to go through the winter comfortably."

"No answer needed," said the bishop briefly.

"A letter from Mr. Hanlon for help for a poor family. He says he has found a family in great distress, and he looks to you for advice and assistance."

"He doesn't need advice. He needs assistance. Tell him to draw on me and do what he thinks necessary."

"A letter from Mr. Quintard in reference to young Cooper, the theological student. He has married and so has forfeited his right to continue his course and enter upon his career unless you are willing to make an exception in his case."

The bishop's face flushed and his lips set in a line like iron.

"Write Mr. Quintard," he said in icy tones, "that he will please convey to the young man my compliments and tell him that since he has put his nose to the grindstone he may keep it there. He is to tell him from me that he can seek out some humble employment for himself."

"Are you going out, sir?" asked the secretary as the bishop put on his overcoat.

"Yes," replied the great man simply. "I promised to give a talk to the workingmen tonight at the Dayton mission."

There was a world of personal history in the simple answer. It was a cold and dismal night, and the fire was burning cheerily in the grate, yet this man, who might have taken his ease, was going to the farthest extremity of the city to talk to grimy workingmen. The secretary watched him with wonder and curiosity in his face. The hard, stern, unbending man, the self sacrificing sympathizer with the poor—what contradictions were in this man's nature!

The mission stood in the midst of a thickly settled district populated chiefly by the workmen from the foundries and mills that abounded there. The mission house was small and plain and not too comfortable, as the bishop knew, for he had spoken there before. To his surprise, the doors were closed and the place was dark.

"Strange," he said to himself. "I did not think I was too early."

Nothing stirred about the house except a little furry kitten which sat on the steps and rent the air with agonized howls.

"Mercy, what a voice!" exclaimed the bishop uneasily. "Are you cold, poor little kitty?"

Looking up and down the street to see that no one was coming, he took the tiny kitten up and stroked its head. It opened its mouth wide and wailed for something it missed and could not explain. It surely must be almost frozen. No one was coming yet. The bishop unbuttoned his overcoat at the top and thrust the kitten in.

"If I see any one coming I can take it out," he thought. "Perhaps one of the workmen will take it home to the children."

Lulled by the warmth, the kitten was quiet for a moment, but all at once it realized that there was something else needed. It crawled up, put out its head and howled louder than ever.

"Mercy on us!" exclaimed the bishop. "It must be hungry. If the men would only come"—

Sure enough, there was some one walking up the street with a rapid swing. But he was about to pass when the bishop stopped him.

"Pardon me, my friend," he said, "but I expected there would be service in this house tonight. Can you tell me"—

"No; it's Christmas night," said the man, hurrying on.

He had mistaken the night, and all this long journey! "Too bad, kitty," he said to the head which was just beneath his chin and which was giving utterance to the wildest and most hopeless howls. "As I have nothing else to do, though, perhaps I might find a place where they would give you a little milk and maybe adopt you."

A little distance farther on there was a house where there was a fire in the front room, and he could hear a man's voice within. Ah, here was the place! A man would understand the situation.

A ring at the bell and the door was flung open and a man stood on the threshold. "That you, Fred?" he asked, peering into the darkness.

"No, it is not Fred," replied the bishop mildly, and then he repeated his formula.

"See here, my man," said the person in the doorway, "I don't know whether you're crazy or on a jag, but you'd better hurry on, for it is mighty near time for the copper on this beat to git around."

The bishop drew his splendid figure erect and walked on. "All men are becoming pessimists," he said to himself and the kitten.

Perhaps it was this gloomy thought that made the kitten open its mouth and surpass all its previous efforts in the way of soul stirring wails. The bishop set his lips in a hard line.

"I'm going to find something for this kitten to eat," he said, half aloud, and when the bishop said things in that way it was as well for circumstances to yield.

A tiny cottage stood at a street corner—such a tiny cottage that it seemed to have been crowded into the corner as an afterthought when the place was already full. There was a light in the front room, and as the bishop had grown desperate he walked up the small stoop and rang the bell.

A young man opened the door. There was an electric light a few feet away, and the bishop saw by it that the young man had a pale face and that his hair was tumbled as though by restless fingers. While he was noting these things he was telling about the kitten.

"I have applied to several people," he added, "but they seem to look upon me as a dangerous and suspicious character. I hope you will be more generous in your judgment."

The young man had started at the sound of his voice, but he opened the door wider.

"Come in," he said. "I think we will be able to find the kitten something to eat."

A slender slip of a girl arose from her seat near the fire and went into the other room. She came back presently with a saucer of milk and set it and the kitten down on a rug, and then the bishop sat down, too, at their invitation, and they laughed with one accord at the enthusiastic manner in which the kitten crawled bodily into that saucer of milk and lapped and choked and lapped and strangled again as though it would never have enough.

"The poor little thing was hungry, very hungry," said its benefactor pityingly.

While the kitten drank the bishop was looking around the poor, neat little room, with its bare floor shining white and its pitiful little adornings. And from the room his eyes wandered to the girl, who was down on her knees by the fire wiping the milk from the kitten's paws and making it fit for decent society. She was a lovely girl, with large, tender brown eyes, and her hair was filled with gold in the firelight, and there was a dimple in the midst of the bloom on her left cheek.

When had the bishop of Winchester ever noticed the bloom on a woman's cheek before or the dimple in the midst of it?

"Really, this is very pleasant," he said, warming under the genial influence of the neat little room and the lovely girl and the fine young man with the intellectual face. "I am glad that I found the kitten, for it has been the cause of my making some pleasant friends. You must give me your name, for I have no disposition to lose friends so pleasantly found."

Something had been weighing on the mind of the young man ever since his guest had come into the room. Now he arose and stood before the bishop, his eyes kindling.

"My name is Cooper," he said, with an intrepidity which the bishop could not but recognize even in the midst of his amazement. "I am a student of theology. I lack a year of finishing my course. A month ago I married, and today you sent me word that since I had put my nose to the grindstone I could keep it there.

There was silence in the room for some moments. Then the bishop arose and began to button his overcoat.

"I am glad I came in," he said gently, looking at the young man. "And so you have been married a month? Have courage, my boy. We all have our grindstones, and our noses are kept pretty constantly at them in the course of the years, but no matter so they don't grind away any of our hearts. And this is the little wife who was more and better than a career? Well, perhaps she is. She reminds me of a girl I knew long ago. You won't mind my taking the little kitten home with me, will you?"

And the two young people stood amazed while he put the kitten inside his overcoat and then shook hands with them warmly before he departed.

The next morning when the secretary entered the study he paused and leaned against the door a moment and passed his hands across his eyes. Could that be the bishop of Winchester sitting in his accustomed place, with a white kitten climbing over him and biting his ears and bumping its head against his chin?

"Oh, you're here, Daniel!" said the bishop, catching sight of him. "Sit down there for a moment and take this for Mr. Quintard."

And the secretary steadied his reeling faculties while the bishop dictated:

Dear Quintard—I have reconsidered my decision in regard to young Cooper. I have some evidence that goes to show that he will make a useful man, and you may assure him from me that he will be allowed to continue his course; also please ascertain if he is at all cramped in his circumstances, and if so consider me your banker and help him as he needs it without letting him know to whom he is indebted. You can manage this, I know.

"I must be dreaming," said the secretary to himself, but as he looked again to convince himself there was the bishop of Winchester smiling at the kitten, which was clawing at the leaves of one of the abstract books on the table and turning somersaults down the open pages.

CHAPTER XV.

CAPITAL AND LABOR.

THINGS were going well with the combination—two new bakers had been taken in, business was steadily increasing and, in view of substantial profits, they were already thinking of getting a second kneading machine and widening their field of operations. But Haggleton was not having all plain sailing with Gentle, Margaret and Philip. The old diver and the girl exerted their utmost efforts to keep Philip from consenting to the development of the business further in a field that would throw men with families to support out of work. At last they succeeded.

Gentle was so pleased with the progress of things that he could not refrain from pushing his advantage, and one evening he turned the talk upon a subject where he felt himself particularly strong and Haggleton indefensibly weak—that is, the unfair division of the products of toil. What right had an employer, he asked, to keep a woman sewing carpets all day and then take half of what she earned? Suppose the woman did the work at a private house, as often happened. Then her employer charged the owner of the carpets, say, $3 a day for the woman's services and gave her a dollar and a half. That was not fair. The employer's part in this effort was too small to justify him in keeping so much of her earnings. It was the woman who did the work and breathed carpet dust and took chances of infection; the employer merely secured her the job and furnished needle and thread.

Gentle contended that this was precisely the situation between capital and labor all over the country, the capitalist taking about half of what the laborer earned, whereas a fair division would leave the rich quite rich enough and practically do away with poverty.

Was it not a monstrous injustice, he went on, that a few hundred New Yorkers should every year draw from vast unearned fortunes an income aggregating more than the total yearly earnings of a million fellow citizens born in poverty?

If Gentle had stopped here all might have been well, for Philip agreed with him thoroughly so far, but in the elation of triumph he ventured upon socialistic ground where, as Haggleton divined by a flash of intuition, the young man could not follow him. Indeed, it had long been a source of regret to the old diver that Philip would not take very seriously his dreams of a beautiful industrial republic, soon to be realized, according to him.

So presently the tables were turned, and Gentle found himself under a fire of searching questions by Haggleton. Did he believe that the present division of wealth would one day be replaced by a fairer division? Yes. By the will of the people? Yes. But how? Take the railroads. Who would own them? The people. The people would take the railroads? Yes. And pay for them? They had paid for them already, for they built them, forged the steel and hewed the timbers. H'm! Then the eleven billions or so that the railroads were valued at would never be paid to the present owners? Never!

Philip was frowning.

"Will it be the same with the land?" pursued the old man. "Will you Socialists simply take it and make no compensation to present holders?"

"Why discuss this?" objected Gentle.

"Why not discuss it?" replied Haggleton sharply. "You've had your say about our scheme of robbery. Why shouldn't I have a word about yours? Then how about the land? You'll take it, won't you, in your Socialist state, and pay for it?"

"I tell you we have paid for it over and over again."

"I know it. But will you pay for it in any other way?"

"No."

"And the great industries?"

"They will be of no use to you. Conditions will be so bad you will beg the people to take them."

"For nothing?"

"Yes."

"And if by any chance we don't beg you to take them—then you'll take them anyway?"

"Yes."

"Do you call that fair?" asked the old man, turning abruptly to Philip.

"No," said the latter, "I don't."

* * * * * * *

Philip said he was going out. He had an engagement with Margaret, and on his way to the boarding house he turned over in his mind what he should say to her. It had suddenly become clear to him that he could not trust Gentle's judgment beyond a certain point; also that Margaret's position about the bakeshops had been too strongly taken for it to have been original with her.

Margaret greeted her lover with happy animation.

"Tell me, did Gentle talk to you about those bakeshops?" asked Philip.

"Why—er"—

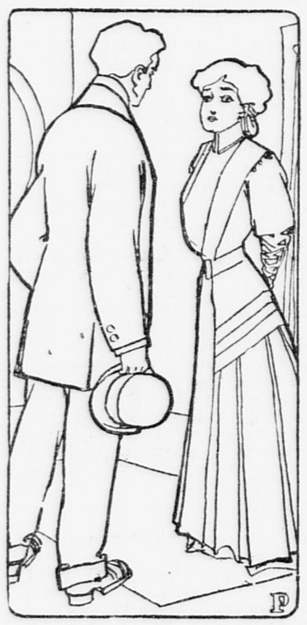
"Did he?"

"Yes," answered Margaret, "but—how strange you are!"

Philip brightened as his eyes rested on her. She was deliciously charming. He led her to the queer old lounge with its red rose pattern, and there they faced each other, half smiling, half serious.

But the growing difference that had sprung up between them insisted upon obtruding itself.

"Why were you so serious when you came in?" Margaret asked.



"We have made a mistake, dear, in one thing," he said, "and I—I know you'll be sensible about it."

"You mean about the plan to take more bakeshops into the combination?"

"Yes."

"You're not going to do it?"

"Listen, Margaret," he reasoned; "if we don't take them in they will form

"What I decide is the thing that shall be."

a combination against us. That is certain. So the same number of bakers will be discharged either way, and if we force them to oppose us we shall suffer serious loss in our business."

Margaret did not see. She had counted on Philip's influence against this cruel combination, and now he was thinking only of the money.

"But, Margaret," he insisted, "we must have money, and surely you want me to think about the future."

"Not if it means harming poor people."

Philip frowned.

"The men discharged will soon find other work. Besides, think of the good we are doing. We're working a regular revolution in breadmaking. You may say what you please about Mr. Jackson, but"—

"I hate him!" interrupted Margaret.

"Anyway he has changed these bakeshops so you would scarcely know them. He insists on absolute cleanliness—floors and walls must be scrubbed every day, windows must be kept open for proper ventilation, defective plumbing must be repaired, no sick man may be employed. It's a good thing. It may save hundreds of lives."

Margaret listened unconvinced.

"Don't do it, Philip," she begged. "Don't go into this new combination. Leave things as they are."

"But I explained that"—

"I know, only—Phil, you won't refuse me this—the first favor I have asked you!"

Philip hesitated.

"See here, Margaret, when a man and woman marry there are certain things that each one knows about, aren't there? A woman knows about the home and a man knows about business. And each must respect the other's judgment in those matters. Isn't that true?"

"Ye-es."

"Now, I'm the wage earner," he went on quickly. "I provide the money, and you must leave money matters to me."

Perhaps this was a decisive moment in Philip's life, the turning point where a last effort of hers might keep him right.

"I don't agree with you," she said. "I think a wife should know about her husband's work so that she can advise him and help him."

"The man must decide about business, and the woman must not interfere."

"Then," she murmured—"then you are not the Philip I thought you were."

"I'm sorry," he said.

"Philip," she said with a sudden dignity, "I ask you once more not to do this thing."

"And—and if I refuse it?" he asked unsteadily.

"You won't refuse—you can't refuse," she pleaded. And then, as she saw his face still cold, "If you should refuse, then—then, Phil, I should say that—that you had changed somehow and were not the noble, high minded man to whom I gave my love."

Philip's lips tightened.

"Margaret," he said in a low tone, "we seem to have made something serious out of a little thing. But, since we have done it, let me say this: I love you with all my heart. I have asked you to be my wife. I will work for you gladly and do everything in my power to make you happy, but you may as well understand now, once for all, that as a man I claim the right of deciding what shall be done at important moments. I may make mistakes, although I shall try to decide wisely; but, whether I make mistakes or not, what I decide is the thing that shall be."

The Poor Bridegroom.

"Even the English language emphasizes the insignificance of a man at his own wedding," said the prospective bridegroom disconsolately. There isn't an independent word to designate him. He is merely called the groom of the bride, as if he were just about on a level with the bridesmaids and a little below the maid of honor. Best man, of course, means the bridegroom's best man, but the phrase itself tends to exalt this individual at the expense of his superior.

"Then there's no adjective to describe what pertains to the male half of the affair. You can't speak of the 'bridegroomal' trousers or necktie. On the other hand, 'bridal' applies not only to the possessions of the girl, but to what relates to both of them equally, like the trip and the bridal chamber. The very words 'matrimony' and 'matrimonial' are from the feminine side only. 'Patrimony' has nothing to do with the nuptials. It applies only to wealth and signifies that a man's part in the affair is to get out and hustle for the cash."—Philadelphia Ledger.

How Standing Armies Originated.

The earliest European standing army was that of Macedonia, established about 358 B. C. by Philip, father of Alexander the Great. It was the second in the world's history, having been preceded only by that of Sesotris Pharaoh of Egypt, who organized a military caste about 1600 B. C. Of modern standing armies, that formed by the Turkish janizaries was first, being fully organized in 1362. It was a century later that the standing army of France, the earliest in western Europe, was established by Charles VII. in the shape of "compagnies d'ordonnance," numbering 9,000 men. Rivalry thereupon compelled the nations to adopt similar means of defense. In England a standing army proper was first established by Cromwell, but was disbanded under Charles II., with the exception of a few regiments called the guards, or household brigade. This was the nucleus of England's present army.

A Girl's Preparedness.

There is something very pitiful about a girl. She wears calico, but talks knowingly about the latest styles in silks. Her home is furnished plainly, but she knows the latest styles in furniture; she knows how the silverware should be arranged at dinners, the latest stitch for the marking of monograms on the finest table damask, the etiquette to be observed at a dinner, a reception or a ball, although she never attended anything more than a neighborhood party in her life. Her father's monthly income is not as large as the pin money a rich girl would spend in a day, but she knows what the rich girl should wear and buy to be in touch with the times. She is, in short, prepared at any time to marry a rich man and become a society leader.—Atchison Globe.

The Tripping Tongue.

"Henry Peck, you're a fool!"

"You didn't seem to think so when I was single."

"No, you never showed what a big fool you were until you married me."—Exchange.

Not an Umpire.

A clergyman startled his drowsy congregation the other day as follows: "My dearly beloved friends, permit me to remind you that I come here to preach, not to act as umpire in a snoring match."

The Explanation.

Fred—There seems to be a lot more fuss made of Miss A.'s singing than Miss K.'s, and I am sure Miss K. has by far the richer voice. Jack—Ah, yes, but Miss A. has by far the richer father.

Made Sure of the Pie.

A young girl who carried her dinner was observed to eat her pie first. When asked why, she replied, "Well, if there's anything left it won't be the pie, will it, now?"

Good Reason.

"Well, Johnny, do you wish you were a grownup man?"

"You bet I do."

"But why?"

"So people wouldn't ask me such fool questions."—Exchange.

A BOSTON GIRL'S BUDGET.

Sedate Bostonians Still Linger at La Loie's Shrine—New Harvard Dental School Fills a Long Felt Want—A Third Discoverer of the North Pole is Discovered by Literary Lights of the American Athens—The Mystery of the Fleet Footed College Girls.

The interesting spectacle of a group of dignified college girls sprinting from Simmons college to Huntington avenue every day has caused some amusement and more curiosity as to their object. They claim they are running for a car, but the frequency of cars in this district hardly seems to warrant such haste. They give an excellent exhibition of fleet footedness, however, and if the object is the reduction of flesh they deserve every success.

Sedate Miss Boston has been quite a-flutter over the opportunity of seeing La Loie Fuller and her muses in the ballet of light at the Opera house. It is Miss Fuller's first appearance in the city for some time and her old friends besieged the box office in swarms. Her never failing grace and wonderful creations of fancy have won for her a perpetual place in the artistic hall of fame, while her ballet of young girls, all of whom are under her constant chaperonage, is unquestionably the most remarkable organization of its kind in the world.

Hard luck for lockjaw microbes. Next Fourth of July, barring accidents, will be safe and sane in at least one American city. Dr. David Scannell of the Boston school committee is working energetically to separate the small boy from fire crackers. Every district in the city is to be organized to help make the next Fourth less dangerous. Statistics place Boston as third among the cities of the United States in the number of cases of lockjaw, whereas New York which is seven times larger than Boston has but three times as many injuries resulting from patriotic celebrations. The "Boston-1915" organization has appointed a committee to make arrangements for addresses before every parents' association and school between now and June 17.

Still another great cavity has been filled out in the Fenway district. Appropriate exercises marked the opening of Harvard's new $500,000 dental school, which adds one more to the notable collection of institutions in the great white city of healing. President-Emeritus Eliot and President Lowell told of the growth and future prospects of the science of dentistry, in its relations to public health. Perhaps the most striking instance of cooperation ever witnessed between a medical and a dental institution is that of the loan of $80,000 made by the directors of the Harvard Medical School to assist their brother scientists to erect a suitable building for their purposes.

Chirk up, once more. Can you qualify for admission to the society of good cheer? The necessary qualifications for membership are smiles, unselfishness, benevolent hearts and good cheer—all these to be the real article, mind you. Boston, long the abode of sour visaged antis and other pessimists, at last has a branch of the society. Hither came Miss Theora Carter of Seattle, president of the new organization which is enveloping the entire country with a nondetachable smile. The cheerful head of the Boston branch is Miss Isabella Stone, who will promote the society's object of making life as pleasant as possible for convalescents, for relatives and friends, and of disseminating the spirit of good cheer 365 days in the year. The organization is composed of women with the single exception of Mark Twain, chosen an honorary member in virtue of his being the world's leading expert in cheerfulness. Send in your application for membership.

College professors are fabled to be dry-as-dusts, and of erudition and fearful of life and liveliness, but there are university savants who, public opinion to the contrary, must own up to a sense of humor. Across the literary squares and circles of the Hub just now ripples a little chuckle, caused by a contribution from the flowing stub pen of William Lyon Phelps, professor of English literature at Yale university, a work affectionately dedicated to the members of the New Haven Choral Union, who, if they did not believe my story, had the grace to conceal their emotions. The narrative is a follow-up of the recent North Pole controversy and is entitled a "Dash at the Pole." Professor Phelps, who is a Harvard man as well as a Yale man, cut quite loose a few weeks ago from his dignified duty of editing the works of Shakespeare, Thackeray, Jane Austen, et al., and of producing famous literary lights between football seasons, and suddenly gave to the world a work of art originally intended for the exclusive entertainment of the New Haven Choral union but immediately snapped up as a gem of humor by the Ball publishing people of this city, who inveigled John Goss into producing some drawings that add to the mirth-provoking Teuton scramble. The description of Professor Phelps' dash through the polar regions in company with his faithful Eskimos Wotsdematter and Cutitout, is punctuated with continuous laughs, in the midst of which it is difficult to picture the author as the traditional college professor in his dignity of cap and gown.

Ethel Angier.

Why He Was Deaf.

Scene—Stable of Scottish village inn. Landlord is busy repairing a piece of harness and is carrying on at the same time a conversation with the village blacksmith. Enter farmer.

Farmer—Look here, landlord! Can ye gie me a bottle o' yer best whisky?

Landlord—Weel, ye see, the horses are a' out, an' I dinna ken when ony o' them 'll be hame.

Farmer—It's no a horse I want; it's a bottle o' whisky.

Landlord—Aye; but, ye see, they're a guid bit awa', an' it'll be late before the first o' them's back.

Farmer (louder)—I tell ye, it's no' a horse, but a bottle o' whisky, I want.

Landlord—Weel, ye see, the beasts 'll be tired, an'—

Farmer—Gang awa' wi' ye an' yer beasts!

Exit.

Blacksmith—Man, John, ye're gettin' as deaf as a doorpost. It wasna' a horse, but a bottle o' whisky, the man was askin' for.

Landlord—Ou, aye, I heard him fine, but he didna' pay for the last bottle he got.—Pearson's Weekly.

The Order of the Bath.

The last Knights of the Bath made according to the ancient forms were at the coronation of Charles II., when various rites and ceremonies, one of which was bathing, were enforced.

According to Froissart, the court barber prepared a bath, and the candidate for membership in the order, having been undressed by his esquires, was thereupon placed in the bath, his clothes and collars being the perquisites of the barber. He was then removed from the water to the words "May this be an honorable bath to you" and was placed in a plain bed quite wet and naked to dry. As soon as he was quite dry he was removed from the bed, dressed in new and rich apparel and conducted by his sponsors to the chapel, where he offered a taper to the honor of God and a penny piece to the honor of the king. Then he went to the monarch and, kneeling before him, received from the royal sword a tap on the shoulder, the king exclaiming, "Arise, Sir ——," and then embraced him, saying, "Be thou a good knight, and true."—London Strand Magazine.

What a Dollar Dog Can Do.

A man in a nearby city bought for his wife and child a year ago a dog, for which he paid a dollar. It was obviously nothing wonderful in the canine way—merely a mongrel, with the bulldog strain predominant. The owner was a man in humble circumstances, and the dog in his modest dwelling was the principal asset aside from a few sticks of furniture. The other night Tom was tied to a leg of the kitchen sink, as usual, and the family went to bed. They were awakened by the dog at midnight scratching at his master's door. When his master came out to see what was the matter the dog, with a remnant of chewed rope hanging from his collar, whined and ran to the head of the stairway. The house was on fire, and shortly after woman and child and man and dog made their escape their poor dwelling was a mass of glowing embers. The owner of the dog has been urged to part with him for a large cash consideration; but, though he is penniless, he will not part with the four footed savior of his family. Neither has the dog at any time had thoughts of leaving them for luxurious kennels.—New York Times.

Slaves to the Servants.

"I am very tired," said the fashionably dressed woman. "I have been working dreadfully hard all day. Doing what? Why, seeing to my servants—working for them. Didn't you know that the more servants you have the harder you must work? Certainly I have to do all the shopping for my servants. I have to buy their uniforms, the caps and aprons of the maids, the clothing of the housekeeper, and have to see to the marketing, too—yes, and very often, in spite of the fact that I have a housekeeper. I must, or they will form a combine to rob me of everything I have. The housekeeper will get a rakeoff that will enable her to retire in a few years. Then perhaps it is I who must hunt a place as housekeeper for some one else. Oh, yes, if you want to keep your position as mistress of a household of servants you must keep hustling! You can't afford to let the grass grow under your feet to any great extent."—New York Press.

He Got a Hundred.

Sammy's mother talked to him long and earnestly about the poor marks he had been getting in his work at school. She painted in alluring colors the career of the little boy who studies his lessons and gains the love and respect of his teachers. She went even farther. She promised him that if he got good marks she would give him a whole dime all for his own. Sammy seemed impressed.

That afternoon he returned from school fairly dancing with joy.

"Oh, mother," he shouted, "I got a hundred!"

"Sammy!" cried his delighted mother. She hugged him and kissed him and petted him and—gave him the dime.

"And what did you get a hundred in?" she finally asked.

"In two things," replied Sammy without hesitation. "I got forty in readin' and sixty in spellin'."—Everybody's Magazine.

BUTT AND CLARK WIN

Former Takes Individual Honors In Six-Day Bicycle Race

New York, Dec. 13.—The lap-stealing by Walter Rutt and Jackie Clarke settled the question of first prize in the six-day race at Madison Square Garden, for they kept their advantage to the finish. In the final exhibition mile between the two winners, Rutt won in 3 minutes, 16 seconds, by only six inches.

The score at the finish of the big race was:

| | Miles | Laps |
|---|---|---|
| Clarke-Rutt | 2660 | 1 |
| Root-Fogler | 2660 | 0 |
| Walthour-Collins | 2660 | 0 |
| Hill-Stein | 2660 | 0 |
| Halstead-Hehir | 2659 | 9 |
| Mitten-West | 2659 | 9 |
| Lawson-de Mara | 2659 | 8 |
| Georget-Georget | 2659 | 6 |
| Anderson-Vanoni | 2631 | 5 |

The previous record of 2737 miles 1 lap was made by McFarland and Moran in 1908.

The Makaria Bowling League will open their season Friday evening on the Y. M. C. A. alleys, when the South Quincy team, captained by Mattie Nicoll, will bowl the Upland road team, captained by G. H. Eggleton. This league at present is made up of four teams of five men each the two teams mentioned above, a married men's team, captained by Theophilus King, and a Wollaston team, captained by Theo Penly. Games are to be bowled the Friday evening of each week.

BRYANTS ORGANIZE.

Frank Cronin was elected manager and captain of the Bryants basket ball five for the coming season and held a meeting Saturday evening and has picked out the following players: Joseph O'Rourke L. F.; William Belanger, R. F.; Laurence Donovan, center; B. Flaherty, L. B.; and Joseph Ford, R. B. The Bryants would like to play first the Houghs Neck Independents and wish to state that all five are members of the A. A. U.

YANKEE JOCKEYS' SUCCESS ABROAD

Shaw, Miles, McDermott and Spencer Rode Many Winners.

DANNY MAHER HEADS LIST.

Clever Horse Pilot Made Remarkable Record on British Turf by Capturing a Hundred Races—Nearly All Boys Will Return Next Spring.

With the horse racing season abroad now over many American jockeys who have been riding on foreign tracks have arrived home for a winter visit, and each one will return in the spring to fulfill riding contracts for the season of 1910. Among those who have returned are Willie Shaw, Walter Miller, Harry Spencer, Mickey Miles and L. McDermott.

Outside of Danny Maher, Mickey Miles was the most successful during the season that recently closed, and his most notable performance was when he rode Sixtenstine to victory in the Austrian Derby. He finished third on the list of winning jockeys, piloting fifty winners during the season Jockey Janak, a native, was first, with ninety-nine winning mounts to his credit, and second place was taken by an Australian boy.

Miles is under contract to Edgerton brothers, who race a big stable at Vienna and Budapest, and he will return to them next March. He can ride at 108 pounds, and that is considered a lightweight in Germany.

Jockey McDermott is another graduate from the Pop Daly school, and he has been riding abroad for the past six years, this being his first visit to his home in Brooklyn since he made his first trip to the other side. For the coming season he is under contract to Baron von Obrekot, who occupies a prominent place on the German turf.

McDermott is able to do 100 pounds easily and has met with such success since going abroad that he has been engaged at a salary of $5,000 for the coming season.

Henry Spencer is still under contract to Herr Gau of Berlin and will go back to him in the spring, though he is becoming so heavy that he will probably confine his efforts to training before long.

Joe Notter, who went abroad to accept an engagement with Mr. Weinberg, will probably remain abroad for the winter. He has gone to France where he has attached himself to the establishment presided over by Fred Burlew and Frank O'Neill and will confine his riding to the French course for the next season.

Willie Shaw rode many winners for Baron Oppenheim, whose horses were trained by James H. McCormick, the well known American turfman. The king of Wurttemberg had second call on Shaw's services. Walter Miller, who went abroad a free lance under no engagement, tried his skill on the English turf for a short time, but, failing to receive recognition, went to Belgium.

It was while he was in the latter country that Herr von Weinberg, who had Joe Notter under contract, became dissatisfied with his riding, and William Walker, the trainer of Weinberg's horses, on the advice of McCormick, sent for Miller. In a few days Miller proved that the change in riders was beneficial, for he won several races for his new employer.

Herman Radtke, once Miller's greatest rival for the saddle honors here, won also a number of races in Germany. He recently met with an accident. But the injury is not a serious one, and he will be able to ride next season.

Despite the fact of his long service in the saddle and his increased weight, which would have made a campaign in America almost impossible, Danny Maher has ridden over a hundred winners on English courses this season. The one hundredth win was scored in the Manton welter at Newbury and brought the American jockey's total of winning mounts up to 995 in his nine years of service on the English turf. Since 1900 Maher has had 3,800 mounts, and his average winnings works out a trifle better than 25 per cent, a wonderful quota of victories.

An Ancient Sky Pilot.

From Garnett's "Anthology," volume 7, page 48, I copy the following, taken from the "Writings of Lucian," a Greek born about 100 A. D.:

"We were suddenly caught by a whirlwind, which turned our vessel several times around in a circle with tremendous velocity and lifted it above 3,000 stadia in the air, not settling it down again on the sea, but kept it suspended above the water at that height and carried us on, with swelled sails, above the clouds."

In these days of air conquest this quotation might be of utmost interest to aeronauts and also literary men. This ancient Gulliver long preceded Swift, and as for outdistancing Jules Verne another quotation is added:

"Having thus continued our course through the sky for a space of seven days and as many nights, on the eighth day we described a sort of earth in the air," etc. (which proved to be the moon).

The thoroughly familiar vernacular expression "going some" applies with original vigor to this early and perhaps first sky pilot.—New York Times.

An Obliging President.

During a short lived revolution, says Harper's Weekly, there came to be the head of the government in a little Central American republic a man who was above all things courteous and who was, moreover, very anxious to gain the good will of the foreign consuls. One of the latter, having heard that a certain countryman of his had died, addressed a note to the head of the new government, in which he stated that his own government would be grateful for a certificate of death of the individual in question. A few days later the consul received this communication:

Esteemed Senor—I blush to say that I cannot at present comply with your excellency's request for a death certificate of the man named. I sent my soldiers but he got away, to my shame. I shall use every effort to catch him, however, and hope to send your excellency the desired certificate at an early date.

Needless to say, the consul lost no time in communicating to the obliging president the information that the certificate was undesired, in view of the fact that the individual was able to "get away."

A West Indian Wife Catcher.

As is customary with Indians the world over, the Caribs are expert basket weavers, and many strong and handsome baskets are to be bought in Roseau at reasonable prices if one finds the right shops, writes Harriet Quimby in Leslie's Weekly. A peculiar instrument, made of basket straw and woven closely together so as to form a hollow tube ending in a thong of twisted ends and commonly dubbed a wife catcher, is also made and sold by the Caribs. By slipping the hollow end over a man's finger above the joint and pulling on the twisted end the catcher will tighten around the finger and the captive will be unable to release his hand. It is claimed that the Indians formerly employed this device as a handcuff for prisoners, using several for each hand and leading the captives by the fingers. Few tourists are permitted to leave Roseau without a wife catcher, for which six pence is willingly exchanged.

Babies' Bank Accounts.

In Schoenberg, a suburb of Berlin every baby is born with a banking account. No Schoenberg baby can help this even if it wants to. The municipal regulations provide that whenever the birth of a child is recorded the officials of the municipal savings bank shall issue a bank book in the said baby's name. The city itself then deposits 1 mark (about 25 cents) and immediately allows interest. With this nest egg the authorities believe that the parents of the child will be encouraged in thrift and that the baby itself will have a fair start on the road to wealth. No withdrawals are allowed in less than two years, and the ordinance applies to all children whether they are members of poor families or descended from million aires.

Babies are popular in Schoenberg.

The Lost Donkey.

In Turkey they tell stories about Nasr-ed-Din and his donkey. Once upon a time when the donkey was lost Nasr ed-Din went about seeking it, at the same time giving thanks as he went.

"Why do you give thanks?" asked his friend. "I see no cause for thankfulness."

"Cause enough!" was the prompt reply. "Why, man alive, if I had been along with that donkey I'd have been lost too!"—New York Tribune.

Use For the Anchor.

"Captain," remarked the nuisance on shipboard who always asks foolish questions, "what is the object in throwing the anchor overboard?"

"Young man," replied the old salt "do you understand the theory o seismic disturbances? Well, we throw the anchor overboard to keep the ocean from slipping away in the fog."

Oh!

"How did you act when he proposed?"

"I sank gracefully on one knee."

"How ridiculous! What in the world did you sink on your knee for?"

"On his knee, not mine."—Houston Post.

Quite a Difference.

Customer—Can't you give anything off to a clergyman? Tradesman—Not in this instance, sir. You see, these goods is different from yours. These is guaranteed goods.—Life.

Love, like fortune, turns upon a wheel and is very much given to rising and falling.—Vaubrugh.

Choosing a Builder.

The selection of a builder is quite as important a matter in putting up a house as the choice of an architect. Don't choose the cheapest builder merely because he is cheapest. If you accept his bid, find out the reason of the cheapness. Frequently the builder is a man of little means, and often he operates on borrowed capital. Should the builder become bankrupt or fail to pay for his labor or materials the owner, under the mechanics' laws of most states, becomes liable for the builder's debts. This is true even though the owner has paid the builder for his work. In order to obtain his house free and clear in such a case the owner must meet the builder's obligations. The prudent owner will, of course, pay for his house only as it is constructed. Even then it would be a useful caution to make sure that the builder has paid his indebtedness on the house. Payments are usually made the builder when the foundations are done, when the frame is up, when the house is closed, when the plastering is finished and when the completed house is turned over to the owner.—Circle Magazine.

Ancient Castle, Curious Clock.

Rushen castle, Castledown, Isle of Man, is the ancient seat of the kings and lords of Man. The castle is a veritable curiosity both historically and otherwise. The first mention of it dates to the year 1257. It was taken after six months' siege in the year 1315 by Robert the Bruce. The castle is built of limestone and is not a ruin. Until a few years ago it was used as a prison. The town clock seen in the castle wall was presented by Queen Elizabeth in the year 1597. It has only one hand on the dial. This is the hour hand. The minutes are judged by the position of the hand between the hours. The works of this clock are also a curiosity. The weight at the end of the pendulum is a large stone, and it is driven by a rope coiled around a cylinder of wood, with another stone at the end of the rope. The clock is still going after its centuries of service and is still the town clock.—Newcastle (England) Chronicle.

Where She Got the Money.

They were at the circus. The conversation ran to the subject of how they had financed their admission ticket projects. One said she had gathered rags and sold them. Another had helped her brother spade a garden. The third member of the party presented a sickly grin and seemed reluctant about explaining where her half dollar came from. An explanation seemed absolutely necessary.

"Lizzie, whah yo' git dat half dollah yo' flipped up to de ticket man?"

"Nevah yo' mind. Yo' all saw me pay de man, didn't yo'?"

"Sho 'nuf we did, but dat ain' no exp'anation."

"Well, I got de money all right."

"Sho' nuf yo' did. Sho' nuf yo' did."

"Yes, an' ef I doan' git a half dollah somewhah an' git my ole man's Sabbath shoes from dat pawnshop befo' Satahday evenin' I'm a deevo'ced woman, dat's all."—Indianapolis News.

East Indian Muslin Test.

A Madras physician was buying muslin for a turban in a department store.

"None of this is fine enough," he said. "In the turban I have on there are forty yards. But forty yards of this would give me a head like a saratoga trunk.

"Indian muslin is very, very fine. It must be fine enough to disappear if it is to pass our A1 test. The test is this: The muslin is spread on grass overnight. In the morning, when everything is dew drenched, if the muslin isn't practically identical with the dewy gossamer covering the lawns—in other words, if it isn't invisible—it is discarded and must be sold as 'seconds.'"—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Good Time to Go.

General Joseph E. Johnston, the Confederate commander, used to relate that in the hottest part of one of the early battles of the civil war he felt his coattails pulled. Turning about, he recognized a young man who had been employed in his tobacco factory previous to enlistment.

"Why are you not in your place fighting?" the general demanded angrily.

"Why, I just wanted to tell you that if you don't mind I will take my day off today!"

To Sleep Like a Top.

To "sleep like a top" has probably a very different origin from that which appears. "Top" is thought to be a corruption of the French taupe, or mole. This interpretation is far more in accordance with the idea usually conveyed—that of a prolonged, undisturbed sleep like that of a mole in winter rather than the short, enduring so called "sleep" of a top when it revolves on its axis with a gentle, humming sound.

Both Willing.

"He said he'd rather go to jail than pay his divorced wife alimony."

"Did she let him go?"

"Yes; she said she'd rather see him save his money behind the bars than spend it over them."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Precocity.

"Every time the baby looks into my face he smiles," said Mr. Meekton.

"Well," answered his wife, "it may not be exactly polite, but it shows he has a sense of humor."—Exchange.

Hunger or Fame.

"It is a good thing to hunger for fame," remarked the struggling author.

"Yes," assented his friend the artist, "if you don't get the fame you are sure to get the hunger."—Chicago News.

England's Patron Saint.

The story of England's patron saint is surrounded by a mixture of truth and fable which defies definite sifting. He is generally believed to have been born at Lydia, but brought up in Cappadocia, and suffered martyrdom in the reign of Diocletian, A. D. 303. The legend of his conflict with the dragon may have arisen from a symbolical or allegorical representation of his contest with the pagan persecutors. When our crusaders went to the east in 1096 they found St. George elevated to the rank of warrior saint, with the title of the "victorious," and as they believed that they were indebted to him for aid in the siege of Antioch they adopted him as the patron of soldiers. Edward III. was thus led to make him patron of the Order of the Garter, and so gradually St. George became the tutelary saint of England.—London Mail.

Eve and the Apple.

Princess Duleep Singh at a dinner in New York said that she found the American woman a marvel of beauty and the American man a model of good looks and kindness.

"The American man," said the charming princess, "is rightly held up to the world as the pattern husband. In Europe they have a saying about Eve and the apple which shows how wretched a failure the European husband is. This saying is unknown in America, I am sure. It would have no point, no application, here in the land of pattern husbands. The saying is this: "'The evil one didn't give the apple to the man, but to the woman, because the evil one knew well that the man would eat it all himself, but the woman would go halves.'"

Trapping the Parson.

William Morris did not always get his jokes right end first. In a biography of her husband, Mrs. Edward Burne-Jones tells of the ease with which he reversed them.

A dinner gathering had all been asking conundrums.

"Who killed his brother Cain?" asked Burne-Jones.

Morris fell into the trap at once. "Abel!" he shouted.

Later in the day he came in laughing.

"I trapped the parson, by Jove!" he exclaimed. "I asked him, 'Who killed his brother Abel?'

"'Cain,' he said at once.

"'Ha!' I said. 'I knew you'd say that. Every one does.' I came away and left him puzzled enough, and I doubt if he's found out yet what the joke was."

Not Qualified.

Two men were getting warm over a simple difference of opinion.

They turned to the third man.

"Isn't a homemade strawberry shortcake better than a cherry pie?" demanded one of them.

"Isn't a homemade cherry pie better than any shortcake?" inquired the other.

The third man shook his head.

"I don't know," he said. "I board."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A Famous Poem.

J. C. Francis, the publisher of London Notes and Queries, has brought out a volume of reminiscences. One of his quotations records the editorial rejection of Campbell's "Hohenlinden" by the Greenock Advertiser. It runs thus:

T. C.—The lines commencing "On Linden when the sun was low" are not up to our standard. Poetry is evidently not T. C.'s forte.

A Home Body.

"So your husband always stays in the house nights?" said one woman.

"Yes," answered the other. "Once Hiram gets settled down in front of his fireside you can't get him out of doors even to bring in an armful of wood."

SPECIAL ELECTION IN WARD TWO

Tie on Recount for Councilmen Makes This Expense Necessary.

Harry G. Studley Made a Net Gain of Seven Votes on Edward P. Histen----Other Changes in Vote.

As a result of the recount, Monday night, of the votes cast at the municipal election in Ward Two for Councilmen from the ward, there is a tie between Edward P. Histen and Harry G. Studley for the third councilman. The election officers gave Histen the election, his vote being 267 and Studley 260. Mr. Studley asked for a recount, the claim being made among other things that some of the ballots in precinct one were mutilated.

The recount was held in compliance with this petition by the Registrars of Votes. Messrs Carey, Flynn, Histen, McCurdy and Studley were present. Albert T. Whitman was also present as a representative of Mr. Studley, and Thomas Griffin as a representative of Mr. McCurdy.

The recount showed something like 25 votes that are known as bullets. That is, where the voter marked but one name for ward councilman where he could vote for three. No one of the candidates, however, had a monopoly of these for each had some.

As for combinations however, every possible combination was disclosed. Some voted for three Republicans; or three Democrats; while others voted for two Democrats and a Republican; one Republican and two Democrats; a Socialist, Democrat and Republican; and so on. In other cases some voters put a mark against four or five names, so that it had to be counted as three blanks. In other cases, no word councilman was voted for.

There was no ballot, however, over which there was the least question as to the intention of the voter, other than where four or five names were marked. There was but one mutilated ballot. This was in the first precinct. On this ballot a corner had been torn off by the machine, and it so happened that the piece torn was that part which contained the marks for Ward councilman. The piece was with the ballot, however, and it was readily counted. This ballot was marked for Holman, McCurdy and Studley, and was so counted by the election officers and by the Registrars.

After the recount, and while the Registrars were figuring up the tally sheets, Mr. Studley who had been keeping tally said that he had made substantial gains, and that it would either be a tie or he would win by one vote.

The Registrars found a number of changes and to verify their count, several blocks were counted over again. They then announced the result which is given below in comparison with the returns of the election officers.

By this table it will be seen that Carey lost two votes; Corliss gained one; Histen lost one; Holman lost one; McCurdy lost 16, and Studley gained 6. There was no change in the vote of Flynn or Stoddard.

Just when the gains and losses were made are not known as the Registrars did not give out the result of the recount by precincts. Mr. Studley, however, claimed that he gained his six votes in precinct one, and that Histen lost one in this precinct. His tally also showed that he had made some gains in precinct two; but the result shows that he must have made his gain in precinct one.

The greatest surprise was in the vote for Mr. McCurdy, who lost 16 votes by the recount. By consulting the table given below it will be readily seen that the gains amounted to 7 votes and the losses to 20 votes, a difference of 13. These were probably the ballots where more than the required number of names were marked and which the Registrars counted as blanks:

| | Election | Recount |
|---|---|---|
| William A. Carey, D. | 385 | 383 |
| George H. Corliss, R | 192 | 193 |
| William H. Flynn, D. | 405 | 405 |
| Edward P. Histen, D. | 267 | 266 |
| Percy H. Holman, R. | 207 | 206 |
| D. J. S. McCurdy, D. I. | 218 | 202 |
| Willey E. Stoddard, S. | 21 | 21 |
| Harry G. Studley, R | 260 | 266 |

The tie for the third member of the City Council from Ward Two means that all the preliminaries for an election must be gone through with to fill the vacancy.

The special election will however have to be ordered by the new City Council, and if the machinery moves as fast as possible it will be late in February before the result is determined and the new member takes his seat.

Nomination papers will have to be filed in the regular way. Then comes the caucus and lastly the election.

MILLION IN NEW BUILDING

Great Record for Quincy in Year 1909

Some idea of how rapidly Quincy is growing is obtained from the records of Warren S. Parker, the inspector of buildings. His records for 1909 show that up to date 600 permits have been issued for new buildings, alteration, etc. Of this number 438 were for new houses or cottages.

Allowing 4,000 feet of land for each dwelling or cottage which is a fair average, it will be seen that about 40 acres of land has been used this year for dwellings alone. These do not include land or buildings used for school houses or manufacturing buildings.

As there are less than 6,700 acres of taxable building land in Quincy, it can readily be seen that it will not be many years before building land will be at a premium.

The Assessors' report for 1908 showed 5,615 houses and 6,687 assessed acres of land. Counting in stores and manufactories there is now about one building to an acre of land in Quincy.

The value of the houses and cottages erected this year or now building, according to Inspector Parker's report, is $750,000. Add to this school buildings and manufacturing buildings and the grand total will be about a million.

HOW TO READ NEWSPAPERS

Good Points in Talk of Editor Ayers

Melvin C. Ayers of Newton, for 13 years editor of the Boston Advertiser, was the speaker on Monday evening at the monthly banquet of the Men's Club of Bethany church, and thereafter when his hearers read any newspaper they will probably recall his talk, which was instructive as well as interesting.

Mr. Ayers was formerly a clergyman, and during the absence of Rev. Edward Norton in the Holy Land he supplied for several months the pulpit of Bethany church, and during his address recalled several Quincy reminiscences.

He took a text from St. Luke 25 and 26—"And behold a certain lawyer stood up and tempted him, saying, Master, what shall I do to inherit eternal life? And he said unto him, "What is written in the law? How readest thou?"

Mr. Ayers said there was a great deal of discussion on the comparative value of newspapers, but one can get a great deal of good even from bad papers. How to read? Or, how not to read? Not is a great word, either for good or evil. We should not read indiscriminately, that is everything from beginning to end. One who reads everything is not well posted on anything.

The question resolves itself in what to skip. Skip by far the greater part. Skip that which you do not need most. As with books, some are to be tasted, some swallowed, and others chewed and digested.

A newspaper is made up much as a menu at a first class hotel, a great variety of choice food, from which to select according to intellectual appetite.

Read the daily newspaper in such a way that it will be a continuation of your studies in school; to enlarge your education. The development at Nicaragua will refresh geography. The conflict in England will recall English history.

Read newspapers so as to make it a means of renewing youth. Read to get the good out of that which is bad. Read to cultivate humor. Mr. Ayers enlarging on each of these divisions.

At the close he invited questions, and many good points were brought out by Theophilus King, Rev. Dr. Hardy, John F. Wentworth, R. D. Chase, John Evans, George Forsythe, President Southworth and others.

A hot roast beef dinner preceded the meeting, including beef, mashed potato, squash, pickles, mince pie, apple pie, squash pie, apples biscuits, coffee and cocoa. Aside from the talk of Mr. Ayers there were some very clever monologues by Mr. Chevers, who also gave some marvelous whistling solos accompanied by Mr. Herfan, including the Holy City, the Mocking Bird and Annie Laurie. The committee on banquet included V. E. Miller, E. D. Gourd, Charles Gragg, G. M. Miller and others.

GOT THEIR MAN.

Chief Burrell and Inspector Goodhue returned from Brooklyn, N. Y., Monday night having in custody Philip Pitts, who is wanted for assault on George Germaine at Quincy last August. He was arraigned in court and the case continued until Saturday for a hearing.

CHRISTENING PARTY.

Charles Phillips, son of John and Margaret Phillips, was baptized Sunday at their home, 119 Arnold street, by Rev. A. R. Atwood, assisted by Deacon Bonney. Charles Phillips, the uncle, and the sister of Mrs. Phillips, were the appointed godparents. There were several relatives and friends present. Jennie Gibb, Effie Wardell, Salma Thayer and Eva Forrest sang "Jesus loves me," and "When He Cometh."

KIND ACT BY BRAVE BOY

Liberates a Pigeon Caught on Roof of Church

There is one boy in City Square who is eligible for a medal from the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. Who the boy is no one seems to know, for he refused to give his name. The act which he performed was the liberating of a pigeon from the roof of the chapel of the First church. Someone had evidently tried to trap the pigeon for on one leg was a long string. As the pigeon flew about the string became entangled in the limb of a tree that hung over the roof of the chapel, and there the pigeon was suspended unable to free itself. It struggled hard and becoming exhausted hung helpless over the roof. Then it was that the boy, seeing the condition of the pigeon, sought to liberate it. He climbed up the tree and with difficulty crawled along the limb which bent beneath his weight threatening every minute to break and throw him to the ground.

Cautiously the boy crawled along the limb until at last he was able to free the pigeon, which flew off. The act was witnessed by quite a crowd who freely applauded. The boy was asked his name, but modestly refused to make it known.

TROLLEY FREIGHT

Railroad Commissioners Give a Hearing

A hearing was held before the Railroad Commissioners in Boston this morning on the approval by the board of the order passed by the Quincy City Council granting permission to the Old Colony Street Railway to operate a trolley freight in Quincy.

The order passed by the City Council under the law is subject to the approval of Railroad Commissioners, and it was in relation to this approval that the hearing was held.

Bentley W. Warren represented the street railway at the hearing, but no representative of the city was present.

After hearing the statement of facts the board continued the question for further conference until Dec. 21.

—Miss H. Grace Parsons of Mt. Pleasant, Mich., will succeed Miss Harriet S. Hayward Jan. 1 as assistant superintendent of the schools of Brockton. She is a gifted public speaker and her work is being highly commended.

Alaska Gold Frauds Involved Men High In Washington

A NEW ALASKAN CONSPIRACY?

Question Is Asked by Collier's Weekly, Which Connects Secretary Ballinger and Senator Heyburn With Alleged Deal In Which Financial, Mining and Railroad Forces Are Interested—President Was Misled

New York, Dec. 14.—"Can This Be Whitewashed Also?" is the title of an article in the Dec. 18, 1909, issue of Collier's Weekly, from which the following paragraphs are extracts:

The Alaska Gold Mining company, organized by Washington politicians, exploited Alaska with so high a hand that even Washington gasped at the brazenness. Then the spoil was gold—now it is copper and coal. Rex Beach told the story. Later he made its facts the foundation for his novel, "The Spoilers." Speaking of the policy of suppression which then controlled in Washington, he said:

"When the scandal came out, it was When the scandal came out, it was smothered, and the public kept in ignorance. Criminals were pardoned, records expunged, thieves exalted to new honors." The wheels of justice at Washington were mysteriously clogged. The scheme, as originally planned and for a long time successfully carried out, was to seize and operate, in the interest of the Alaska Gold Mining company, the rich Nome placer mines owned by the unlettered but lawrespecting prospectors.

Subsequently, in certain legal proceedings growing out of these outrages, Noyes, McKenzie, and others were found guilty by the San Francisco court of appeals, and sentenced to imprisonment. McKenzie served only part of his sentence. While in jail he was, and for a long time after remained, a member of the Republican national committee, and a powerful politician whose influence in Washington did not abate because of the little contretemps in his political affairs.

When Senator Stewart of Nevada afterward exposed the whole crooked plot, tracing its trail from Washington to Nome and back, involving United States senators and government officials, entire sections of his speech, exposing these same officials, were expunged by "senatorial courtesy" from the Congressional Record.

Is there another Alaskan conspiracy, this time to control the copper and coal? Will the public, remembering the past, be satisfied with star-chamber answers to this question?

It is common knowledge throughout Alaska and the west generally that the Morgan interests are allied with the Guggenheim mining interests, and that the same financial forces are allied with the Hill railroad interests. When Richard A. Ballinger was nominated and elected mayor of Seattle, he was put forward by the Hill political managers, ostensibly to put down certain local evils, but really to put the Hill forces in control of local politics. Ballinger supported Levi Ankeny, the railroad candidate who notoriously bought his seat in the United States senate. An important detail of Balinger's record to remember is his grant, as secretary of the interior, of the railroad right of way along the Des Chutes river in Oregon. Ballinger himself was an incorporator of the original Des Chutes railroad and was its vice president and counsel.

In October, 1908, in Portland, Ore.—after Ballinger had ceased all connection with the land office, and while the presidential campaign was on—Ballinger spoke to Glavis of the difficulty of raising campaign funds. He told Glavis that some of the Cunningham claimants had contributed freely in previous campaigns, but were unwilling to do so at that time on account of the investigation of their claims, and urged Glavis not to prosecute his investigations further until after election.

In his written report to President Taft, Glavis stated that a number of the Alaska coal claimants "are men prominent in the state of Washington, and many of them are personal friends of Mr. Ballinger." This may serve as a prophecy of the recent rhetoric of the Seattle chamber of commerce.

Clarence Cunningham lived at Wallace, Ida., at the time he first became interested in the Cunningham claims. Wallace is the chief town of the Coeur d'Alene mining region. By a sort of financial manipulation the Guggenheims control the lead output of the Coeur d'Alenes. Wallace is the residence of Senator Heyburn of Idaho. Cunningham and Heyburn are, and have been for years, friends.

Senator Heyburn was, at the time of his election to the United States senate, the leading attorney at Wallace for some of the large Coeur d'Alene mine interests. After the hearing on the Cale bill Heyburn, on April 23, 1908, introduced in the senate another bill which would have legalized the Cunningham claims, and which would have passed but for the intervention of Secretary Garfield. In Washington Heyburn and Ballinger appear to have acted in concert. It is unlawful for a United States senator to act as attorney for persons interested in urging claims before the departments at Washington. It was for this offense that Senator Burton of Kansas and Senator Mitchell of Oregon were tried and convicted. Heyburn was elected senator from Idaho Jan. 13, 1903.

In Cunningham's books, under date of September, 1903, nine months after Heyburn's election as senator, there is an entry which reads as follows: "Have agreed with W. B. Heyburn, in consideration for his services as attorney, to carry him for one claim of 160 acres in the coal, free of cost to him, and he agrees to do all our legal work in procuring titles, etc., free of expense to us."

When Cunningham, on Sept. 4, 1908, made his affidavit, he knew these records were in possession of the department officials. Glavis had forwarded them with a letter calling attention to the Heyburn entry. Naturally Cunningham, Ballinger and Heyburn, with Burton and Mitchell in mind, had a terrific scare. In his affidavit, prepared by Ballinger, Cunningham attempted to explain away many things.

When Ballinger represented Cunningham, he represented all the Cunningham claims. Not only this, but the record is quick with the evidence of his employment by other Alaska coal claimants at different times.

This disposes of the question of Ballinger's single employment by one claimant, so innocently stated by President Taft. Out of over a possible thousand lawyers in Seattle, Ballinger seems to have had a monopoly of syndicated Alaska coal clients.

The president also refers to the fact that Glavis was allowed to remain in charge of the claims, notwithstanding Ballinger was aware of his attitude as to their fraudulent character. As a matter of fact, the claims were not taken from Glavis, simply because it was feared he would do just what finally he did—go elsewhere for justice.

On June 26, 1909, Donald R. McKenzie, Ballinger's intimate associate and client, told Special Agents Jones and Glavis in Seattle that Secretary Garfield's attitude toward the Alaska coal claims, in which he and his friends were interested, was such "that they brought pressure to bear on senators and representatives to prevent his remaining in the cabinet under President Taft." Are the same influences that kept Garfield out keeping Ballinger in? Will the president consider these facts in weighing the him by members of his cabinet?

Or are the above circumstantially narrated events also nothing but "shreds of suspicion"?

PASTOR'S DIVORCE PLEA DISMISSED

Thurston Claimed That Wife Drove Him From Ministry

Boston, Dec. 14.—The petition for divorce of William A. Thurston, well known in the suburbs of Boston as a Methodist minister, but who is now a stock broker and promoter, from his wife, Stella M. Thurston, was dismissed by Judge Fessenden.

Thurston claimed that his wife had treated him cruelly and had so "nagged" him that he had been forced to retire from the ministry. He also named his foster brother as a co-respondent.

Mrs. Thurston testified that instead of having had anything to do with her husband's retirement she had wept heartily when it occurred. During the course of the trial she amended her libel so that it named her husband's stenographer as co-respondent.

BATTLE OVER LICENSE

Principal Issue In Many Bay State Cities Which Are Voting Today

Boston, Dec. 14.—License and no license forces are battling at the polls today and both feel that they have done all that they could under the circumstances for their respective causes.

The liquor men have put out far more than the usual amount of campaign money in several of the larger no-license cities and towns, and as a result they hope to reduce the great "No" vote of last year.

Elections are being held in Malden, Somerville, Everett, Woburn, Worcester, Newton, Newburyport, Beverly, Chicopee, Lowell, Melrose and Holyoke.

Y. M. C. A. as a Reformer

Washington, Dec. 14.—Because it is believed that total abstinence in the army may be best promoted through the Y. M. C. A., a deputation was named by the reformers' conclave, now in session in this city, to urge the army and navy departments of the association to inaugurate such a campaign at once.

Clerk Mason Prostrated

Boston, Dec. 14.—Following his indictment on charges of embezzlement and perjury, Frank H. Mason, clerk of the United States district court, has been given leave of absence and is now confined to his home in Brookline, where he is reported to be prostrated by the proceedings instituted against him.

"INSURGENTS" LOSE GARDNER

Bay State Man Quits Fighting Rules For This Session

ADMITS HAVING "SORE PAWS"

Rules and Speakership May Be Changed After a Fight to the Finish In Sixty-Second Congress—Uncle Joe Cannon Expected to Then Relieve Tension by Declining to Run For Speakership

Washington, Dec. 14.—Representative Gardner of Massachusetts dealt the insurgent cause in the house a blow by flatly announcing that he would have nothing more to do with the house rebellion against Speaker Cannon and the rules for the present. He would not lick his paws in public merely because they are sore, he said, but he made it clear that in the sixty-second congress the contest over the rules should be renewed and waged to a finish.

AUGUSTUS P. GARDNER.

Mr. Gardner was chairman of the committee on industrial arts and expositions, with a very cosy office in the Capitol, but as an insurgent he declined reappointment as chairman, if it implied any cessation in his activity in behalf of a change in the rules. Cannon apparently thought it should, for he did not reappoint Gardner, a fact which illuminates Gardner's reference to "sore paws."

A secret meeting of the house insurgents was held, attended by nineteen men, all from the middle west. It debated for four hours but came into the open with no definite program. The slim attendance of the meeting is taken as evidence that the remaining thirty-one insurgents agree with Gardner that the jig is up for the sessions of the sixty-first congress.

"I can't speak for the insurgent program, for I was not at the meeting," said Gardner. "I am perfectly clear as to my own program, however, whether it fits in with that of the insurgents or so-called regulars. I believe that in the next congress there should be a change in the rules or the speakership, perhaps both. In my opinion it is unwise to fritter away our strength in a premature skirmish which might look to the public as a sign of resentment. When congress assembled last March we were outvoted—that is all there is to it. The fact that my paws are sore is not sufficient reason for licking them in public."

Mr. Gardner has been regarded as among the most dangerous of the insurgents, because of his coolness, fairness and moderation. He will "Stand with the crowd" when the "crowd" is united on a proposition, but he never has been an extremist.

The story is current in Washington that if the insurgents will possess their souls in patience for two years Cannon will relieve the tension by declining to run for speakership again. He is said to be tired of criticism and abuse and thinks seventy-five years a dignified age for retirement.

The candidacy of Representative Walter I. Smith of Iowa already is being discussed in connection with the vacancy. This rumor probably will be repeated and denied until a formal statement is made by Cannon. He certainly would not countenance such a story at present, his friends say.

QUICKLY WEDS AGAIN

Mrs. Thomas Secures Divorce From Man Who Sues Her Father

Atlanta, Dec. 14.—Two minutes after Mrs. Silvey S. Thomas, daughter of W. A. Speer, well known in financial circles, was granted a total divorce from her father's chauffeur, Russell J. Thomas, in the superior court, a marriage license was issued to Marshall C. McKenzie and Miss Silvey Speer.

Miss Speer's divorce was secured on allegations that she was forced to marry the chauffeur because the man had made threats of violence against her father unless the daughter consented to elope with him.

Immediately after the parties involved left the courthouse they were driven to the Speer residence, where the wedding ceremony was performed in the presence of a large party of friends.

Another chapter in the Speer case also was concluded when a verdict was rendered in the superior court in favor of W. A. Speer, who was sued by Thomas for $100,000 for alienation of his wife's affections.

TAFT VISITS THE BOWERY

Gives an Earnest Talk to Men Assembled In Noted Mission

New York, Dec. 14.—After speaking last night at the diamond jubilee of the Methodist missions in Africa, President Taft motored to the Bowery Mission, where he made an address to a typical Bowery audience. He afterward inspected the "bread line" room, where each night hundreds of the unemployed are given food.

The president in immaculate evening clothes, presented a strong contrast to the men of the mission, who rose to their feet and cheered him as he entered the long room from the rear.

In his talk to the men, delivered in an earnest, conversational tone, the president urged his hearers not to be down on their luck, but to struggle on in the belief that the future would be brighter for them.

LURTON GOES TO SUPREME COURT

Nomination of Tennesseean Is Sent to the Senate

Washington, Dec. 14.—The president nominated Horace H. Lurton of Tennessee to be an associate justice of the supreme court of the United States.

Judge Lurton was born in Campbell county, Ky., Feb. 26, 1844. His father years ago was a practising physician, but in 1870 he left medicine and was ordained a minister in the Protestant Episcopal church.

The Civil war brought a halt to the completion of Lurton's collegiate training, for, at the first call, he enlisted in the Thirty-fifth Tennessee and was made sergeant major.

In February, 1862, Lurton was discharged on account of ill health, but he returned in time to take part in the battle of Fort Donelson, where he was taken prisoner and confined in Camp Chase. He managed to effect his escape and promptly enlisted in the Third Kentucky cavalry, with which he served until July, 1863, when he was again captured.

At the end of the war he entered the law department of Cumberland university, Lebanon, Tenn., and was graduated in February, 1867.

ZELAYA A MURDERER

He Is Thus Denounced In a Speech by Senator Raynor

Washington, Dec. 14.—Vigorously denouncing President Zelaya for having "murdered" Cannon and Groce, officers of the revolutionary army, Senator Raynor advocated the passage of his resolution authorizing the United States to apprehend and try the president of Nicaragua for his crime against these two American citizens.

The private life of Zelaya, almost unspeakable in its enormity, said Raynor, should be made public by the state department in order that the people of the United States might know the kind of man Zelaya was. Raynor insisted that there was ample authority in international law for the course he advocated to bring Zelaya to the bar of justice.

FOR $500,000 FRAUD

Former Banker Gets Four Years and Three Months In Prison

Chicago, Dec. 14.—Wallace H. Hopkins, former banker, convicted of using the mails to defraud, was sentenced here in the federal district court to serve four years and three months in the federal prison at Leavenworth, Kas.

As president of the Wallace H. Hopkins company, Hopkins was charged with defrauding customers out of $500,000.

$100,000 Worth of Grain Burned

East St. Louis, Ills., Dec. 14.—Fire destroyed the warehouse of the Corno Mills on the levee. About 100 carloads of grain were burned, the loss being $100,000.

VISIT TO SHIPYARD.

About fifteen boys of the North Abington Y. M. C. A., visited Quincy on Saturday and inspected the plant of the Fore River Shipbilding Co., by invitation of Treasurer Sedgwick. They also witnessed the launching of the Herman Frasch. The educational committee of the boys' department of the association had charge of the affair. Two prizes have been offered for the best essay which is written about the trip and three of the High school teachers will act as judges.

PILES CURED IN 6 TO 14 DAYS
PAZO OINTMENT is guaranteed to cure any case of Itching, Blind Bleeding or Protruding Piles in 6 to 14 days or money refunded. 50c.

Salary paid once a year instead of weekly or monthly—would that be practical in your case? Isn't life insurance money left to the woman in the form of a montly income a great benefit to her? This is what the New Monthly Income Policy of the Prudential Insurance Company, Newark, N. J., does—gives the wife a monthly income of just the amount you decide upon, guaranteed by The Prudential. The cost is low. Investigate it.

PORTRAYS LIFE IN STEERAGE

Woman Agent of Immigration Commission Exposes Horrors

WOMEN ARE BADLY TREATED

Men Invade Women's Quarters, Using Vile Language and Otherwise Insulting Passengers—Revolting Conduct of Sailors, Stewards and Firemen—Highly Unsanitary Conditions Where Passengers Cross Ocean

Washington, Dec. 14.—A report on steerage conditions based on information obtained by special agents of the immigration commission traveling as steerage passengers on different transatlantic steamers was made public through presentation to the senate with recommendations for legislation to better conditions.

Conditions found on many of these vessels are described as appalling, notwithstanding in some instances the letter of the law was obeyed implicitly. This regard for the law, however, failed to bring about the desired reforms.

The general report of the commission contains reports of individual agents giving their experiences on board steamships, where they posed as steerage passengers. Summing up one such trip, a woman agent of the immigration commission, who was herself miserably insulted and compelled to withstand privations which were repulsive to her nature, said:

"During those twelve days in the steerage I lived in a disorder and in surroundings that offended every sense. Only the fresh breeze from the sea overcame the sickening odors. The vile language of the men, the screams of the women defending themselves, the crying of children, wretched because of their surroundings, and practically every sound that reached the ears irritated beyond endurance. There was no sight before which the eye did not prefer to close.

"Everything was dirty, sticky and disagreeable to the touch. Every impression was offensive. Worse than this was the general condition everywhere. For fifteen hours each day I witnessed all around me this improper, indecent and forced mingling of men and women who were total strangers and often did not understand one word of the same language. People cannot live in such surroundings and not be influenced."

The woman agent has described the mingling of the crew with the women of the steerage, and said that the same conditions were true of the association of the men steerage passengers with the women.

The women agents of the commission say that the women's compartments in which they were quartered had but one entrance and exit, so that there could be no good excuse for the constant appearance of the men. It is said that during the hour preceding the breakfast bell, while the women were rising and dressing, several men usually passed through and returned for no ostensible reasons.

"One night when I was retiring very early with a severe cold, the chief steerage steward entered our compartment," says one woman agent, "but not noticing me, approached a Polish girl, who was apparently the only occupant.

"She spoke in Polish, saying: 'My head aches—please go on and let me alone.' But he continued and soon was insulting her. The girl, weakened by seasickness, defended herself as best she could. Just then other passengers entered and he released her. Such was the man who was our highest protector and court of appeal."

Describing further how women steerage passengers were compelled to submit to insults the report says of the passage just referred to that not one young woman in the steerage escaped attack. The writer herself was no exception, and tells of repelling advances on the part of the crew and stewards with a hard, unexpected blow in the offender's face. She says:

"The manner in which the sailors, stewards, firemen and others mingled with the women passengers was thoroughly revolting. Their language and the topics of their conversation were vile. Their comments about the women, and made in their presence, were coarse. What was far worse and of continual occurrence was their handling of the women and girls. Some of the crew took all manner of liberties."

This woman reports that on many steamers so inadequate are toilet arrangements that women are obliged to use their soup plates for wash basins.

Conecrning other conditions in the old type steerage, which still exists on many of the steamships, the agents of the commission are just as severe.

Laborers Hurt by Dynamite

Stoneham, Mass., Dec. 14.—Two laborers were probably fatally injured and two others seriously so when one of the quartet struck the end of a pick against a dynamite cap while digging in a ledge in Middlesex Fells, causing an explosion.

TRIBUTE TO EVANGELISTS

Great Crowd Greets Chapman and Alexander on Return to Hub

Boston, Dec. 14.—Rev. J. W. Chapman and Charles M. Alexander, the leaders of the gigantic evangelist campaign which Boston experienced nine months ago, arrived here yesterday after a trip of over 36,000 miles, in which they have practically encircled the globe.

Boston's welcome to the returning evangelists was one of the largest and most enthusiastic greetings ever tendered to ministers and laymen of the Protestant church.

Tremont temple was filled to overflowing at the noon service, and at Mechanics' Building last night 2000 people sat at a banquet tendered in their honor, and 8000 listened to the service of song and sermon which the evangelist held.

Despite the bad weather 2000 people waited in the slush for the doors to open for the service held after the dinner.

DEATH OF MRS. HUNTER

Third Victim to Succumb to Mysterious Assaults In Savannah

Savannah, Ga., Dec. 14.—Mrs. Maggie Hunter, who was beaten and left for dead at the same time Mrs. Elisa Gribble and her daughter, Mrs. Carrie Ohlander, were murdered at their home here Friday afternoon, died of her injuries Monday.

J. C. Hunter, the husband of the dead woman, whom she accused in an incoherent statement of having assaulted her, is being held by the police.

Despite the woman's statement that Hunter committed the attack, the police are continuing the search for the negro who was seen entering the Gribble home shortly before the murders were discovered. Several suspected negroes are being held by the police pending an investigation of the killing.

MORTALITY ALMOST LIKE SLAUGHTER

But There Is No Proof of Crime In Baby Home

Providence, Dec. 14.—Coroner Babcock, in his report to the superior court on the cause of the death of twenty-four children at the Myrtle baby home in East Providence from June 19 to Nov. 16, 1909, says:

"At the beginning of the inquest but one bottle baby remained alive at the home, the mortality being almost as complete as the slaughter of innocents ordered by Herod. There is no clear proof of gross negligence or crime on the part of those intrusted with the care of the unfortunate children. The cause of the exceedingly high death rate is not satisfactorily explained. It may have been no more than what might have happened at any other institution similarly situated.

"To those whose attention is especially directed towards the guilty parents, such institutions are regarded as clearing houses for social sin and a direct incentive to vice, while to those who look primarily upon the children, they are regarded as benificent charities to preserve the lives of the little ones. It is not possible or advisable to prohibit them, but they should be supervised. Under the present law there does not appear to be any provision for the proper supervision of these institutions."

ENGAGED IN STREET FIGHT

Heir to Fortune Is Held as Result of Boston Man's Death

Boston, Dec. 14.—Harry G. Holland, aged 26, residing in Winthrop, and about to share in a fortune of $200,000, was placed under arrest last night to await the outcome of an autopsy on the body of John J. Quann, who died yesterday under circumstances that led to a police investigation.

The police allege and Holland admits that Quann and himself engaged in a fight on Broad street Sunday afternoon after both had been put out of a hotel. In this encounter it is asserted Quann was knocked down, and received injuries which caused his death.

CAMPAIGN EXPENSES

Foss' Pocketbook Holds $23,500 Less Than Before He Ran For Office

Boston, Dec. 14.—The financial report of the Democratic state committee, filed with the secretary of state, shows that the committee received $32,559.60 and expended $32,536.66 in connection with the recent state election, leaving a cash balance on hand of $22.94.

Eugene N. Foss, candidate for lieutenant governor on the Democratic ticket, was the largest single contributor with $23,500; James H. Vahey, candidate for governor, paid $4342.60.

Young Knowlton Is Freed

South Framingham, Mass., Dec. 14.—Hinman Knowlton, 17 years old, charged with shooting his father and mother while walking in his sleep, was discharged in the district court. It is believed that the father himself may have accidentally fired the shots while asleep, as he also is a somnambulist.

Hezekiah's Mistake

A Scholar Who Didn't Like School Discipline.

By GWENDOLIN ADAMS

Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.

A big awkward boy was Hezekiah Griggs, a pupil in the school of Eben Watson. The history class was up for recitation, but Hezekiah, though he had plenty of brains, had not applied them to studying the lesson.

He was growing decidedly uncomfortable. He knew well what an unprepared lesson meant, for in those days no weak leniency was shown to delinquents. To be sure, this was the first recitation Hezekiah had missed during the term, but was not that an aggravation of the offense? Since he had managed so long without failing, why fail at all?

Hezekiah was aware that as soon as the class was dismissed he would receive a not altogether unmerited flogging. He was perspiring at every pore. The icicles with which he had meant to refresh the thirsty occupants of the back seats melted in the intense heat, and a tiny stream of ice water trickled slowly from the extremity of either pocket and formed a miniature pool in the bottom of each cowhide boot.

The young offender was growing desperate, and when the master, having dismissed the other members of the history class, turned to him with the command, "Take off your coat, sir!" the boy stepped forward and obeyed with a feeling of actual relief.

"Your conduct has been most reprehensible, sir!" said the master, pushing up his coat sleeve and testing the strength of his ruler, while thirty pairs of eyes gazed spellbound and awful silence reigned.

"Most reprehensible, sir!" he repeated, and the ruler fell with a thwack which sent the blood tingling through every vein in the culprit's body.

Hezekiah never knew exactly what happened after that. He remembered that an insane desire for vengeance overcame him. He wanted to thrash the master, to thrash the whole school. Before the weapon could descend a second time he sprang at his assailant with clinched fists and blazing eyes.

There was a moment of breathless silence while the angry master collared his refractory pupil and shook him as a terrier shakes a rat. Then the flat sided ruler was once more brought into active play upon the back of Hezekiah Griggs.

"Now, sir," said the master when at length, becoming weary of such severe exertion, he released his hold on Hezekiah's coal collar, "take your seat and learn your history!"

Heedless of the command, the boy seized his jacket and, snatching his cap from its peg on the wall, made a rush for the door. He gained it without opposition, and before the astonished master had time to recover from his surprise he was racing along the highway toward home.

Into the big, roomy kitchen, where Grandfather Griggs himself sat in a great armchair conning the Weekly News, with Grandmother Griggs close by paring apples, he dashed like a runaway engine.

"Why, Hezekiah," exclaimed the good old woman, looking somewhat startled, "a body 'd think you'd been fired from a cannon by the way you come flying in! What's happened?"

Hezekiah sat down and began to explain.

"You don't mean to say you've run away from school!" said the old man when the boy had reached the most interesting part of his narrative. "Oh, Hezekiah!"

The exclamation was full of sorrowful surprise, and Hezekiah's eyes fell.

"I'm not going back to school any more," he said doggedly.

He did not dare look up, for he knew the old man had set his heart on his becoming an educated man, and he expected him to be very angry. But grandfather took off his glasses, wiped them and said:

"Well, Hezekiah, we won't talk about it tonight. You'd best go to the barn and thrash peas till supper time, and we'll settle this matter about school tomorrow."

Hezekiah obeyed. He went about till dark looking triumphant.

Staying away from school was next thing to beating the master. He slept well and arose firm in his determination not to return to school. When his grandfather called him aside after breakfast and tried to convince him that he was wrong Hezekiah was still resolute.

"Well, Hezekiah," the old man said at last, "since your mind's made up there's no use of urging you further. I'd have been glad enough if you had gone, and if you'd have stuck to it I wouldn't have minded a year or two at college to finish off with. As it is, you'll have to earn your living some other way, and I supose the sooner you set about it the better."

"I'm willing to work, grandfather," Hezekiah said, in some surprise.

"Yes, I know, and I shouldn't wonder if Silas Jones would give you a job for a month or two. He was saying he'd like to get a boy to do chores, and, although you ain't much used to work, if you get round spry you might suit him."

"Grandfather"—

"Or," continued the old man, "if you'd just as soon thrash peas I'll hire you myself. I'll give you every tenth bushel, and you can pay me $1.50 a week for board. What do you say to that?"

"Just as you like, grandfather."

"Very well. Then we'll call it a bargain, and when you're through with that maybe something else will turn up, and if you should be out of a job, why, your little room will be ready for you, and I won't charge a cent more than $1.50 a week, seeing it's you, Hezekiah."

Hezekiah was disagreeably surprised at the turn affairs had taken. It had never occurred to him that his grandfather, who had cared for him ever since he was left a helpless little orphan ten years before, would cast him off simply because he had tried to thrash the master and wouldn't go to school.

But he started for the barn, trying very hard to look as if things were turning out exactly as he had expected they would. He even managed to whistle faintly as he passed the window, through which he felt his grandfather was regarding him, but the last melancholy note died away long before he reached the barn.

Hezekiah never knew before that his grandfather had harvested so many peas. There they were, brown and crisp and inviting, piled in rough, uneven masses to the top of either mow and stowed away on the beams above him.

The boy tossed down a great heap into the middle of the thrashing floor, picked up his flail and began operations. But it was of no use to try to make himself believe that he liked to thrash peas.

He tried to buoy himself up with the thought that he was earning money, but long before night even this thought failed him as he began to realize that unless he got along considerably faster than he was then doing he would barely earn his board.

He kept steadily at his task for a week and then cleaned up and measured what he had thrashed—exactly forty bushels, of which his share, of course, was four bushels. Peas were worth 60 cents a bushel; accordingly he earned $2.40. After paying his board he would have 90 cents left—an average of 15 cents a day.

It was discouraging. Grandfather Griggs said not a word, but the boy knew well that if he would only acknowledge himself in the wrong and promise to go back to school and obey the master the old place in his grandfather's heart and home was ready for him.

But pride would not permit him to yield, and all through the short December days and the first month of the new year the regular clip-clap of the flail was heard without intermission and the heap of peas in the granary grew and grew till it amounted to 250 bushels.

Hezekiah had almost completed his task and was rejoicing to think that he and the flail, which, in spite of their long standing fellowship, he cordially hated, were about to part company.

A boy is like a colt. Nothing is so well calculated to drive the nonsense out of his head and make him trustworthy as a little regular work. Hezekiah did not know this, but he was quite conscious that he did not feel as he had felt six weeks before.

He had been doing some hard thinking while swinging the flail and had begun to see that he was not altogether the fine fellow he had always imagined himself to be.

He had worked harder at this job of thrashing peas than he had ever done at anything before, and yet his earnings were barely sufficient to board and clothe him while thus engaged. He thought the matter over and came to the conclusion that he owed his grandfather something for all those years of helpless childhood, wherein the old man's love and care had been watchful and unremitting.

Hezekiah had a conscience. It was very like other boy's consciences, full of contradictions and absurdities; but, for all that, it pointed out that the least he could render to his grandfather for all his kindness was a willing obedience.

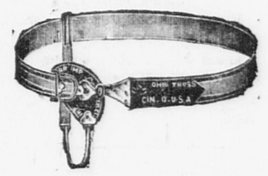
He made up his mind he would do it, and as he wielded the flail above the last "flooring" he was bravely resolving to tell his grandfather all that was in his heart. So deeply engrossed was he in pondering over this good resolution that he did not observe a dark shadow which fell between him and the sunlight that streamed through the open door till a voice said:

"Well, Hezekiah, you're just about done, I see."

The boy looked up and saw the benevolent face of his good grandfather smiling down upon him.

"You've done very well—very well," continued the old man approvingly. "I'd no idea that you would keep at it till they were finished. I believe there's the making of a man in you after all, Hezekiah. What were you thinking of going at next?"

The blood rushed to the boy's forehead, and his heart beat wildly, but he managed to say, "I'm a mean sneak, grandfather, but if you'd just as soon I believe I'll go back to school."



"All right," returned the old man calmly, "I'd just as lief."

And so, after all, things turned out very much as Grandfather Griggs had intended they should. Hezekiah went back to school, took his whipping for running away, finished his course in the history class and in due time went to college.

He became a prosperous city physician and still lives to tell his grandchildren of the fun they used to have in the little log schoolhouse years ago, and they often laugh over the mistake he made the time he undertook to thrash the master.

AN EASY AND HARMLESS WAY TO DARKEN THE HAIR.

Who does not know of the value of sage and sulphur for keeping the hair dark, soft, glossy and in good condition? As a matter of fact, sulphur is a natural element of hair, and a deficiency of it in the hair is held by many scalp specialists to be connected with loss of color and vitality of the hair. Unquestionably, there is no better remedy for hair and scalp troubles, especially premature grayness, than sage and sulphur, if properly prepared. The Wyeth Chemical Company, 74 Cortlandt St., New York City, put up an ideal preparation of this kind, called Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur. It is sold by all leading druggists for 50c. and $1.00 a bottle, or is sent direct by the manufacturers upon receipt of price.

Certainly that was a formidable list of still vessels launched by the Fore River Shipbuilding Co., which the Daily Ledger published on Monday. Much longer than Quincy people realized. Yet it was less than ten years ago that the business was established.

The report that the late Joseph Burrell, the father of Mrs. George L. Gill of Maple street, purchased for $1,000 the lot at the corner of Hancock and Granite streets, seems almost incredible, as it then contained over an acre of land. That was in 1828, about 80 years ago, and there has been a great change in Quincy in that period. This lot in question, which then sold for two cents a foot, is now worth about $2 per foot.

DRIFT OF OPINION.

The Malden News is bragging that its city has had mayors who ate their bean with a knife and made a noise when they drank their coffee out of the saucer, but they made pretty good chief executive, and wants to know "what of it?" Nothing of it, of course, if they possessed the requisite qualities that are looked for in mayors. The Marlboro man who yoked up his oxen to a hayrack and rode up and down the streets of his city asking for votes for mayor, might have made a good one if he had had votes enough. While personal eccentricities may make or break a man's chances with the electorate, it is possible for him to be a good public official in spite of them, but he would be a better one without them.—Lynn Item.

As for the city itself, the aim should not be so much to make it the largest and handsomest as the cleanest and healthiest. Instead of appropriating funds for beautifying the beautiful parks and avenues that already exist, that money should be spent in establishing new parks and new avenues in the congested districts of the city where they do not exist. A public bathhouse erected in a district in which the tenements are equipped with baths is only half as valuable as one erected in a locality where the tenements are not so equipped. Then, too, the school, the playgrounds, the ball field, the gymnasium should be established first where they are most necessary. The success of the great city of tomorrow will be due to its democracy, to its general health, and to its physical and intellectual development. The mayor who at the end of his administration will be able to show such improvements is certain to be regarded as a public benefactor. —Sumner S. Shore in Sunday Globe.

A New City a Thousand Years Old.

Budapest, whose front is circled with lights like a crown, whose hills rise dark and feathery above the river, whose parliament buildings run along the bank and are second to none but Westminster—Budapest, bright, flashing, gay, beautiful, modern and rich, ardent and executive, close built and amalgamative, blender of peoples—is the product of only a few decades, and yet at its last exposition it celebrated its thousandth birthday. Pest, to the right of the river—for the cities are twin and divided by the Danube—Pest dates back to 1200, and Buda was the Ofen of the Romans. Buda climbs up the opposite hill, today magnificently new, but sown round with green crumbling walls that mark the passing of the original founders whose painted galleys came up the Danube from the Black sea. The twentieth century civilization, sharply new and powerful, must for a moment be brushed aside and the Buda of mediaeval times put in its stead.—Marie Van Vorst in Harper's Magazine.

Gathering Cloves.

Cloves are now cultivated in many of the tropical regions of the earth. A clove tree begins to bear at the age of ten years and continues until it reaches the age of seventy-five years. There are two crops a year, one in June and one in December. The tree is an evergreen and grows from forty to fifty feet high, with large oblong leaves and crimson flowers at the end of small branches in clusters of from ten to twenty. The tree belongs to the same botanical order as the guava. The cloves, which are the undeveloped buds, are at first white, then light green and at the time of gathering bright red. Pieces of white cloth are spread under the trees at harvesting time, and the branches are beaten gently with bamboo sticks until the cloves drop. They are dried in the sun, being tossed about daily until they attain the rich dark color which proclaims them ready for shipment.

Cards and Their History.

Cards are square shaped pieces of pasteboard printed with various devices and employed as a business medium by money changers. They are usually made up in packs of fifty-two, one for each week of the year. A good many people play cards for pleasure, in which case their opponents are said to be buying experience. In most card games the rule is that the cards may be cut, but not otherwise marked. This rule is not strictly observed in games in which only three cards are used. Indeed, the marking of cards has attained a high degree of perfection since the introduction of numerous card index systems. Fashions change in card games as in everything else. Old maid, for instance, is nowadays seldom played in the best clubs. Playing cards should not be confused with score cards, which are rather larger, or with visiting cards, which are smaller.—Fry's Magazine.

Salt Codfish Omelet.

Soak a piece of salt codfish about six inches square overnight. Split six crackers and lay them in cold water, just enough to cover them. In the morning pick the fish fine and mix well with the soaked crackers, three well beaten eggs and a piece of butter the size of an egg, also salt and pepper. Take one quart of milk and add to it one dessertspoonful of flour. Boil five minutes and pour over in the dish in which it is to be baked. Bake twenty minutes.—Boston Post.
